Wife Preservers

Most persons think that indelible ink stain cannot be removed, says a housewife. Many of them can by soaking the material in strong salt water and then washing with ammonia.

Just Between Us Women

A daily chat with Examiner neighbors conducted by Anne Wilcox

Ordinary wooden toothpicks are a necessity in modern kitchen accessories. Their uses are many without once being for that suggested by the name. They are being employed as food prongs more generally than ever. Once they were thrust into stuffed olives served at teas so that the fingers could be kept immaculate. This still remains one of their uses, but the toothpicks no longer are confined to the handling of this one delicacy.

* * * * * * *

Whenever a hostess wishes to serve guests small pieces or portions of a delicacy which would be liable to moisten, stain, or make the fingers sticky, she thrusts a toothpick into each portion as a prong or handle to lift it, first to the individual's plate and then to convey it to her mouth. Toothpicks simplify small portions which are difficult to manage with silver serving utensils.

* * * * * * *

Toothpick prongs are used nowadays to thrust into certain kinds of hors d'oeuvres when served at functions at which guests may eat while standing as well as when seated. They are excellent to thrust into certain confections such as preserved ginger, cut into small one-bite pieces. Tiny one-bit sandwiches may require two picks in each. Place picks rather close together and slanted towards each other, so that the two can be grasped as one when sandwiches are lifted to one's plate.

* * * * * * *

Filled celery cut into one-inch pieces can be served to go with sandwiches, and be eaten without getting fingers sticky, when a toothpick is stuck through the centre of the filling, and down into the celery stalk for firmness. Luscious hothouse grapes each with a toothpick prong in it makes a delicacy that may not be outside the purse of a hostess of moderate means. The grapes will go far when separated thus for each guest will take but one at a time even when the opportunity to have two or three servings is hers. The wise hostess will follow this fashion of using wooden toothpicks since they simplify serving, are a convenience for guests and can be made to reduce quantities, and cost of refreshments.

Your Health

By DR LOGAN CLENDENING

Who has not envied at some time or other the fellow who could eat a horse?

I have just come from taking a young friend of mine to lunch. He is aged fifteen. I paid for the lunch, so he was under no economic restraint. Also, he allowed to begin with that he was hungry.

What he did to the Hay Diet theory would have made its inventor try to get back in the American Medical Association. He mixed more proteins and starches than Doc Hay ever heard of before he left East Aurora. He downed a little ice cream on top of some shrimp salad, and ended up with a chocolate bar.

Far from appearing to bring on the melancholy, uncomfortable sense of fullness, or desire to eructate gas, which is so graphically described by the preachers of special diets, he announced his intention of going for a dip in the ocean as I left him. I made no attempt to dissuade him because he did not appear to me to be one who was destined to endure any early acquaintance with clinicians.

But we can't all do it. More of us can do it than think we can. But for a few of us, there are certain articles of food that are "pizen". I am, I flatter myself, as free from fancies of this kind as most people, but I admit that tomato skins do something to my digestive balance which is unpleasant.

"There are a host of people in this world," writes my friend Walter Alvarez, of the Mayo Clinic, "who would be much happier if only someone would tell them what they must not eat."

And he proceeds to list the foods which are public enemies as his experience has taught him.

Public Enemy No. 1 is cabbage. When patients who are subject to digestive or intestinal upsets write down for a period of several weeks everything they have eaten at every meal, and this list is compared to the time of the upsets, cabbage is found to be present on the menu just before the upset oftener than any other food.

Public Enemy No. 2 is the apple, which is supposed to keep the doctor away, but also has another reputation —the green apple reputation.

My friend, the tomato, comes third, and then milk, chocolate, onions, lettuce, coffee and strawberries.

Frequently the association is merely accidental, and when a gallbladder full of stones or an ulcer of the stomach is fixed up, the food which was once an offender can be taken with impunity.

As hints towards the diagnosis that a person really is sensitive to a food there are two things—one is a history of allergic troubles (hives, skin eruption, hay fever, or asthma) and the other is an irritable colon (soreness, burning and distention of the abdomen coming on in spells.

ALLEGING WIFE YOKED TO PLOW

THANA, India, Aug. 28.—(C.P.)—Allegations that they yoked a girl wife to a plow and made her drag it across a field were made against two villagers of Kalyan Taluks before the Kalyan sub-divisional magistrate.

Mukti Hendrya Patil, the mother of the girl, alleged that her daughter, Lakshmi, was being constantly ill-treated by her husband, Bhau Krishna Gore, and his brother. Bhau Krishna threatened her with a penknife and so she left her husband's home to seek protection with her parents.

On the way, however, Bhau Krishna and his brother caught hold of Lakshmi and brought her back. They then, it is stated, beat her mercilessly. It was further alleged that they yoked her to a plow and forced her to drag it across a field. Whenever she stopped or slowed down she was prodded with the sharp point of a parani.

The case was postponed for further hearing.

FRIEND OF JESSE JAMES GEORGE KYDD PASSES

PORT ARTHUR, Ont., Aug. 29.—(CP)—George Kydd, 92, resident of this city for many years and well known as a blacksmith and farmer throughout Ontario and midwestern states, is dead here today. He is generally credited with being the blacksmith who put shoes backwards on Jesse James' horse in order to confuse a posse trailing the bandit.

He was born in Jalalabad, India, in 1842, the son of Sgt.-Major John Kydd, of Cawnpore, and served for a time with his father's regiment, the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers. He was discharged from the army in 1863, came to the United States and lived in Pennsylvania before moving to Ontario.

High Crowns, Large Berets Smart For Fall

High crowns are new, and brims vary in width. That is the word that comes out of Paris concerning autumn hats. Also that the beret remains but has grown larger.

A striking example of the hat with the higher crown is the Patou model of toupe felt at the top left of the illustration. The brim curves, and a pheasant feather is curled around itself and held by a cord.

Even the Suzy hat, inset next, has a small crown, and Suzy made the flattest hats of all this season. It is smooth brown felt, the brim turned up in the back and tied with felt ribbon.

The Bourbon hat, center, has a crown that is much more important than the brim. It is in black antelope felt, trimmed with a blue grosgrain ribbon and a quill.

Top right is another Patou model, the felt with crown and slouch brim —an important line for fall. It is trimmed with a band of ribbed velvet run through a metal buckle in front.

The beret continues in all its glory—even more glory, in fact, as it is much larger. One of the most interesting is the one below at right, from Agnes. It is inspired by the 18th century, and is made of faille and velvet. It is large and round and flat. You put it on your head from back to front, pull it over the eyes and flatten it with the hands so that it makes a jutting brim. Some women prefer to wear it pushed to one side, giving a profile.

U. S. TO CUT LIQUOR TAX AS BLOW AT BOOTLEGGER

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press).

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29.—Slashes in Federal liquor taxes and import duties to eliminate the bootlegger will be proposed in the next United States Congress by a group of representatives who led the repeal fight.

The fact that the treasury has not repeated the harvest of revenue expected from liquor sales and the continuance of large-scale bootlegging prompted the move.

Proposals to restore the old domestic rate of $1.10 a gallon on 100 proof liquor, and to slice the $5 a gallon tariff by 50 per cent. are being considered by experts attached to the House Ways and Means Committee.

MARRIED MAN ARRESTED AFTER FIRE IN HIS HOME

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Aug. 29. Rag rugs that had been saturated with gasoline were found in the house after the blaze was extinguished and it is alleged they were fired by a candle. The contents were insured for $1,000.

Be Beautiful

It is said that when the talented Karen Morley first came to Hollywood, she had very little success in securing a foothold on the screen ladder. Karen's figure was unimpressive, and her features plain. And so casting directors seldom gave her more than a glance. One day, however, a voice was needed to read dialogue lines to a studio player. Karen did it. And when the play back was heard, the film impresarios were so impressed by her lovely voice that they immediately gave her a contract.

The voice is one aspect of beauty that usually isn't stressed very often. Yet it is deserving of far more attention than it receives. For a harsh, unpleasant voice can break down a woman's whole structure of charm and loveliness. Voices that sound shrill, harsh, monotonous or cold are anything but pleasing to the ear.

Many women make the mistake of thinking that it's necessary to speak loudly to gain attention. I've found, however, that the woman who speaks the loudest usually have the least to say. A soft, well-modulated voice will catch and hold the ear far more effectively than any amount of bellowing. If you haven't a pleasant voice, of course, the best thing to do is to take instructions from a good voice culturist. But if you can't do that, you can improve your voice somewhat yourself by being watchful of it.

Study your voice and find out for yourself just what its defects are. If it is shrill and scratchy, practice speaking in a lower tone and don't constrict your throat. A good exercise for you to practice, too, is to yawn, open your throat, and then, in a low tone, pronounce the vowels slowly, drawing them out at length.

If your voice is harsh and loud, practice using less volume. Speak more softly. If you continually do this, a softer voice will, in time, become natural to you. Humming is an excellent exercise for improving such a voice. Close your mouth, open your throat and hum. The emotional quality of your voice, however, is what gives it most of its charm. Don't let your voice be cold, or monotonously dull. Put warmth and feeling into the things you say. For these qualities give charming overtones to the voice, and make it a delight for any one to listen to.

Japan To Cast Off Naval Ties After '36

TOKYO, Aug. 29. (AP).—Japan is determined that neither the Washington nor the London naval treaties, including their fundamental principles, shall bind her beyond December 31, 1936, the date of their expiration, a foreign office spokesman made clear to-day.

She is prepared to join other powers in a scheme of naval limitation on a drastically changed basis which she intends to propose at preliminary conversations this Autumn in London.

But if the powers show a determination to extend essentials of present compacts, including Japan's position of inferiority to Great Britain and the United States, Tokyo is ready to withdraw the entire naval limitations scheme, just as she withdrew from the League of Nations 18 months ago.

Details of the plan for limitation were not disclosed.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

WRITTEN FOR CENTRAL PRESS

By E. V. SHEPARD

CAN 7-NO TRUMPS BE DEFEATED?

An inquirer of the University of Arizona wants to know if East can fulfill a grand slam contract at no trumps against the best defence. "The contract was fulfilled on South's singleton club lead. Would not some other defence have defeated the contract?"

Bidding went: East, 1-heart; West, 3-diamonds; North, 4-clubs; East 4-no trumps; West, 5-diamonds; East, 5-no trumps; West, 6-diamonds; East, 6-no trumps; West, 7-diamonds; East, 7-no trumps. North doubled, ending the auction.

Try an opening lead of a spade. Win with declarer's K. Take 3 rounds of winning diamonds. Let North discard a heart. Take 2 more rounds of diamonds. Let North discard 2 clubs. Have declarer discard a heart and a club. One more diamond and the hands of the three players which count will be as follows, all ready to apply the deadly squeeze.

North—♠Q J ♥K Q ♣K Q
Dummy—♠5 ♥J 7 ♦7 5 ♣7
Declarer—♠A 9 ♥A 6 ♣A 9

Lead another diamond. North must discard. Dummy still holds a good diamond and 4 other cards. If North lets go a spade, declarer will hold his 2 spades, thus winning 2 tricks in spades and 2 tricks with his side aces. If North lets go a heart, declarer's ace and dumy's J of hearts must win 2 tricks, while declarer's side aces will win 2 added tricks. If North discards a club, declarer's clubs will win 2 tricks and his side aces will win 2 added tricks. Declarer's losing club and losing heart will be discarded upon dummy's two good diamonds.

As a spade opening will yield the grand slam, as certainly as the opening lead of South's singleton club, suppose you try an opening lead of a heart, then try the diamond opening lead.

The effect of the opening heart lead will alter the 5 cards held by each player at the end of the seventh trick, so that North will have his original 3 spades, as will the declarer. North will hold the loneK of hearts, while dummy will hold the lone J. The club will be as given in the above diagram. When North has to discard at the eighth trick he will be squeezed, as he was with the club or spade opening lead. The opening diamond lead will also squeeze him. No opening lead can defeat the grand slam contract.

Bud Parmelee Checks Cubs in Mound Duel

INSIDE THE PADDOCK

BY ART MURRAY

DURING THIS off week in Canadian racing circles when everything was supposed to be very quiet, there was quite a bomb shell explosion when it was announced after Monday's meeting of the Canadian Racing Association that three well known trainers as well as three horses had been suspended as a result of the recent saliva tests taken by the Mounted Police. Arthur Hullcoat is probably the best known of the trio as he is the leading trainer on our tracks this season. Each trainer got suspended for thirty days to date from early in August and of course this will let them in again by September the 8th next when racing resumes at Thorncliffe.

× × ×

But in the meantime Hullcoat has another large string quartered at Saratoga and as they are affiliated with the C.R.A. it means none of those horses will be allowed to start in a race until his suspension expires. McIver and Smith the other two involved while perhaps not as prominent as Hullcoat are both highly successful conditioners. The three horses, Sir Byran, Irish Vote and Sam Worthy have been ruled off until October when the Canadian season will be over. This practically means they will not be seen in action again until next spring as it is not likely any of them will be shipped to the winter tracks.

× × ×

FOR THE first time in the history of the track, every race at the coming Woodbine meeting will be broadcast, with that celebrated race announcer Foster Dryden at the mike. This will give the stay at homes twenty-eight days of racing over the air as the other three tracks have been on the air for the past three years. The long meeting at Detroit is rapidly drawing to a close and has held up in fine shape. Considering they have had continuous racing since the middle of May it is really remarkable.

× × ×

We still think Don Vern will grab a purse before they close. Tarnish is another they are counting on to do the necessary. Did you notice where Semester who has been cavorting around our tracks most of the past summer, popped down in front of a formidable field at the Motor City track on Monday of this week? Our old friend The Doctor is still over there limbering up and it would not surprise us greatly if Haymaker decided to ship him to Toronto for the four weeks campaign. If he does you can count on the black streak to gather in his share of purse money. Toronto tracks we always considered his home grounds. We also hear that Conny Smythe is going to bring his stable back home for the autumn sessions.

GIANTS BOOST NATIONAL LEAD WESTERN TOUR

CARDINALS GAINING.

By Hugh S. FullertonCMMFW
By HUGH S. FULLERTON, Jr.
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

The results of the western tour of New York Giants and of Detroit Tigers' jaunt through the east could be marked up as successful to-day regardless of the outcomes of the final contests of the trips and of the success or failure of Schoolboy Rowe's effort to shatter the American League record for consecutive victories to-day.

Each team had a 4½-game lead when it took the road and hoped for little more than to hold it until the final home stand after Labor Day. To-day the Giants, after turning back the Chicago threat 3-1 yesterday in the third game of their series were 5½ games in the van. Detroit, rained out at Philadelphia, still had its 4½-game margin going into the closing doubleheader in the east, one game of which was to provide the opportunity for Rowe to make his record effort.

The triumph of the Giants and LeRoy Parmelee gave Bill Terry's club a record of nine victories against six defeats while Detroit has already won 10 games and lost only five in the east.

It was Parmelee, whose pitching lately has been of the in-and-out variety, who carried the Giants to their first triumph over Chicago in three games. Not only did he hold the edge in a mound duel with big Jim Weaver, although he granted seven hits to Weaver's five but he put his club ahead in the fifth inning with a home run belt that was the second hit off Weaver.

The only time Parmelee was in any serious trouble was when Chicago pushed over a run in the fourth to tie the score after giving the Giants a first-inning tally on a walk, a sacrifice and an error.

Cards Going Up

The defeat left the Cubs only one game ahead of the third-place Cardinals, who defeated Brooklyn 2-0 despite Ray Benge's four-hit hurling. The four hits, singles by Durocher, Paul Dean and Whitehead and a double by Rothrock, came in succession in the sixth to produce the only runs.

The last-place Cincinnati Reds ran their winning streak to four games, their longest of the season, by taking their second straight doubleheader from the Phillies, 8-6 and 2-1. They bunched extra base belts to take the opener despite homers by Dolph Camilli and George Davis, then won the afterpiece in the ninth on Ernie Lombardi's single with the bases full at the end of a mound duel between Benny Frey and Euel Moore.

The Braves knocked Burleigh Grimes out with three runs in the first and defeated Pittsburgh 5-3 in what started out to be a doubleheader but was cut to one game by rain.

Browns Blank Senators

With the Yankees and White Sox rained out as well as the Tigers and A's, developments in the American League were confined to the Browns' 4-0 triumph over Washington, which left the clubs tied for fifth place, and Boston's 6-2 decision over Cleveland, leaving them all square in their third-place struggle.

Pitching was a big factor in both triumphs. Buck Newson blanked the Senators with three hits but gave six walks while Lefty Grove limited the Indians to seven blows and his teammates won for him when they batted around in the sixth to score six runs off Ralph Winegarner.

SHATTER RECORDS IN CRICKET LIST

Eastern Canada Players Have New Peaks in Scoring.

TORONTO, Aug. 29. (CP).—Five Canadian batting records have been smashed in the past few weeks by players on the Eastern Canada Cricket Eleven now touring Western Canada. The total number of Canadian records now held by members of the tourist team is seven.

L. A. Percival, Rosedale, Toronto, started the onslaught with a score of 181 runs in one hour and 10 minutes—a record for sustained fast scoring. The next record to fall was the first wicket stand of more than 100 runs, R. G. McLean and Percival creating a new mark with five partnerships of more than 100 this year. These players also hold the record for stands of more than 50 for the opening wicket having put on the half-century 16 times.

Percival set a new record in scoring 1,000 runs in the least number of innings—1020 in 18 innings for an average of 68. He was three times not out. This player at present needs only 310 runs to beat Rev. F. W. Terry's record of the most runs ever scored in one season—1609 in 51 innings.

E. F. Loney, playing for Toronto C.C. against Rosedale in the semi-final game for the Canadian championship, scored 197 creating a new record for the highest score made in a Dominion play-off. The same player, with J. M. McAvity, broke the eighth wicket partnership record when they scored 176. Percival scored 113 in the same match. He is the only player ever to score more than one century against the champions.

Perry And Shields Top Seeded Players

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—Eighty-nine players were drawn yesterday for the men's United States singles tennis championship beginning on Saturday at Forest Hills, Long Island, with Fred Perry of England, the defending champion, seeded first among four invaders, and Francis X. Shields, of New York, named at the head of a list of eleven seeded natives.

Shields and Perry were placed at the top and bottom respectively, of the upper half of the draw, with plenty of stiff opposition between them and a prospective meeting in the semi-finals on September 7.

Seeded in order behind Shields were Wilmer Allison of Austin, Texas; Sidney B. Wood, Jr., of New York; Berkeley Bell of New York; Lester R. Stoefen of Los Angeles; Frankie Parker of Lawrenceville, N.J.; Bryan M. Brant of Atlanta; Gregory Mangin of Newark, N.J., and John W. Van Ryn of Philadelphia.

Redwings Win in Ninth at Rochester After Bisons Take Lead.

(By the Associated Press)

The fact that Albany Senators to-day had lost no part of their lead in the race for the International League's fourth play-off berth could be traced directly to the efforts of the Toronto Maple Leafs and Rochester Red Wings.

The Senators, holding fourth place by a margin of 2½ games, dropped an 8-1 decision to the pace-setting Newark Bears yesterday but their closest rivals, Buffalo Bisons and Montreal Royals obliged by accepting beatings from the Red Wings and Leafs respectively.

Turn Back Royals

Jack Larocca's eight-hit pitching, supported by the hard and timely batting of his teammates enabled Newark to turn back Albany with a minimum of difficulty. Larocca struck out 10 men and never was in serious trouble after a four-run Newark rally in the sixth. Roy Schalk drove in three Newark runs with a home run and a single.

Rochester rallied for three runs in the ninth to top Buffalo, 4-3, after the Bisons had put on a three-run splurge in the first half of the same frame to take a 3-1 lead. Norbert Kleinke held the Bisons to five hits, three in the ninth, in winning his 17th victory. A home run by Ival Goodman, a walk to Buster Mills, an error, a long fly and singles by Johnny Mize and Tom Winsett scored the three runs the Wings needed in their last turn at bat to win. Ken Ash limited the Wings to three hits in the first eight frames but was blasted out in the ninth.

Fifth Straight Win

Four runs in the seventh gave Toronto an 8-7 victory over Montreal, thus leaving the Royals still a game and a half behind Buffalo and four behind Albany. It was a wild and wooly game in which Toronto used 14 men and Montreal 16. Rub Walker, Royal outfielder, got a double and single in two official times at bat and scored five runs but still could not bring victory to his club. Joe Morrissey's three hits led Toronto's attack.

Birds Take Double

Baltimore Orioles observed "Guy Sturdy night" by walloping Syracuse twice, 4-0 and 6-2. Beryl Richmond allowed the Chiefs only three singles in the opener and fanned eight. Bill Lohrman scattered eight Syracuse hits in the nightcap. Sturdy signed a one-year contract to manage Baltimore in 1935 before the game.

MARGIN OF 2 STROKES.

MONTREAL, Aug. 29 (C.P.). — Rounds of 68, which gave them a lead of two strokes on their nearest rivals, enabled Jules Huot, Quebec, and Dick Borthwick, Toronto, last night to face the second 18 holes of the Canadian professional golf championship competition to-day with confidence. The tournament, which began at the Country Club yesterday, is over a 72-hole route, concluding on Thursday.

Huot, who is the newly crowned Quebec open champion, played his first nine three under par. His second nine saw him alternately above and below par, but he finished strongly with a birdie for a 36.

One above perfect figures and two below for the round, Borthwick put four two's on his card in a remarkable display, which began with a big six. He was out in 36 and home in 36. Both Huot and Borthwick equalled the record score for the course. Cards were:

LOVAT-BROWN ONLY SCORERS IN TIGHT GAME

Both Teams Lose Several Chances to Score by Misplaced Shots.

PLAY ON LOCAL GROUNDS

Caledonians and Deloro split points in a Peterborough and District Soccer Association battle when a tightly fought battle ended in a 1-1 tie. Lovat scored the only goal for the Caleys in the first quarter on a fine combination play from the toe of Leggat, while Brown made the count all square before the period ended.

Caleys won the toss and Deloro kicked off, but the Scots secured the ball and made tracks for Deloro's goal, where, after considerable pressure, a corner was forced. Mowry took the kick and placed well, but it was cleared by the visitors' defence and sent up the field. Deloro now had a spell of pressing, and looked dangerous until Brooks, who was well placed, shot wildly over the bar. Interesting play followed, with the ball travelling swiftly from end to end.

Dyer put in a fine shot which was tipped over the bar by the goalkeeper shortly afterwards. Leggat secured possession, slipped nicely forward to Lovat, who gave the goalkeeper no chance with a fine shot to put the Caley's one up. The visitors now put on the pressure, forcing two corners, which were well cleared by the Caleys' defence. Deloro continued to press and got an easy chance to score when H. Mann fell as he was about to clear the ball, leaving Brown in possession, who took full advantage of the opportunity to put the ball past Montgomery to even up the score.

Scoreless Second.

Caleys kicked off to start off the second half. Deloro made for the home goal but were turned back by the home defence. Mowry got away on the right and sent the ball forward to Lovat, who scored, but was offside. Caleys continued to press and forced several corners, but made poor use of them. The ball continued to travel fast from end to end, but owing to the darkness it was impossible to follow the game from the side lines. There was no further scoring, and the game finished a draw, Caledonians 1, Deloro 1.

The teams:

Caledonians—Montgomery; Mann and Dinsont Webb, Green and Leggat; Mowry, A. Heal, Dyer, C. Heal and Lovat.

Deloro—O. Neill; Cousins and J. Hart; Grey, Bradley and Sproul; W. Hart, Smith, Brooks, Brown and Stewart.

Referee, W. Harrington.

Linesmen—D. Anderson and D. McGregor.

Ye Cognasewage—it must mean something in English, surely—are doing battle this e'en with a team named Bowmanville. It's at 4.15, which really means about 4.30, and down at the Exhibition Grounds where many a brave E.P.L. struggle was fought through. The Cogs won the first game of this O.B.A.A. playdown series by a 3-1 score, but no telling how this second fixture will come out. Were looking for quite a battle, with Percy Vannest and George Piper the likely opposition on the mounds. Even if they aren't, we're still looking for a scrap.

We took in a neat boxing bout out the window of our office yesterday. 'Twas about four o'clock yesterday out in the back alley of The Examiner that a kid in a blue shirt tangled with a kid in a red sweater. The former had an edge in boxing and his lefts into the face sort of slowed up the aggressive little guy in red. It was stopped eventually by a passer-by, and could have been called a draw. But what we liked was the fair play shown by both kids. They broke clean on clinches and whenever a fellow fell, the other boy stepped back and let him get to his feet before the fight was resumed. We got quite a kick out of the way these lads fought and don't figure either of them really lost.

It has been definitely settled that the Dukes from Oshawa will play the Petes here Saturday twice, these being the last scheduled C.O.B.L. games of the season. This twin bill will start at 2.15, with the second game commencing about ten minutes after the first fixture. It will only go seven frames. Not only will it establish the first team on the top rung but it will give the locals a swell workout for the Central League playoffs which commence here Monday at three bells.

Our lacrossers, the Kiwanis, are readying up for their playoffs. The Belleville-Cobourg series will be wound up the end of this month and Kiwanis meets the winner away from home September 4th, return game being the 7th. Local team will practise Saturday at two bells in the Bowl. There is an exhibition girls' game Thursday between Cobourg and C.G.E., so the gutted stick artists will not workout that night. Incidentally, Keene plays Westclox in gals' softball tonight.

C.G.E. damsels waded through Sixth Line at the Bowl last eve to the tune of 23-10 or some such sin. It didn't attract many customers nor was it worth many. These chilly nights make one wonder what sort of crowds the gals' playoffs will draw—said playoffs at present looking nearly as far off as Hallowe'en. Schedule doesn't wind up till September 5th, and then there are a couple of semi-final series before the cup serial gets under way. Oh, well, it's someplace to go till hockey gets started locally again.

Down in the southend League, Orioles up and put the skids under Nationals last night with an 11-3 push, thereby evening up their semi-final tangle. Albions and Cogs, in the other bracket, met Monday p.m. but it only went six frames with the former squad leading in a tight tussle, 20 to 21 It'll be replayed Thursday and Albions hope to win out in two straight, after notching the first one, 15-1. The Nats and Orioles wind it up Friday at 5.30 in the Brinton Field, and this ought to be an interesting session.

The city tennis championship tournament reached a finish last evening with Mrs. J. A. Dewart and Max Cotton winning the mixed doubles. They defeated Gladys Carvolth and Jack Kirkwood in two sets, 6-4 and 6-2. Cotton also won the men's singles and, paired with J. Cowling, captured the men's doubles. Miss Carvolth won the ladies' singles, junior and senior, and she and Ann Macdonald took the ladies' doubles. The junior men's singles went to Gordon Kirkwood. It's been a real successful tourney, with a big entry and some fine competition dished up. But entry fees are long overdue and those in arrears ought to send the money in immediately to J. Kirkwood.

Orioles Hold Lead Scored in Second Frame to Down Nationals.

PLAY-OFFS TIED.

Playing errorless ball behind Red Hunter's four-hit pitching last night Orioles handed the Nationals an 11-3 trimming in the second game of their Southend Softball League playoff series. This ties it up as the Nats won the first by a 10-6 count. Nationals drew first blood with three runs in the second, including Ward's homer. The Birdmen came back in their half to net four, and two more next time out. They coasted home on this lead, adding to it occasionally. Ward on the losers' mound was touched for thirteen hits, fanned three and walked three. Hunter gave but four hits and issued six walks. Parsons again shone at short for the losers, with E. Smith going best for the victors. The box score:

History Of America's Cup

NEW YORK, Aug. 28.—(AP)—They were planning a great industrial exposition in England in 1860.

With the idea of covering all ramifications of industrial endeavor, a group of British businessmen suggested to some New York confrees that the send an American fore-and-aft-rigged yacht to England as a specimen of what the United States had in the way of moderate-sized boats.

Racing was in its infancy in this country. The New York Yacht Club then was only in its seventh year but six of its members formed a syndicate, had a yacht, "The America", designed and built by George Steers and sailed her across the Atlantic to Cowes.

The America, weighing 170 tons, took on 14 member yachts of the Royal Yacht squadron and finished 16 minutes ahead of her closest pursuer, winning the classic squadron cup.

Presented to N.Y. Club

Seven years late, after discarding the idea of melting the trophy and striking off medals, the five surviving members of the syndicate offered the cup, valued at about $500, to the New York Yacht Club as a perpetual trophy. The gift specified that it was to be the property of the club and that any organized yacht club should always be entitled, through one or more of its members, to claim the right of sailing a match for it with yachts of not less than 30 or more than 300 tons.

Since then the deed of gift has been changed twice, altered to cover conditions as time marched on, but the intent of the original owners, all of whom have passed on, has been strictly respected.

In this manner, the international yachting series known as "The America's Cup Races" was conceived.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29 (AP) — Twenty years passed before the New York Yacht Club received a challenge for the America's Cup after an American syndicate's schooner, "The America," lifted the trophy in a fleet race in British waters in 1851.

The challenge was posted by James Ashbury, a British sportsman, who proposed to sail his 160-ton Cambria in quest of the cup. Negotiations between Ashbury and the New York Yacht Club, which was in possession of the trophy reached a stalemate several times due to the Briton's dissatisfaction with the conditions for the race.

But Ashbury had great faith in the powers of the Cambria and consequently he crossed the Atlantic to match his schooner with the best boat America could produce. When he found his arguments for a match race were unavailing, he finally agreed to race Cambria against 17 American boats, including the old America, in a race sponsored by the N.Y.Y.C.

Ashbury protested against the allowance of centre-board yachts in the race, but the New York Yacht Club would not admit its power to bar any vessel eligible to sail in the ordinary races of the club.

In a fine sailing breeze, the first challenge race took place on August 8, 1870, over the N.Y.Y.C. course, starting off Stapleton, State Island, to Southwest Spit Buoy, hence to and around Sandy Hook Lightship and return, approximately 36 nautical miles.

Magic, a centre-board vessel of a little under 80 feet waterline took the lead at the start and sailed the distance in 3 hours, 56 miles, 21 seconds corrected time. Cambria did not make a brilliant start and she lost her fore-topmast during the race, and finished eighth.

EDMONTON GRADS WIN AT TORONTO

TORONTO, Aug. 29 (C.P.).—Any lingering doubt Toronto basketball fandom had in its mind concerning the ability of Edmonton Grads to carry the title of women basketball champions of the world on their feminine shoulders was dispelled today.

The grads smothered a hand-picked, all-star Toronto cage team under a 49-12 defeat in an exhibition game here last night. The contest was played on an open-air floor, in front of the grandstand at the Canadian National Exhibition. Chill winds and damp weather kept the attendance down to approximately 6,000.

Led by bespectacled Babe Belanger, high scorer in their overwhelming victory at Montreal last Saturday, and Noel MacDonald, 17-year-old forward, playing her first year with the team, the grides of the prairie piled up the score from the opening whistle and held Toronto to six points in each half.

Grads led 23-6 at half-time. In the second quarter Toronto did not score a point. They were unable to penetrate the stonewall defence of the world champions.

Rowe On Threshold Setting Major Mark

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 29 (AP)—A youth of 22 summers, "Schoolboy," they call him, stands to-day on the threshold of baseball's Hall of Immortals, knocking on the portals with a right hand filled with pitching magic.

If that hand holds steady, Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe will fling his Detroit Tiger teammates to victory over Connie Mack's Athletics and set a new American League twirling record of 17 straight wins.

Already sharing a pinnacle with three other moundsmen greats of the league—"Smokey Joe" Wood, Walter Johnson and "Lefty" Grove,—Rowe would be a man apart should he triumph to-day.

After that, "a few more good breaks," to use his words, and he'd be on his way to crash another gate of fame: the 16-game major league mark scored by two National Leaguers, Timothy Keefe and Rube Marquard, both of the New York Giants.

"Worrying over ball games never kept me awake," he philosophizes as he makes ready to face Johnny Marcum on the mound. "You can't win if the boys don't get you some runs."

Higher Temperature Is Needed For Swim

TORONTO, Aug. 29.—(CP)—The pick of the men's marathon swimming world today awaited the weatherman's verdict to decide if they start on the 18-mile grind through Lake Ontario's cold waters for the professional swimming crown and $5,000 in prize money. Noted for its frigid water the lake this morning seemed bent on remaining below the required temperature for the crawl although final decision will come at 10 o'clock this morning.

Canadian exhibition officials who stage the swim as a feature of the annual sports program have ruled the swimmers cannot enter the water unless the temperature is 68 degrees or higher. The weatherman's forecast held little hope as an off-shore wind which produces cold water was predicted. The water marathon will be postponed until the minimum temperature appears when the 100 crawl stroke artists will be sent on the stamina testing race.

Women marathoners who have entered the five-mile event are hoping for a sudden change in the temperature as their event is scheduled for tomorrow. There are 40 mermaids ready for this competition.

Lawn Bowling by Herb Martin

Well, We Talked things over with the boys and we have decided to run a mixed tournament on Labor Day (Monday, Sept. 3).

—o—

The Weatherman has promised more seasonable weather for the week-end and we should have a nice crowd out on the holiday.

—o—

The Games will commence at 1.30 p.m. and the draw will be made from the board. There will be three twelve-end games and the admission fee is set for 25c. We doubt if you can have a better afternoon and evening's sport anywhere for as little money.

—o—

The Outstanding game last night was the Allan-Downey event. It was in the preliminary round of the C.O.L.B. playdowns. This game has a history but we think that we will just pass up that part.

—o—

As Usual The Doc got off on the wrong foot and was trailing 10-7 when he slipped over a nice big seven on R. P. It has become a habit of the Doc. He seems to know just where and when to pull it—and if that wasn't enough he comes rght back with a three and then the balloon passed out of sight.

—o—

From Then On it was only a procession although on the fourteenth end Downey was lying seven when the Doc. played his last bowl. He succeeded, too, because he came in for third shot. Anyway the boys have no kick coming; they had a good time and a good game. The only regrettable feature about the whole thing is that the season is getting on and the boys won't have many more chances to compete. The final score finished up, Allan 19, Downey 16.

Ross And McLarnin Take a Day's Rest

NEW YORK, Aug. 29) (CP — Muscles relaxed and tiny kinks eased by a day of relaxation, Jimmy McLarnin and Barney Ross returned to-day to strenuous prepping for their return setto in Madison Square Garden's yawning bowl the night of Sept. 6.

Jimmy, Vancouver's ex-ruler of the welterweights and Barney, crafty Chicago Jew who now dominates the class, were given a holiday yesterday by managers already convinced their precious charges are rounding into shape.

After breakfast McLarnin did a little roadwork and indulged in setting-up exercises—"child's play" he called it. Then he tried to relax and play host at his Orangeburg, N.Y., camp to a group of visiting newsmen and sports cartoonists.

However, one cartoonist wondering what it felt like to be clipped on the chin by the little Canadian's right-hand, coaxed the boxer out of his chair for a demonstration. Jimmy demurred, then complied reluctantly. He obviously pulled the punch to the unprotected chin but still knocked the bewildered picture-man into the open arms of a man posted beforehand.

ELECTRICS RETAIN PLAY-OFF CHANCES

C.G.E. girls held their slim playoff chance last night at the Ashburnham Bowl when they trounced the Sixth Line team 23 to 10 in a heavy hitting league duel that saw the visitors use three pitchers. This win is the fifth for the Electrics in nine games and they must win their last game with Omemee to have any hope of getting into the sectional playoff series.

The winners pounded the offerings of the three opposing pitchers with a will, and in the third frame, with Lil Bowie hurling, they counted eleven times. Bell, who twirled the fifth and sixth, was nicked for seven more runs, and Helen Weir finished the game. Helen Newson hurled steady ball for the C.G.E., allowing twelve scattered hits and passing two. Winnie Snowden and Dot Self hit homers for the winners, while Miller and Gates both had doubles. Todd and Byers, with the three mentioned, all hit safely three times, Weir with a homer and single led the losers. The teams:

Millbrook Lacrosse Team Blanks Hopers

MILLBROOK, Aug. 29.—(Examiner Correspondence). — A hard-fought, clean, fast brand of lacrosse was exhibited at the West Beach, Port Hope, on Monday at 6.30 p.m., when Millbrook took a 2-0 victory from the lakeside squad in the inter-county league game, a large crowd of fans witnessing the contest.

The second half of the schedule in the inter-county competition is now more than half played, Dint's Inn (Peterborough) to meet Millbrook at the Cosmos rink on Wednesday, August 29, at 8.30 p.m., and Port Hope to play a return game on Friday at the same hour.

Three twenty-minute periods were played on Monday evening, the last one having to be curtailed owing to gathering darkness. Scoring for Millbrook were Raper and Henry Gray, and though Port Hope worked hard they were unable to get one into the net past the Millbrook goalie, Larmer, who was at his best all evening. A noteworthy fact is that in the last three games of the schedule everyone of the Millbrook players has starred, having at least one goal to his credit. Rowden, of Port Hope, was referee for Monday's game, and the teams were:

Dewart And Cotton Win Doubles Title

Mrs. J. A. Dewart and Max Cotton won the mixed tennis championship of the city last night by defeating Miss Gladys Carvolth and Jack Kirkwood in straight sets, 6-4 and 6-2. It was the final match of the city tournament, and the winners were never in difficulty. They jumped into an early lead in both sets and held it without trouble. Mrs. Dewart played a strong game, while Cotton was brilliant, both in his baseline game and his net play. Miss Carvolth scored frequently with hard drives from the back court and tricky shots at the net. Kirkwood made some placements on his opponents' lobs, but was erratic and lost the critical points.

Both sides held service in the first two games; then both lost service the next two. Mrs. Dewart and Cotton broke through again in the seventh game and set followed service with the winners taking it, 6 to 4. The first game in the second set went to deuce eight times, and Kirkwood double-faulted to lose the game. Mrs. Dewart and Cotton held all their services in this set and broke through again in the seventh game to take the set, 6-2.

RAIN KEEPS NETTERS IDLE.

RYE, N.Y., Aug. 29 (A.P.).—The hard-working tennis brigade yesterday got a day of rest as rain washed out the program in the Eastern United States grass courts tennis championships. It will only mean double duty later in the week, however, as the tournament has to clear the decks for the start on Saturday at Forest Hills of the United States men's singles.

CANADIAN BACKFIELDERS BETTER THAN AMERICAN, SAYS TIGER STAR

By W. M. GLADISH
Central Press Canadian Sports Writer

SUDBURY, Aug. 29.—After eleven years with the Hamilton Tigers rugby football team, Alex Denman has seen a transition in the Canadian gridiron game that is almost revolutionary with regard to the play itself and the personnel. In those eleven seasons, Denman figured on seven "Big Four" championships as well, and he has also been one of the select few to receive the award of the Jeff. Russell Memorial Trophy as the year's most valuable player in the inter-provincial union. In other words, Denman has seen his football and knows it. He now announces his retirement from the fray to follow his private business career as a resident of Sudbury.

The famous wingline stalwart of the Bengals has viewed the invasion of players from the United States from the inside and his comparisons are interesting—coming from a player of a club which was the last member of the Big Four to succumb to the import trend.

Canadians Run, Kick Better

Denman's first comment is that Canadians are far better kickers than the American stars and that they are much superior in broken-field running for very good reasons. U.S. teams developed the forward pass and there was not the same incentive to punt on that account and also because there is no score in U.S. football on kick to the deadline. American ball carriers rely to a great extent on the protection of running interference but the Canadian runner is largely on his own.

ALEX. DENMAN

the former Hamilton star pointed out.

"They cannot beat such Canadian halves as Turville, Box, Welch and Sinclair," Denman said quite earnestly.

"Too much prominence has been given to the imported American stars," the veteran of many battles continued. "They are good players but they do not merit all the talk. Americans have the edge in forward-passing but already there are some Canadian players who can throw it as well as anybody. Warren Stevens had a wonderful first year with Montreal, but I doubt if he would have been so good the second year because the Canadians were getting on to the play."

No Big Money

Referring to the coaching situation, Denman ventured to remark that "some of the U.S. coaches come over with the idea there is big money in Canadian football but there isn't. There are not enough games in the schedule and not enough big gates to enable a club to afford a highly-paid coach." He did not mention Karl Cronin, former Notre Dame and Winnipeg player, who recently spent some time in Hamilton, nor to Lew Hayman, coach of Toronto Argos, who also negotiated with Hamilton, but the inference might be there.

"Why did the Tigers lose last year?" was the next question.

"Perhaps there was not quite enough discipline—the boys were not serious enough and the coach did not 'ride' the team as much as in previous years. But the defeat of the Tigers in 1933 will do the sport a world of good in that city—they've always expected the Tigers to win every game and the fans were inclined to crab even about the scores and other such things. Now the people will look upon the team differently."

Strange to relate, Denman is a northerner. He was born in Sault Ste. Marie and his liking for rugby was one of the influences which took him to southern Ontario early in his career. He played first for Woodstock and it happened that Ray Boadway was on the same team. Both of them developed into stellar giants of the sport. Boadway went to the Argos, while Denman threw in his lot with the Tigers which meant they were friendly enemies—until Boadway also was accepted into the Tigers' lair.

Denman is now covering the north country for a tobacco firm and his trips take him to White River and other distant points.

But Denman can take it—in fact, other distant points.

CHAPER 26

Drew went on to explain eagerly that what he hoped was that Adelaide would listen to reason as time went on . . . "She'll want you to come, perhaps before we sail. And if she doesn't, I'll know you're mine, for time and for eternity."

"But why not tell her?"

Joan hated to have him say it like that. It destroyed the illusion. Yet as he wove for her the fabric of his dreams, she wavered.

"My wife! Joan, do you know how lovely you are? I thought I had remembered, but when I saw you tonight . . ."

She felt as if a silken net were being drawn about her. Her conscience, her common sense were against the thing he proposed, but at last she promised!

"You will never regret it," Drew told her, triumphantly.

They went upstairs together, and as she went into her room, Drew's whisper rang in her ears like a chime of bells, "Our wedding day . . . tomorrow."

She lighted her candles, and moved about the room, finding the things she would need in the morning. Her mind was in a whirl. It seemed as if she were two people; that one side of her consented to all that Drew had proposed, while the other protested, "I will not. I will not."

She decided that the gray dress which Drew had praised should be her wedding gown. And there would be the ivory beads. And the little violet hat.

In the room next to Joan's Penelope lay wide awake. She had not gone to bed until Joan came up. She had hoped the child might look in upon her and say "Good night," but the light footsteps had passed her door. She had heard Joan moving about, but now there was no sound.

She had a sense of foreboding. If Joan had been her daughter, she would have gone to her. But Joan was not her daughter . . .

At last she could stand it no longer. She put on a dressing gown and went along the hall. When she reached Joan's room, she found the door open, and Joan, like a ghost, in her white negligee, standing in the middle of the floor. "How strange you should come, Penelope," she said, in a breathless voice, "I was coming . . . to you . . ."

Penelope went in and closed the door. She sat down in a chintz-covered chair. Joan sat on the bed. She had lighted a candle and its pale flame showed the two women in strange contrast. Joan in white, with her silky, shining hair, was like one of Raphael's angels. Penelope's hair was in kids, and her dressing gown was made of a red blanket. Her shadow on the wall showed little horns, but there was nothing diabolical about Penelope. She was sane and sensible, and tonight her heart was troubled . . . If Joan were her daughter . . .!

"And now, my dear, what is it?"

"I couldn't—sleep . . ."

"Why not?"

"I had so much to think of."

"Pleasant things?"

"Worrying things. Penelope, darling, I wish I had a stiff backbone . . ." she tried to laugh.

"Does that mean you are going to give in to your aunt?"

"No. But I've found out that it wasn't Drew's fault. He came . . . to tell me . . ."

"So you've forgiven him."

"Oh, yes . . . you see . . . I love him . . ."

Again Penelope had that sense of something sinister. "My dear," she said, "I don't know why you should wish for a stiff backbone, but let me say this, that in love as in everything else there are just three things which make for happiness—and they are faith and honesty and courage. If you bring these to your lover and he brings them to you nothing can prevail against them. If you were my daughter, Joan, I would wish only this for you, that the man you marry should hold you to your best."

Joan sat very still, a little statue in the starlight, and at last she said, with a sigh . . . "We are none of us perfect . . ."

"No."

They talked after that of other things and finally Penelope rose and stood by the bed. "I must say 'good night,' my dear."

"I shan't sleep," there was a quaver in Joan's voice.

"I will sit by you until you shut your eyes."

When at last Penelope went back to her room, it was a long time before she slept, and in the darkness she drew near to the infinite source of the strength which was within her. "Help her to choose the best, Lord," prayed the wise old woman.

Joan waked at dawn, and lay watching the light come into the room. It was a pleasant room, simply furnished with some of the nice old things that Penelope had inherited. Joan's bed was of the folding type, with a crewel-worked cover and tester. There was a hooked rug, a Jacobean chest, a maple dressing table with a Queen Anne mirror above it.

On the dressing table were laid out Joan's toilet things—the brush and comb and handglass of carved ivory and silver, the pale flagon of perfume, the painted porcelain boxes. These were the only opulent articles in the room. They belonged to the old life.

Joan seemed to see Adelaide sitting beside the bed as she had sat that day in the hotel . . . After all I've done for you . . . I've treated you like a princess . . . those pearls you have on are worth a fortune . . .

The old voice had had venom in it, the old eyes had been baleful. Joan thought of Penelope's voice and eyes as last night she had sat beside the bed . . . faith, and honesty, and courage . . .!

And set against these—a clandestine marriage!

The sun was up, and as the light poured in through the window, it seemed to Joan that a greater light entered her soul. Honesty and courage, and faith? None of these would belong to her if she ran away with Drew!

She got up and put on the gray dress which was to have been her wedding dress. Then she went downstairs and followed the path which led to the bluff. She descended to the moor and came finally to the sea. She walked up the beach for miles . . . it was a dull morning, and there were flocks of wild birds flitting back and forth across the sands. Their cries were mournful and were answered by the mewing of gulls overhead.

When at last she turned, Joan had made her decision. She knew now that when she faced Drew, he could not sway her. A battle had been fought and she had won.

He was waiting for her at the edge of the bluff. "I saw you coming . . . where in the world have you been?"

"For a walk . . ."

"Why didn't you wait for me?"

"I had to think things out . . ." she lifted her face to his. "Drew, darling . . . I can't do it."

"Do what?"

"Marry you today."

"Why not?"

"Because it . . . isn't right."

"That's silly. Why shouldn't it be right?"

"Because I can't—hide things."

"Don't you love me?"

"You know I do."

"Well, then," he caught up her hands in his, "show me that you do."

She shook her head. He dropped her hands, his forehead frowning. "You know, of course, that you may be cutting yourself off from me—forever?"

"Not if you really love me."

He saw that she meant it. He stood looking down at her. "You're a strong little thing," he said, with a sort of grudging admiration. "But I'll tell you this. Some day you are going to marry me. On my own terms. And this is the sign and the seal of it."

He lifted her in his arms and kissed her again. Then he set her down and strode away.

Joan stood where he had left her. And after a long time Penelope came out. "Breakfast is ready. Where is Mr. Hallam?"

"He's gone, Penelope. He isn't—coming back . . ."

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Thursday, August 30

A rather lively day although one hampering its activities and progress by a personal bereavement or affliction, is the augury based on the predominant lunar and mutual aspects. An aspect between Sol and Mercury is encouraging to business connections and literary pursuit, but the private interests may prove an obstructing or postponing factor.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a year in which their most active interests and endeavours may be interfered with by personal matters or possibly sorrows or bereavements. There may be expected postponements and impediments to the most active endeavours by these private afflictions.

A child born on this day should be endowed with certain talents and graces but will probably incline to a serious and contemplative life rather than great activity.

2,011 PROTESTS IN DAY ON BEER

ODETTE PROTESTS.

TORONTO, Aug. 29 (C.P.). — Rev. T. T. Shields, fundamental Baptist preacher and prohibition crusader, claimed to-day to have received 2,011 personal protests against the new beer and wine policy of the Ontario Government. Yesterday, he said, he received 1,096 protests.

The militant reformer declared he had already received more protests against the hotel sale of beer and wine than Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn polled in the last Ontario election.

Dr. Shields said many of the letters he had received were from persons who were not total abstainers but who were dissatisfied with present conditions. He claimed to have received one from a collecting agent, who said it had become 50 per cent. harder for him to make collections than before the new law became effective.

Aroused by the preacher's attack on the liquor laws, Liquor Commissioner E. C. Odette declared to-day Dr. Shields' attitude was a "direct attack on the citizenry of Ontario."

The commissioner challenged his clerical critic to "go ahead and stump the province." Persons in Ontario, he declared, knew how to use "their new-found freedom."

He said he was convinced the new law was better than the old "that drove drinking into hotel bedrooms and into the highways and byways, the lanes and secret places."

He added with emphasis: "And I shall see that authority holders obey the law to the letter."

Golf Game Roused King George's Ire

Prince Says Once Caddied for Royal Father.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—King George of England once played golf. But it made him so angry he gave it up.

The Prince of Wales revealed this secret to a gathering of golfers known as the Lucifer club, composed of members from all parts of the British Empire, and of which the prince is captain.

"I can remember caddying for the King when I was young," the prince told his "Brother Lucifers."

"As far as I can remember, he played quite a good game, and I asked him the other day why he did not go on with it, because I feel that it is a game one goes on playing for ever. But what my father said to me was, 'I get so damned angry with it.'"

29 YEARS SINCE LAST MARRIAGE OUTSIDE REALM

Princess Maud Married King of Norway in 1896.

King Edward's Daughter.

(By Thomas T. Champion—C.P. Staff Writer).

LONDON, Aug. 29.—Although several junior members of the British Royal Family have sought mates from abroad in recent years, Prince George, whose bethrothal to Princess Marina of Greece was announced last evening, is the first child of the Sovereign to become engaged to a member of a foreign house in 29 years.

Princess Maud, fifth child of Edward VII., in 1896, married Prince Charles of Denmark, now King Haakon VII. of Norway. The couple spent much time in England before their accession to the throne of Norway. Queen Maud still maintains a house adjoining the British royal residence at Sandringham.

"This was the only marriage of a child of the Prince of Wales (afterwards Edward VII.) which came into touch with foreign politics," writes Sir Henry Lee in his life of Edward VII. "No political association was anticipated at the time, but twelve months later, when Norway dissolved union with Sweden there was much international controversy over the choice of a ruler for the newly established state. Princess Maud's father — then King Edward—intervened with success in an endeavor to persuade the Norwegians to make his son-in-law their King."

Sir Henry Lee in discussing the marriage in 1889 of Princess Louise, Edward's eldest daughter, to the Earl of Fife, records "conventional opinion was somewhat critical of the alliance of the Prince's youthful daughter to one below her rank, much her senior, but the union of Queen Victoria's fourth daughter to the Marquis of Lorne offered adequate precedent."

It is recalled the Earl of Fife was raised to the dignity of a dukedom on his marriage. It is expected Prince George will receive similar rank shortly. He is already older than any of his brothers when they received their titles. The Prince of Wales was so created on his 16th birthday, six weeks after his father's accession to the throne in 1910. Prince Albert was made Duke of York at the age of 24, and Prince Henry, Duke of Gloucester at 26. Prince George is now 32.

Many years ago King George revealed he had already chosen titles which in due course his sons would bear.

The order of succession to the throne follows: The Prince of Wales and issue; the Duke of York and issue—Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret; the Duke of Gloucester and issue; Prince George and issue; Princess Mary and issue.

Grades and weights of the four cattle were as follows: No. 1, medium, 980 lbs.; No. 2, good, 1,040 lbs.; No. 3, fair, 966 lbs.; No. 4, poor, 686 lbs.

Set New Deal Cost About $505,000,000

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29. (AP)—Henry Morgenthau's view that the cost of the New Deal in its first 16 months may run as low as $505,000,000 is expected to be a talking point in the United States Fall election campaigns.

There appeared no doubt that the figuring the treasury head did in an address last night would be acclaimed by friends and assailed by at least some foes. Estimates of New Deal costs by the two camps have been billions of dollars apart.

Morgenthau's statement that the $2,800,000,000, "profit" the government reaped by its gold policy eventually would be applied to reducing the national debt also aroused much interest. Word from Wall Street was that this was regarded as reassuring and likely to bolster the government bond market.

Observers hold that when the treasury pays out gold certificates backed by this profit, it will mean a currency inflation of $2,800,000,000. Many onlookers had predicted that this would be the eventual decision of the government. But Morgenthau made clear that "for the present" the government would continue to keep the $2,800,000,000 "under lock and key." So there is no saying when the currency will be issued.

VISITORS PAY HOMAGE TO SAMUEL DE CHAMPLAIN

QUEBEC, Aug. 29.—(C.P.)—Visiting French delegates to the quatercentenary Jacques Cartier celebrations were preparing to-day to cut short their stay in Quebec's historic capital and proceed to Montreal and Ottawa.

Yesterday delegates paid homage to Samuel de Champlain, founder of Quebec City, by placing a wreath at the foot of his monument on Duffering Terrace. With sailors from the liner Champlain which bore the French officials from France to the scene of Jacques Cartier's triumphs, Capt. Victor Barthelemy, of the liner, and Mayor J. E. Gregoire, deposited the floral tribute.

Later in the afternoon the Duke of Levis-Mirepoix laid a wreath on the monument erected to the memory of General Montcalm, the heroic French soldier who died defending the Plains of Abraham against the English in 1759.

Voice of the People

Letters to be printed in the Voice of the People column must be received at The Examiner Office by 6 p.m. on the day letters intended for the paper, although a pen name may be used when inserting non-controversial subject matter letters over 400 words will be cut down at discretion of the editor.

The Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,— May I congratulate you on an excellent sense of "news value" in giving front page prominence to the Kiwanis Karnival in last night's issue.

You have given us in your pages, from time to time, impressive figures re the quantities of bread, milk, groceries, fruit, etc., required to add pounds to the under-nourished bodies of some two hundred and seventy youngsters each summer.

We do not need to be told that these supplies cost money and being true citizens we want to share in the cost as far as we are able.

It is fun to turn out for a Kiwanis frolic — to dance, take a chance on the wheels, to thrill as the winner of the ticket draw, but the real kick is to be able to back up the Kiwanis club with our dollars so that another batch of needy children may get the camp benefits next summer.

See you at the Karnival— let's buy lots of tickets—play all the games—dance to good music—and go home happy in the thought that we have helped the Kiwanis Club help a little child.

Yours truly,
Interested Citizen.

YACHT RACE POSTPONED

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 29.—(AP) —Yankee and Rainbow today were given a welcome respite from the strenuous competition through which one or the other will be named to meet Endeavour, Tom Sopwith's British challenger for the America's Cup.

The postponement was declared to give Yankee, sailed by Charles Francis Adams, formery Navy Secretary, more time in which to repair damage to her rigging suffered in yesterday's contest with Harold F. Vanderbilt's yacht.

It was expected the contending yachts would resume their competition tomorrow.

Assisted in United Church Evening Service Sunday.

FROM PETERBOROUGH

BAILIEBORO, Aug. 29.—An Oxford Group team from the city of Peterborough attended the evening service at the United Church on Sunday evening and brought to the local congregation a glimpse of the joy that they as members of the Group are experiencing in living the absolute life and surrendering their all to God and taking up their crosses to bear them willingly for the sake of Jesus Christ and his Kingdom.

This is the third appearance of the Petergorough Group to the local church and the impression left upon the local congregation has been quite noticeable.

CARDINAL SINGS FOR YOUNG TWINS

Incident of Human Interest at Quebec Station.

PERCE, Que., Aug. 29. — The twins sang and the Cardinal sang and the little station platform of the Canadian National Railways here rang with merry laughter.

Thus was the story told when Cardinal Villeneuve had departed on his return to Montreal after the Jacques Cartier celebrations which took place at Gaspe over the week-end. It was on his return journey that Cardinal Villeneuve stopped at Perce. While other members of the party on the special train were inspecting the village His Eminence stepped out on the platform to talk with Station Agent J. N. Trottier.

"Can you sing?" the Cardinal asked the twins, to overcome their shyness. The ten year old youngsters proudly announced their ability to do so.

"Then if you sing for me, I will sing for you" the prince of the church promised. Two shy voices began on a French-Canadian folk-song, gaining confidence as they proceeded. The Cardinal sang, while the other members of the Trottier family looked on in something akin to awe at hearing a Cardinal sing for them alone.

"The special Canadian National train rolled out, Montreal-bound, leaving behind a proud station agent and his family. Had they not enjoyed a notable experience in hearing His Eminence the Cardinal sing just to please their ten-year-old twins.

WEATHER AIDED HARVEST WORK

FIELDS BARE AGAIN

BAILIEBORO, Aug. 29.—Farmers of this district have succeeded in getting practically all their crop harvested and now the fields are again stripped for season 1934. The excellent harvest weather which has prevailed has speeded up the harvest and aided farmers to get their grain in in splendid condition.

Owing to the continued dry weather and the great shortage of seed fall wheat, it is generally considered that a small acreage of wheat will be sowed in the district.

The soil is very dry and practically impossible to prepare for a seed bed. It will take a great deal of rain-fall to moisten the soil sufficiently to make possible a good growth and farmers are about held up at this time awaiting a rain which will thoroughly saturate the baked soil.

Should rain come within the near future, farmers will have an excellent opportunity of preparing their land for the spring crops, with the long fall season left at their disposal.

Stook threshing has been very popular again this year in Durham county. The yield is from 40 to 50 per cent better than last year. Many fields of oats have run 50 to 60 bushels to the acre with one grower reporting close to 80 bushels of oats per acre from a fourteen acre field.

Halibut is the largest and most important of the flatfish.

Obituary

WILLIAM MAGEE

OMEMEE, Aug. 29 (Examiner Correspondence)—The funeral service of the late William Magee was held from his late residence on Tuesday, August 21.

The deceased was born near Peterborough. He spent his boyhood days in Fenelon Falls and moved to the vicinity of Omemee about 45 years ago. He was a son of the late John Magee and Martha Humphrey and married Martha Mills 46 years ago.

Besides his widow, he is survived by one daughter, Mrs. E. Jamieson of Omemee; one son, Mossom of Assiniboia, Sask., and two brothers, Frank of Fenelon Falls, Robert of North Bay, also one sister, Mrs. Argue, who has resided here for the last year.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. A. T. Weir of Christ Church, assisted by Mr. N. Burgomaster. The pall - bearers were Messrs. D. Deyell, F. Parker, J. Magee, P. Evans, T. C. Ivory, and O. C. Williamson.

RONALD WILLIAM HUTCHISON.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 29.—(Examiner Correspondence).—A gloom was cast over the community and countryside by the news of the death of Ronald W. Hutchison, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. James Hutchison, of Millbrook, the sad event taking place at Carleton Place on Saturday, August 25, following a two weeks' illness with double pneumonia.

Deceased had but recently passed his thirty-second birthday, and was born and brought up at the family homestead, a short distance east of the village. He received his education at the local Public and Continuation Schools and at the Port Hope High School, and entered the Millbrook branch of the Bank of Toronto twelve years ago, in March, 1922. Always a general favorite, keenly interested in and devoted to his chosen profession, Mr. Hutchison received rapid promotion, and after serving in a number of branches at various points in Ontario, was finally moved to Montreal where, at the age of twenty-eight, he was made manager of the Montclare and Sherbrooke branch. Last spring he received a further promotion which carried with it an increase of salary when he was transferred to the Claremont branch as manager.

Eleven months ago the marriage of Mr. Hutchison and Doris Idella Morris, R.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Morris, of Carleton Place, took place, and the illness which proved fatal occurred when Mr. Hutchison joined his wife, who was at her parents' home owing to the serious illness of her mother, the intention being that they should proceed shortly on his annual summer vacation.

Actively interested in athletics, Ronald did much for the promotion of clean sport among the young manhood in whatever community he was resident, and was the first president of the Cosmos Club following its organization during his term in the bank at Millbrook. Brought up in the Presbyterian Church, he was a young man of fine Christian character, standing always for a pure life, and his example could not fail to have a lasting influence on those who were his companions and friends, either in business or pleasure.

Besides the sadly bereaved parents and young widow, the immediate surviving relatives include four brothers: Edwin, of Cavan, and Raymond, Dickson and Jack at home, and one sister, Gwendolyn, also at home. Centreville Presbyterian Church was filled for the funeral on Monday at 2.30 p.m., a short service at the homestead preceding that held in what has been the boyhood place of worship of the deceased, and for which he had always maintained a warm affection, Rev. D. N. McKenzie, B.A., a former minister, conducted the services in the absence of the regular pastor, Rev. H. R. Williams, B.A., absent on vacation.

Among the many beautiful floral tributes were wreaths from Mr. Henwood, general manager of the Bank of Toronto in Canada, Toronto; the manager, Mr. Carson, and staff, head office of the Bank of Toronto; Claremont branch of the Bank of Toronto, Montreal; the Ladies' Aid of Centreville Presbyterian Church; the Cosmos Club, Millbrook, and from a wide circle of relatives and friends. Many letters and telegrams of sympathy were also received from widely varying points. The pall-bearers were all former friends and included Norman Earle, Willis Hall, Roy Rutherford, B. B. Dawson, Bert Armstrong and Eric Hunter. The flower-bearers were cousins or other relatives: Gordon Might, Charles Evans, Dougal Matchett, Archie Deyell, Howard Lancashire, J. and Willan Hutchison, William and John Hutchison, Robert Larmer and others. Interment was in the family burial plot, Centreville Cemetery.

Relatives and friends attended the funeral from Toronto, Hamilton, Carleton Place, Oshawa, Peterborough, Port Hope and other points. Representing the Bank of Toronto were the managers of the Peterborough and Millbrook branches, C. P. Borland and H. A. Kerr.

MORATORIUM ON FOREIGN DEBTS SEEN ONLY HOPE FOR GERMANY

Dr. Schacht Also Warns World of Grave Communist Threat.

POINTS TO U.S. STRIKES.

(By Wade Werner, Associated Press Foreign Staff)

BAD EILSEN, Germany, Aug. 30 (AP)—A "full moratorium' for several years on Germany's foreign debt was proposed by Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Acting Minister of Economics and President of the Reichsbank.

This, Schacht told the International Conference of Agricultural Science, is one of the "heroic" measures needed to lead the world from an economic impasse which is "almost hopeless."

He warned other countries of the "Communist menace" to give force to his argument, citing "farmers' riots" and the "extraordinary wave of strikes" in the United States as "stern warning signals."

"In Germany, the country to suffer first and most severely," he said, "the danger of Bolshevism was averted at the 11th hour. But in many foreign countries there is dangerous unrest.

Different Views Coming

"In foreign countries there was a tendency to be very sceptical of the Communist menace in Germany. If the crisis last much longer more than one foreign country may come to a different view on the basis of its own experience."

Dr. Schecht said economically Germany has finally been so thoroughly sucked dry that even diminished service on her debt is, for the time being, beyond its power. The only way out which remains is to grant it a full moratorium of several years' duration to enable it to recuperate" and become a buyer in the world market.

"In the face of a world situation so serious it is only fair to ask if world economy in general, of foreign creditors in particular, are to be benefitted when to post-war methods of political pressure, weapons of economic pressure are added," he said.

The Way Out

MERCER, Pa., Aug. 30 (C.P.)—W. C. McCoy, president of the Mercer Fair Association, would add some more three-letter words to the United States new deal's list of initials. In a letter to a farmer's publication, he writes:

"We have had very little relief from NRA, CWA, GWD, AAA, ETV., but we believe pig, cow and ewe eventually will brn'g us out of the depression. And maybe hen will help."

$100,000 LOSS.

Newly completed reports from growers and government inspectors today continued to reveal the rapidly-mounting damage caused by frost in the rich tobacco areas of Norfolk and East Elgin County districts. At least one-third of the total acreage has been destroyed and unofficially monetary loss was computed at more than $100,000.

Through the Niagara peninsula peach crops too, were threatened, and around Middlesex County Garden produce had been destroyed, but there was no estimate of the actual damage made. Bonfires were lighted in some peninsula orchards to protect ripening fruit.

The loss in Norfolk county was said to be the heaviest single loss suffered by the industry since established in Ontario. Hail a few weeks ago also took a heavy toll—and this followed arrangements to reduce the usual 27,500 acres to an acreage of 22,000.

By this evening, it was expected the loss would become more severe as growers learned the effect of a day's sunshine on the nipped plants.

Princess Marina Marrying For Love

LONDON, Aug. 30 (CP-Havas)—Princess Marina of Greece, fiancee of Prince George, was determined to wed only for love, The News-Chronicle reported to-day.

"Some time ago the Queen of a Continental power expressed the wish that the princess should marry one of her sons," a friend of Marina told the newspaper.

"The princess pointed out that she did not love the prince and, therefore, could not consent and that she was determined to wait until true love should claim her."

"She had often been told by English friends: 'You must become an English princess like your great-aunt,' but Marina laughed at those hints and treated them good-naturedly."

"Then five years ago she met Prince George. They saw each other several times and gradually discovered that they had many tastes in common."

LONDON, Aug. 30 (AP)—The Foreign Office announced to-day that Great Britain, Italy, and France were campaigning actively for the entrance of Soviet Russia into the League of Nations.

An invitation is expected to be issued to Russia shortly after the League Assembly meets Sept. 10 at Geneva and the Russian acceptance is understood already to be assured.

"The British, French and Italian governments," said the official statement, "are making inquiries through their representatives in various capitals with regard to the attitude of the governments to which they are accredited toward the entry of the Soviet Union in the RELATIONS RESTORED.

Claim Robson Planned to Organize Groups to Instigate Violence.

GUELPH, Ont., Aug. 30 (C.P.)—Efforts to disrupt an agreement between the Popular and Superior Cloak Companies and striking workmen were charged to-day to Mayor R. Beverley Robson of Guelph by S. Kreisman and H. Langer, officials of the Garment Workers' Union.

Kreisman, at a meeting of the board of trade last night announced a conference between company heads, strike representatives and the attorney general had resulted in agreement with Superior Cloak Company to resume operations in its Toronto factory under the old agreement and the Popular Cloak firm to operate in Guelph with a 10 per cent wage increase for workers.

Langer and Kreisman, in a statement following the board of trade meeting, declared Mayor Robson "for political reason best known to himself has seen fit to interfere and disrupt the understanding reached between the firm and the union in the office of the attorney general and has given the firm encouragement to break off negotiations and abrogate the agreement reached and to continue the fight and disturbance in Guelph."

The two union officials further claim they have information the mayor planned to "organize groups of men in the city of Guelph whose purpose it shall be to instigate violence even to the extent of bloodshed in the city of Guelph in order to break the strike."

"We charge the mayor with deliberate intent to break the strike and to obstruct the efforts of the attorney general's department to bring peace into the strike argument with the Superior Cloak Company," the two officials continued. "We intend to ask the minister to publish the memorandum of the agreement reached."

Amicable relations between the company and workers were restored by the agreement, it was said, and the "union intends to stand by the agreement and if necessary to continue the strike until it is brought to a successful conclusion."

Nova Scotia Miners Ask Higher Tariff

TRURO, N.S., Aug. 30 (C.P.). — Continuing its enquiry into economic conditions in Nova Scotia, the Royal Commission headed by Prof. J. H. Jones, sat down here to-day to hear of the difficulties of the industrialists, farmers and dairymen in and about the province's hub town.

For their sitting here the three commissioners had come from Amherst, where yesterday they listened to representations in behalf of the miners and farmers of Nova Scotia. Greater tariff protection for the industry was the chief suggestion of witnesses appearing on behalf of the coal miners.

Hundreds Of Troops Watch As U.S. Moves Dozen Tons Of Gold Worth $1,500,000,000

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 30.—(AP)—One of the greatest movements of gold in the history of the world was under way today.

Ingots of the yellow metal, variously estimated as worth from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 were enroute to the Denver mint from San Francisco mint under a heavy guard of picked soldiers.

While machine-guns bristled from nearby buildings, fire truck searchlights flooded the area, and hundreds of soldiers, postal inspectors and city police surrounded the mint, a dozen mail trucks backed up to a temporary loading platform at the side of the old stone structure last night to take on their precious cargo.

When all were loaded, each with a ton of gold, they moved as a caravan. Heavily guarded and with powerful search lights lighting the way, to the depot where the metal was placed in three mail cars.

GIVE MOOSONEE HOTEL BACK TO INDIANS HEPBURN SAYS

Railway Extension Cost Province $13,000,000—Will Fix Blame.

LEE TO BE DISMISSED.

TORONTO, Aug. 30 (C.P.).—Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn of Ontario said to-day Chairman George W. Lee of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway will be dismissed.

"Mr. Lee has to go," the Premier said. He added disclosures so far in the industry into the road's workings by Armand Racine, Windsor lawyer, "show that he is not a fit and proper person to carry on. The road is due for a complete overhauling."

He declared it was likely the Cochrane-Moosonee extension of the northern line of the road would be continued only as far as Fraserdale, the junction point with a spur to the Abitibi Canyon power plant. He said, however, that no definite decision will be reached until presentation of Mr. Racine's report.

He added the Moosonee Hotel will be closed and would probably be given "back to the Indians."

"We have to fix the responsibility on some one who authorized the extension," said Mr. Hepburn. "It has cost the province $13,000,000 and there is no need for its operation."

The Premier did not announce a successor to Mr. Lee, although he has announced already that Arthur G. Slaght, K.C., noted Toronto Liberal lawyer, will be one of the new commissioners.

The other members of the new commission have yet to be appointed. Every member of the new commission will serve without remuneration.

Chairman Lee received a salary of $6,000 a year. The other two commissioners are Col. J. I. McLaren of Hamilton and Lieut.-Col. L. T. Martin of Ottawa.

"Missionary Enterprise"

NORTH BAY, Ont., Aug. 30.—(CP)—The Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commissioners always were under the impression that the Ontario Government did not expect any return for it's original $30,000,000 outlay for the road "except the surplus."

Col. J. L. McLaren, of Hamilton said he believed back interest should have been paid "when earnings permitted." He was the first witness as the Racine Commission pursued its investigation of the T. N. O. today.

He had maintained there should have been a "true statement" publicly to show the real financial status of the line. He knew the road "came very close to paying interest in 1928, for the first time in its history". When construction of the Moosonee extension was authorized Col. McLaren knew the road "was not paying as a business proposition."

He explained the James Bay extension was justified as a missionary enterprise. Prospects looked brighter then than now."

Still Has Prospects

The Ontario Government he testified, "made the final decisions" on extensions. He believed there "is still a chance" for the James Bay route.

Col. McLaren recalled the Commission anticipated traffic from "both sides of Hudsons Bay." "Did you figure on tapping the traffic

GENERAL STRIKE ORDERS GO OUT QUIT 11.30 P.M.

Every Resource Toward Peaceful Settlement Exhausted Says Chairman.

AFFECTS COTTONS FIRST.

Wool, Silk, Rayon Members Ordered to Stand by for Decision.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30. —(A P)—A general strike in the United States cotton textile industry was called today to become effective at 11:30 p.m., Saturday night.

Workers in the wool, silk, rayon, and synthetic yarn industries were ordered to stand by for further orders. The first working day after the effective date will be Sept. 4.

The strike order follows:

"To all locals:

"Strike of all cotton textile workers will begin at 11:30 o'clock your time Saturday night. Put all previous instructions into effect. Wool, silk and rayon and synthetic yarn membership stand by for further orders. Victory through solidarity.

"Francis J. Gorman, chairman special strike committee, United Textile Workers of America."

The order for the strike, the largest numerically to confront the Roosevelt administration, was sent out over a telegraph key set up in the headquarters of the strike committee. It went to the local union headquarters over the country which in turn will transmit it to their memberships.

A large group of United Textile Workers officials and officers of a number of other labor unions assembled for the occasion.

In a short address to the Labor gathering, Gorman said, "We have exhausted every resource in the direction of peaceful settlement."

"We have been met," Gorman said, "I am sorry to say, by an arrogance on the part of the employers that is amazing in this day and year.

"There are, we know, many employers who disagree with the policy of the Cotton Textile Institute almost as much as we do, but they are powerless for the present.

Protecting Management

"I emphasize to you that we are striking against the management of the industry. The cotton Textile Institute can find nothing better to say in answer to our demands than to accuse us of striking against the government. Surely the Government does not own the mills. They are privately owned, mostly by big corporations.

"I know the American people will not allow these mill owners to hide their exploitation behind a

Montreal Strike Atmosphere Tense

MONTREAL, Aug. 30 (C.P.). — Prospects of an immediate settlement of the strike of 2,500 members of the dress cutters' trade in Montreal appeared dim to-day as picketers patrolled the factory district under the watchful eyes of uniformed and painsclothes policemen.

Fears of further violence following clashes between strikers and strike-breakers several times during the past two days caused police to redouble their vigilance while the tense attitude continued to prevail.

Permission was given by Police Director Fernand Dufresne yesterday for the strikers to post pickets before each factory. The Chief of Montreal's police force also suggested the strikers swear out warrants for those strike-breakers who were using blackjacks in the clashes.

MARINA TO WEAR MOTHER'S GOWN

SCOTLAND YARD GUARD.

BOHINSKO LAKE, Yugoslavia, Aug. 30 (A.P.).—Prince George and Princess Marina of Greece will be married in Westminster Abbey some time this winter, the Associated Press learned to-day.

The exact date of the ceremony will not be determined until the Prince has conferred with King George at Balmoral Castle in Scotland.

The Princess, excited by the prospect of a stately ceremony in the historic abbey, has started acquiring gowns for her trousseau. She plans to go to the altar attired in a wedding dress worn by her mother when she was married to Prince Nicholas at the Russian Emperor's palace 32 years ago.

In this little Yugoslav mountain retreat, where the Prince and Princess are guests of Prince Paul of Yugoslavia, the royal lovers are being guarded day and night by the same stalwart Scotland Yard detective who protected the Mahatma Gandhi when the Indian leader visited London.

The officer, Inspector Harry Evans, one of the crack sleuths of the service, dogs the footsteps of the happy pair, trying to remain at a discreet distance, but close enough to be on hand to chase any intruders.

Evans to-day vetoed all suggestions for an interview with the engaged couple on the grounds that to speak to the pair would be a violation of tradition.

Peterboro Merchant Warns Chain Stores

"There are 1,000 chains in the United States and Canada operating 161,000 stores and they sell a billion dollars worth of goods to the citizens of United States and Canada annually," he stated. "The chain grocery stores alone sell one-third of all the goods sold in the United States," stated Mr. Goring.

CLAIM AUSTRIA IS COMPLETELY IN DUCE'S HANDS

Former Vice Chancellor Says Storhemberg Been in Mussolini's Pay Since '29.

SWUNG DOLLFUSS OVER.

Charges Vatican Among Contributors to Fascist Home Guard.

BY JAMES A. MILLS
(Copyright, 1934, by the A. P.)

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 30. — (AP) — Franz Winkler, former Austrian Vice Chancellor, charged today that Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, present Vice Chancellor, "has been on Mussolini's payroll since 1929."

'Austria today is completely in the hands of Mussolini," said Winkler, a fugitive from his country.

In a startling interview he listed the Vatican as among the contributors to Von Starhemberg's Fascist Heimwehr (home guard) in its fight against Nazism.

Mussolini, he said, smashed negotiations when Germany and Austria were on the point of an "agreement" 18 months ago.

"Von Starhemberg has received not less than $1,000,000 since 1929 to do Italy's dirty work in Austria," Winkler said.

"The first 'judas money' given by Mussolini to Von Starhemberg was split at the time with the notorious German Major Pabt (once a Heimwehr leader, who was expelled from Austria in 1930).

"Von Starhemberg also received from Chancellor Schober of Austria for a period of two years $5,000 monthly from a fund put up by Austrian bankers to fight Communism. Von Starhemberg also drew large sums from funds contributed to Dollfuss (the late Chancellor) by Viennese Jews and the Vatican and used it to maintain Heimwehr troops.

Influenced Dollfuss

"Step by step Italy has secured ever increasing control of Austria," Winkler said. "Through Von Starhemberg Dollfuss was brought under the hypnotic influence of Mussolini.

"For instance, take the case of 50,000 Hirtenberg rifles sent to Austria by Italy in 1933, which excited the whole of Europe. The then Austria Minister to Defense, Karl Vaugoin, wanted to give these rifles to the Austrian army. Mussolini, however, decided to give them to Von Starhemberg.

"Vaugoin resigned in disgust. I would not stand for such foreign dictation so I resigned also."

(Dispatches to North America at the time said Winkler was dropped when Dollfuss reorganized the cabinet along Fascist lines. Winkler was a member of the Democratic Arrarian party and was opposed by Fascists and Nazis alike).

"Mussolini has prevented and always will prevent any reconciliation between Austria and Germany," the former Vice Chancellor said.

YOUTH ARRESTED FOR SHOOTING OF Y SECRETARY

Prisoner Claims He Shot in Self Defense—Janitor's Story Differs.

VICTIM TORONTO MAN.

Argument Starts Over Rate for Room—Youth 25 Cents Short.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30 (C.P.). — Police delved back over the three-year-long Y.M.C.A. record of 22-year-old John Caig to-day, seeking an unrevealed motive for the fatal shooting early Wednesday morning of John Sumner, war-time member of the Y's National Council staff in Canada.

Sumner, who was 52, was shot down in the Bowery branch of the Y, where he had been assistant secretary for three years. He received that appointment about the time Caig first came to the Bowery branch and gained employment there to work out a $95 loan.

Police reported after arresting Caig in the boiler-room of the building a short time after Sumner had been killed, that he told them he "lost his head" during an argument over 25 cents. They said the youth claimed he sought a night's lodging for 40 cents, all the money he had at the time, and 25 cents short of the usual rate.

Authorities also said the youth claimed that after a few words with Sumner, who was acting as night clerk, the veteran official of the institution raised a chair to strike him. Caig reputedly claimed he fired in self defence.

Against this was the declaration of the building watchman that no words passed between the victim and the prisoner, and that Sumner threw a chair only after he had been shot. Checking on this story, the authorities theorized there may have been animosity between Sumner and Caig, although the youth reportedly informed them he "had nothing against" the Y secretary.

Caig was held without bail when he appeared in homicide court. Hearing was set for Sept. 7.

FIRE MARSHALLS CLOSE SESSION

Urge Greater Care by Architects, People in General as Preventive Measure.

G. F. LEWIS, PRESIDENT.

TORONTO, August 30 (C.P.) — Further efforts to combat the fire menace was the aim of the Association of Canadian Fire Marshals as delegates to-day prepared to leave for their home after a two-day session here. George F. Lewis, Deputy Fire Marshal of Ontario, will be the President of the Association for the coming year, with Thomas Baird, Deputy Fire Commissioner of Manitoba, Vice-President, and J. R. Ritchie, Toronto, Secretary-Treasurer.

The meeting was concluded yesterday with election of officers and completion of the business agenda. T. Alfred Fleming, Supervisor of Conservation for the National Board of Fire Underwriters, New York, addressed the delegates, urging proper construction of buildings to combat the fire danger.

Fire - ptevention consciousness among architects and people in general was the greatest need today, he said. Buildings should be so constructed fire could be controlled for the first five minutes after an outbreak. He declared 82 per cent of fires in schools and hospitals started somewhere in heating plants.

Under the association's auspices an investigation into fire loss in the lumber industry will be conducted. The Canadian Lumbermen's Association and Fire Underwriters will also take part in the inquiry.

TEXTILE STRIKE LIKELY BEFORE CLOSE OF WEEK

Including Families of Workers Over 2,000,000 Will be Involved.

WANT 30 HOUR WEEK.

Owners Rumored Arming, and Fortifying Plants Ready for Trouble.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30. (CP).—Organized workers in the United States cotton textile industry awaited from union leaders to-day the formal command to go out on strike probably before the end of the week.

An estimated 425,000 workers, plus possibly 200,000 more engaged in the silk, rayon and woollen mills, will be affected, union leaders said. Including members of workers' families, more than 2,000,000 men, women and children would be involved.

George A. Sloan, chairman of the Cotton Textile Code Authority (a Governmental N.R.A. agency) and also president of the Cotton Textile Institute (the manufacturers' national organization) told The Associated Press to-day that the strike order puts the question of "lawmaking by strike" before the American public.

Gorman, head of the strike committee, denied that the strike is against all codified industry.

"The cotton textile mill owners simply cannot stand up against our charges, and they know it." Gorman said.

Strike Demands

The strike is laid on these demands: 1, Recognition of the union; 2, Abolition of the "stretch-out" system, and 3, A 30-hour week without pay cuts, instead of the present 40-hour week.

Strike leaders say the calling out of the workers will cripple factories from the Canadian border to the deep south.

Manufacturers state there are sufficient stocks on hand in most sections of the industry to last three to eight weeks before the effects of the strike would be felt.

The declination of the mill owners to sit on a "round table" discussion of peace plans yesterday led to the sudden collapse of negotiations and precipitated the decision to call the strike.

Gorman cautioned all workers to

WINKLER STORY IS BRANDED LIE

Roman Official Denies Mussolini Has Strangle Hold on Austria.

Expression of Bitterness.

(By Andrue Berding, Associated Press Foreign Staff.)

ROME, Aug. 30 (AP)—"A lie from beginning to end," was an authoritative reaction here to-day to charges made by Franz Winkler, former Vice-Chancellor of Austria, that his native country is "in the hands of Mussolini."

"The charges," said an authority, "are nothing more or less than an expression of Winkler's bitterness. Premier Mussolini has not subsidized Von Starhemberg (present Vice Chancellor of Austria).

"The very fact of the enormous amount ($1,000,000) mentioned by Winkler is the proof that his statement is not true.

"As to a reconciliation between Austria and Germany, Mussolini always sought to bring that about but only on the basis of two separate and independent states seeking each other's friendship. He did not want a reconciliation which would be equivalent to an anschluss (merger), but he always realized that Germany's friendship, especially economically, would be helpful to Austria."

The general impression here following Winkler's interview was not one of undiluted surprise, at least in reference to one or two points.

F. P. O'Connor Wins In Ayrshire Class

According to results announced to-day, F. P. O'Connor, Scarboro Junction, took a 1st in the 3-years-or-over bull class on "Bargenoch Blue Ribbon," and R. R. Ness and Sons, Howick, Quebec, a second on "Burnside Lucky Boy."

In the 2-year bull class, W. H. Coverdale, Portsmouth, Ontario, took first money with "Crofthead Adjutant." Two first ribbons were awarded Glen Campbell Farms, Dundas, Ontario, one on "Glen Campbell Footline" in the junior yearling bull judging and one on "Glen Campbell Stand Fast" in the senior bull calf class.

"King Bessie," a 2-year Holstein bull entry by the Hon. George S. Henry, Todmorden, Ontario, took a fourth award in its class.

DANZIG

City Hall The Holtz market place

General view of Danzig

DESCRIPTIVE.—Danzig, formerly German, and capital of the province of West Prussia, has been a free city since 1920, when it was so established by the Treaty of Versailles and placed under protection of the League of Nations. The area of the district is about 746 miles, containing some 325 "localities." The population is 236,064.

HISTORICAL.—Chroniclers mention Danzig as far back as the year 997 when Christianity was first preached there. Danes, Swedes, Pomeranians and Teutons fought for its possession. The struggle was won by Teutonic knights in 1310. Danzig prospered until the wars of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, following its declaration as a free city under protection of Poland. The first partition of Poland left it a free city in 1772, and its trade ceased almost entirely. In 1793 it became Prussian. Though the population of Danzig was 90 per cent. German in 1920, creation of a Polish "corridor" through Prussia to connect Poland with the sea was determined by the Treaty of Versailles, and a high commissioner was designated its governing head, with foreign relations and customs tariff to be administered by Poland. Nazis control the Volkstag of 72 members, elected by proportional representation for four years.

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY.—Danzig suffered severely because of the collapse of the German mark in 1923, but adopted a new currency of its own, based on the gulden, equal in value to 19.47 cents. Danzig was prompt to pay its debt to the Reparation Commission, its share of German pre-war debt and the debt for German Government property taken over. Lumber, coal, grain and sugar are the chief exports. There are large shipyards, breweries, distilleries, munitions plants and factories for production of hardware, paper, glass, soap, candles, flour and sugar. Trade of the port has suffered severely recently by diversion of Polish trade to the new port of Gdynia, at the Baltic end of the corridor.

POINTS OF INTEREST.—One of the picturesque sights of the town is the Lange Brucke, a quay extending along the bank of the Mottlau. The city is generally medieval in aspect, old styles of buildings being well preserved. The Church of St. Mary is a noteworthy structure, containing a fine, high altar by Michael and a celebrated picture of "The Last Judgment," by Memling. There is an interesting fourteenth century Gothic Rathaus, or town hall, surmounted by a graceful spire.

Flagpole Kelly Fools 230-Pound Officer But Firemen Nab Him For Abandonment

UNION CITY, N.J., Aug. 30.—(A.P.).—"Yoo hoo," called Mrs. Kelly, craning skyward. "Throw me down some money."

That was three days ago—so Mrs. Kelly told police—and her husband, John J. (Flagpole) Kelly, failed her. She said he hopped from flagpole to flagpole, earning as much as $100 a day, while she and their seven children lived in want.

So Detective Hugh Billington stood at the foot of a theatre's flagpole yesterday and shouted. "Hey, Kelly, come on down. I've got a warrant for your arrest."

"Go away," said the sitter, "can't you see I'm busy."

"Be reasonable," said Billington. "I'll have to come up there if you're not."

Kelly reasoned otherwise, however. If he came down before Saturday his $500 contract for five days of perching would be void.

"Come and get me," Billington said he heard "Flagpole" say. But Billington weighs 230 pounds. He didn't go.

Then some bright mind suggested the fire department. Up rolled a big truck, up went shiny ladders, up climbed four husky smoke-eaters—and down came Kelly.

Kelly, who is not to be confused with Alvin Aloysius (Shipwreck) Kelly, is awaiting a hearing to-day on abandonment charges. The theatre says none of the Kelly family will get the $500.

WOMAN KILLER AND CELLMATE ESCAPE

Mrs. Witte, Convicted of Slaying Husband, Crawls Out of Window.

DWEIGHT, Ill., Aug. 30.—Prison authorities revealed today that Mrs. Vera Witte of Freeport, serving a sentence for the murder of her husband, has escaped from the state reformatory for women here.

Mrs. Witte and another inmate, Beulah Bigger of Chicago, crawled through a window of the cottage in which they were imprisoned some time Wednesday night or Thursday morning. The windows are not barred.

Miss Bigger was convicted of robbery. Mrs. Witte, who was 26 when sentenced in 1931, tired of her 55-year-old husband, William H. Witte. Several times she tried to divorce him. Then she took the law into her own hands and shot him dead in front of the Freeport courthouse.

No Depression For Pansy

NEW YORK, Aug. 30 (CP)—Mrs. Ottolie Gobel Moore, daughter of the late Adolf Gobel, meat packer, came back from Europe third class — but her dog travelled first class.

While Mrs. Moore, her five-year-old daughter Dede, a maid and 15 trunks sat below, the dog "Pansy" occupied a kennel on the top deck, where a valet was in attendance with fancy biscuits, cream chicken and other delicacies.

Mrs. Moore's fare was $118; the dog's $201. It was the depreciated United States dollar, Mrs. Moore explained, that necessitated the saving. They arrived yesterday from the south of France.

COTS INSTALLED AT COUNTY GAOL

Demand Made by Provincial Secretary's Department Being Effected.

Eighteen new cots have been installed at the County Gaol within the past few days, replacing the old straw palliasses upon which male prisoners were formerly obliged to sleep, and which were condemned by Gaol Inspector, James A. Norris.

Purchase of the cots was sanctioned by the Peterborough County Council at the June Sessions, in accordance with a demand made by the Deputy Provincial Secretary in a letter to Sheriff F. J. A. Hall.

According to Colonel T. D. Johnston, governor of the gaol, the cots were forwarded here from the Ontario Reformatory at Guelph, and it is presumed that they were made in the institution workshops.

Other demands made by the Provincial Secretary's Department, which included interior re-decoration of the gaol, are being complied with, it was stated by the gaoler. The interior paint job has been started, and is being done by prison labor.

KIWANIS EFFORT MERITS SUPPORT

Large Number of Prizes to be Drawn For To-night.

It is but a matter of a few hours before some lucky person becomes proud possessor of a Monitor Top Refrigerator valued at $310, which is the major prize to be drawn for at Brock Street Summer Gardens to-night at the Kiwanis Street Karnival and Dance.

In addition to the first prize there are three other major prizes and an additional 16 awards in connection with the drawing, besides a number of choice door prizes, which have got to be won by some lucky persons. Everyone attending the big event tonight, which is being staged in aid of Kiwanis Underprivileged Child Activities, will have an equal chance of sharing in the door prizes, while everyone who has purchased tickets whether they live in this city or elsewhere have twenty chances of winning with each ticket.

It is a monster effort for a worthy work, and the Kiwanis are looking for generous support for the project which is designed to provide funds to carry on Jackson Park Health Camp next summer as well as other charitable activities throughout twelve months of the year.

Door prizes on display in The Examiner windows on George street, include an auto rug donated by J. J. Turner and Sons; Telechron electric clock donated by A. B. Gates, president of the club; Westclox electric clock, donated by Herb Cranford; half cord of hardwood donated by H. R. Scott of Scott Coal and Lumber Company; compact, donated by Percy Bond; auto mirror clock, donated by Ivan Lillico; 1 month's pass to Capital Theatre, donated by Manager J. A. Stewart.

A red fox fur, donated by William Lech and Sons, is to be the object of a special drawing.

Demand for new passenger automobiles in the Capetown district of South Africa is far greater than the supply.

Actresses Disagree Over N. U. Girl Who Spurned Film Career for Love

Love or a career—which would a talented girl choose?

There's a girl in Chicago who answered that question—and, to set your mind at rest, she answered it with:

"No! No career. Just love!"

She is Celeste Wehrheim, Northwestern graduate, who is engaged to marry Matthew Lear, attorney. Said she:

I wouldn't lose my fiance for the greatest career in pictures. If I went to Hollywood and was a success, it probably would ruin my romance. And if I wasn't a success, Matthew would be put in a position of being second choice. And that would never do—because he couldn't be.

"Life may be a gamble, but I'm sure of my present status. I want children and I can't risk the unhappiness of losing them."

Miss Wehrheim explained.

"This girl made a mistake because marriage may come at any time later in life, while a career must be seized while the opportunity presents itself."

"It all depends on the girl," was the view of Louise Fazenda and Mary Brian.

EARLIER EXAMINATIONS.

One of the first announcements to come from Hon. Dr. L. J. Simpson since he took over the portfolio of Minister of Education was his declaration that the dates for writing departmental examinations are to be moved forward.

In late years these examinations ran over into July, a change that has not only caused inconvenience to a large number of families whose vacation period was correspondingly curtailed but was unfair to the pupils themselves, who were called upon to write at a period of decidedly hot weather.

There was another weakness, too, in this system of late examinations in that it delayed the announcement of results until a comparatively short time before the re-opening of school, and left very little opportunity to plan for future courses.

In deciding that in future these examinations will be held in June Hon. Dr. Simpson has earned the gratitude of thousands of collegiate institute pupils as well as of the heads of families whose plans for an early vacation have been sadly handicapped in recent years because these school tests interfered with the schedule.

There never was any great demand for delaying departmental examinations, and the return to the old order will be appreciated generally.

TO-NIGHT'S CARNIVAL.

The Kiwanis Carnival to-night should be one of the outstanding events of the year in view of the reputation the club has for staging worth-while functions of this kind, and more especially in view of the fact that the proceeds will be devoted entirely to financing the Kiwanis social service activities.

If the club has accomplished nothing more than the work it has been carrying on in connection with the Jackson Park health camp it would have earned the generous support of the community.

Naturally under the conditions that have existed in recent years the task of building up under-nourished children has become increasingly important, and this summer, more than ever before, this work has been urgently needed.

Scores of children have been materially helped by the treatment given them at the Jackson Park camp, by the nourishing food, the rest periods and the supervised play that have been provided, and they will start back to school next week in decidedly better condition than when the holiday period began.

This is work of the greatest possible value, and it merits the financial backing and the moral support of Peterborough citizens generally.

To-night's event is depended upon to produce the bulk of the funds required for the health camp and other Kiwanis efforts, and it is essential therefore that the response of the public should be generous.

This chance of a night's fun and entertainment, coupled with the assurance that the money raised thereby will be devoted to a most humanitarian movement, should be enough to attract thousands to the Kiwanis Carnival.

THE NOISE EVIL.

London's quiet period has had its first try out, and the general verdict seems to be that the experiment will prove a gratifying success.

Under this ordinance drivers of motor cars are forbidden to sound their horns between 11 o'clock at night and early morning, the regulation being expected to give sleepers a chance to get in a few hours without having their rest broken in on by loud tooting of automobile horns.

There is much common sense in this law, and perhaps the ruling of the metropolis will be followed elsewhere.

Certainly there are too many horn players in the ranks of automobile drivers, and it is refreshing to note a movement to exercise some control over their activities in this respect, even if it only applies to a few hours through the night.

It might be possible to extend the regulation to include unnecessary sounding of automobile horns at any time; in this connection a horrible example might be made of the two major offenders, the blithe lad who, when he finds himself held up by a line of traffic, tries to help out the situation by persistent horn-tooting, and his fellow criminal, the motorist who draws up in front of the home of his lady love and blatantly announces his presence by a solo on the motor horn.

These are two peace-disturbers who might well be dealt with in the interest of a long suffering public; however, although the mills of the gods grind slowly, they grind exceeding small, and the news from London would seem to indicate that the grinding progress has been begun.

A JOINT RESPONSIBILITY.

"Is beer needed, even by those who need beer, over so many hours of the day and night?

"The makers and sellers of beer should not forget that it was the late Government in its final session of the Legislature which passed the beer law, but left it unproclaimed, and that the present Government, according to promise before the elections, put it into effect. The present Government, however, did not draft the law and is under no pledge to perpetuate the beer-selling plan of the late Government if it proves to be unworkable. It can be amended, the regulations may be changed as the need for doing so is made evident and when the Legislature meets the whole question will be under discussion."—Toronto Star.

While the Star is quite right in declaring that the present Government did not draft the beer law, the explanation it gives in the paragraph quoted above does not tell the whole story.

To keep the record clear it should be understood that the changes in the Liquor Control Act, passed, but not proclaimed, by the Henry administration, merely established the principle of sale by the glass in standard hotels, restaurants, clubs, etc., but the details were left as a matter of regulation to the Liquor Control Board.

The Hepburn Government, through its liquor control commissioner, E. G. Odette, is solely responsible for the regulation under which beer and wine are now being sold; it set the hours for sale, decided how many licenses should be granted and the conditions of sale, and it has the power in its own hands to limit the time for selling, the number of beer outlets and to make any changes in the system it sees fit.

There is no need to wait, as the Star intimates, for the Legislature to meet to correct any abuses that are apparent in the present system; it is all a matter of regulation, and the liquor control commissioner can iron out any weaknesses over night if he decides that changes are necessary.

The old Government must stand responsible for introducing sale by the glass, but so far as the working out of that system is concerned the Hepburn administration will have to take the blame or the credit as the case may be.

AGITATORS BUSY.

The strike spirit seems to be spreading in some of the eastern cities, which are fortunate enough to have factories which are able to keep running, and which are thus providing employment and contributing to the gradual improvement in business affairs.

It is a significant thing that in practically every case these strikes are fomented and promoted by professional agitators, who pose as the friend of the working man, and who do not hesitate to proclaim their allegiance to Communism. They encourage the worker to quit his job—but they don't quit their own jobs—the continuance of their "unemployment" is assured when they succeed in raising trouble. If they couldn't "work" the gullible worker, they themselves would be out of work.

It is difficult to understand why Canadians allow themselves to be led by professional agitators. These gentry realise that the return of prosperity would be fatal to their ideals and aspirations. They can thrive only when unemployment reigns, and thus when things begin to pick up, as it were, they do their best to retard returning prosperity by making it difficult for industry to keep in operation.

The Canadian workman should, in street parlance, "take a tumble to himself." He should look beyond the revolutionary talk of the Communistic agitator and realise that his only chance for security is in the display of the co-operative spirit. If he has differences with his employers a round table discussion will do infinitely more for everyone concerned than revolutionary methods which only destroy confidence, goodwill and the possibility of peaceable arbitration.—Chatham News.

STRANGE THINGS.

"It seems strange," says the Brockville Recorder and Times, "that five million people should be in danger of death from famine in China at a time when hundreds of millions of bushels of grain are stored in other countries of the world awaiting a market."

It does seem strange.

But we don't have to go to China to see strange things.

Doesn't it seem strange that so many people of this city who have more and to spare maintain an indifferent personal attitude towards the problems of those who are out of work, unable to get jobs and forced to accept relief from the city, while the Council, naturally and properly sympathetic towards the taxpayer who finds difficulty in meeting his annual tax bills, worries over the task of finding the money without bringing undue hardship to bear upon householders, many of whom are in almost as undesirable a position as the unemployed themselves?

We refer to the man who finds no difficulty paying his taxes and who, in spite of the difficult economic conditions, is continuing to prosper and save money.

But probably the fault isn't his. Maybe he is waiting for someone to come along and show him his duty with regard to unemployment and civic financial problems.

In that event he will have his chance.

The City Council is considering the advisability of opening up a voluntary welfare relief fund. In fact, it seems certain they will do it, for there appears to be no other way out of the problem of adding burdens to the taxpayers in general.

This was done a few years ago, and it met with a liberal response. There is need for more liberality to tide the city over the last remaining months of the unemployment season. We believe it will be the last, for there has been a general upturn in economic conditions which is increasing day by day—although it is not yet pronounced enough to completely meet the needs of the situation to-day.

We believe the people of this city who can afford to do so will subscribe to this fund. Chatham people always "come across" in the pinches and meet all emergencies.

Let the fund be opened and let it turn out to be a successful exemplification of the goodwill, civic loyalty and humane tendencies which are so pronounced in the nature of the Chatham people.—Chatham News.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Make sure the Kiwanis Carnival to-night is a big success. The money goes to a most deserving cause.

The man who bought ex-Premier Henry's car will find that, as in the case of a new shirt, it is not the initial cost but the upkeep that counts.

It was too cold for the marathon swim at Toronto yesterday. Even for $5,000 athletes cannot do their stuff when the water is frigid enough to turn them into human icicles.

Banff is boasting of a summer ice skating rink, but if the weather in the east does not improve there may be any number of places able to make a similar claim.

Hollywood producers protest that the movies, instead of inspiring crime, are one of its greatest deterrents. Well, "Manhattan Melodrama" finished Dillinger.—Border Cities Star.

ON THIS DATE
A DAY IN CANADIAN HISTORY
By Fred Williams

AN EARLY TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

On this date, in 1836, one of the first temperance conventions in the history of Upper Canada was held in the Presbyterian church at St. Catharines. Delegates were present from Thorold, Lundy's Lane, Pelham, Smithsville, Beamsville, Grantham, Gainsborough, Niagara, Allanburgh and St. Catharines.

That was a time of great temperance activity throughout the province, the thinking people of which had begun to realize the evils of what practically amounted to free trade in whiskey and rum. This St. Catharines convention was followed by another at Toronto on September 28 when delegates were present from thirteen societies. A provincial society was formed; the government was asked to curtail the number of distilleries; reduction of the number of taverns was requested; the clergy were asked to preach the advantages of temperance to the youth (this meaning the males, for no woman then ever thought of entering beverage parlors) and it was suggested that the cause could be materially aided by the opening of inns on temperance principles.

Probably the first of these temperance inns was opened at Chippawa in 1836 by Charles March, who advertised that "Every exertion will be made to render the establishment in reality 'The Travellers' Home' undisturbed by the noise and turmoil incident to those places more or less where spirituous liquors are sold."

There was distinct progress throughout the Niagara district. William Hamilton Merritt was a strong apostle of temperance and insisted that toasts at the annual Welland canal dinners should be drunk in water or other non-intoxicating liquors. He had plenty of trouble with drinking among the workers on the waterway, and paid premiums to abstainers. The political troubles of '37-38 stayed the development of the temperance crusade by the seed sown had its harvest in later years.

ALL OF US
(By Marshall Maslin.)

OUR BLIND STREETS.

You're driving along and you start to make a turn into another street.

But there at the corner, you see a sign that warns you it is a "blind street". . . . If you go up that street, you'll merely have to turn around and come back, wasting time and gasoline. Nobody you know lives on that street; it doesn't go anywhere; you have no business on it. . . . So you don't make the turn.

That's obvious enough. So obvious that it's hardly worth mentioning.

And yet there are many blind streets and we make the turns and go along them, sometimes fully aware that they ARE streets that don't go anywhere.

Envy is a blind street. Envy makes you sick, makes you hard, leads to no benefits at all.

Malice is a blind street. We say bitter things about people, half ashamed of ourselves as we say them, and they bounce back and hit us in the face.

Revenge is a blind street. It has been called blind justice, but it is no justice at all. Revenge is supposed to make things even and to right the injury you have received. But it does not; instead it tilts the scale against you.

Self-indulgence is a blind street. You do things that you know are harmful to you, knowing all the time that you will regret them, but you do them just the same.

Self-pity, another form of self-indulgence, is a blind street. It draws down the corners of your mouth and inspires distaste, rather than pity, in other people.

Anger is a blind street. Even what we like to call "righteous anger" is blind, and has the same effect on us as anger that we all deplore.

Selfishness is a blind street. It turns in upon us and strips us of the liking of our friends.

There are blind streets all around us and though they are not marked with signs that a child can read, nevertheless we KNOW they are blind and will never take us into the open country of a happier life. . . . Then why do we take them?

SOIL DRIFTING UNDER CONTROL
4,000 Acres of Light Land Cultivated Successfully in Saskatchewan.

REGINA, Aug. 30.—(CP).—Strip farming—Saskatchewan's latest attempt to control soil drifting—was held successful this summer by J. Freeman, secretary-treasurer of the rural municipality of Bushville where 4,000 acres of light land were farmed in narrow strips to alternate crop and summer fallow.

This spring the "black-blizzards" of the prairies whirled tons and tons of top soil from Western Canada farms and deposited it elsewhere. In many cases fence posts were nearly covered by the soil drifts. It was the prospect of further drifting that led to formation of the Better Farming Society in this municipality and the inauguration of strip farming.

Discussing the new method, Mr. Freeman said: "Our experience in cultivating 4,000 acres of light sandy soil, especially subject to drifting, has been that where the strips are not too wide it has held the land in place. Farmers are gradually realising something must be done, and I feel quite certain we will see all light lands farmed in this way eventually. Strip farming cleans the land of weeds and conserves moisture providing the strips are north and south and only about eight or 10 rods wide."

MAGISTRATE ENDS LENGTHY CAREER
W. W. O'Brien, 75, First Engaged in Police Duties in Ireland.

PORT ARTHUR, Ont., Aug. 30 (C.P.).—Closing a career of police and magisterial work dating back to June 1, 1877, Magistrate W. W. O'Brien left the courthouse here today as a civilian, placed in retirement by reorganisation of the Ontario government.

The 75-year-old retiring magistrate embarked on his police career at the tender age of 18 years when he joined the force of the Royal Irish Constabulary as a constable. In his 57 years of work he has passed judgment on, or committed to trial before higher courts, criminals charged with every breach of the Criminal Code with the exception of high treason.

Because he wished to marry, young O'Brien left the Irish Constabulary for the Lancashire Constabulary, where there was no ban against wedlock. He remained there for seven years and joined the Winnipeg police force in 1886, serving as a constable for three years.

His next police work was for the Canadian Pacific Railway during construction at the Head of the Lakes. Later he joined the Fort William city police force, serving as assistant chief for many years.

On August 21, 1905, Mr. O'Brien was appointed district magistrate, his territory extending from White River, Ont., to the Manitoba boundary, and then in 1921 he was transferred to the position of Port Arthur magistrate.

"I suppose I should really have no regrets on retiring," he said. "Rheumatism has bothered me for many years now—the result of sleeping out in the bush during my years as a constable here—but I can't help feeling sort of lonely. I know I shall miss police courts."

GRATEFUL TO THE HOSPITAL.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir: I wish through your paper to express my appreciation of the care and skill extended to my husband while a patient in the Nicholls Hospital, Peterborough, for a period of fourteen weeks, during which he underwent a serious operation.

I believe he owes his life, not only to the skill of the surgeons who performed the operation, but also to the untiring and devoted ministrations of the nurses who so faithfully and cheerfully helped him during convalescence.

As a frequent visitor to the Hospital I was impressed with the environment, general air of efficiency, and helpful sympathy which prevailed at all times, and I cannot adequately express the gratitude I feel towards the individual members of the entire staff. I sincerely wish the Nicholls Hospital "God-Speed. Yours truly,

MRS. FRED W. McGILL.

BRAMPTON, ONTARIO.

The early history, or beginning, of Brampton is not known. Brampton was a very small place in 1823 and John Elliott, who is credited with the first settlement, and assuredly was responsible for its progressiveness, is credited with being its founder.

Most of those who settled in Brampton and in the farm lands for many miles around came chiefly from North Ireland and their descendants live here in large numbers.

Among the early settlers evidently was one Englishman, for local legend has it that the town was named after the town of the same name in England.

Popular Astronomy
THE SUN
BY H. W. L. MAHOOD

By H. W. L. MaHood

Minute observation by the largest telescope is over difficult. In one of our recent articles about the Sun's surface, mention was made of its agitated exterior. The statement also was made that this tremendously heated surface is sown thickly with very fine particles somewhat cooled. This conclusion is an inference rather than a discovery. The most powerful telescope possible with a magnifying power equal to minute results could not overcome the effects of the moving, turbulent atmospheric sea that surrounds the Earth. Telescopes are placed on lofty places. By this means some of the atmosphere difficulties can be overcome-come. But none could be placed high enough to overcome all.

To study closely any planet the light of the Sun is indispensable. The question about the habitability of Mars and other planets has arisen in many an equiring mind. Some have asked whether the Sun is inhabited by any kind of life. The latter question is easily answered. On the surface of the Sun matter is reduced to its chemical state. Any life organism would be destroyed instantly. The hardest known mineral would burst into a flame in a moment.

But the question persists—are there not some cooler, protected regions beneath the surface where life could exist? Sir William Herschel was in doubt about the answer for many years. But when the immense amount of radiation was at last determined the answer was no longer in doubt. The Spectroscope has come to verify the conclusions already reached. The Spectroscope searches out the nature of molecules. If any of my boy students of Astronomy have ever seen a molecule, please let me know about it. If the scientist finds it difficult to split an atom, or to see one, he can note the indications of oxygen in the Sun. The farther in we go the hotter it gets. The Sun holds no cool, shady place. It is just heat and light.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE REVIEWS

ONTARIO GRAIN.

Approximate prices track shipping point—Wheat, 89c to 90c; oats, 35c to 36c; barley, 56c to 60c; corn, 85c to 86c; rye, 55c to 57c; buckwheat, 55c to 56c.

MONTREAL PRODUCE

Egg prices advanced and cheese quotations were slightly lower on the Montreal produce and dairy market yesterday.

Fresh No. 1 butter in car lots or less was up 1½c a pound, unchanged. Small lots to the retail trade brought 20½c to 21c a pound for solids and 21½c to 22c a pound for prints. Receipts were 1,936 boxes.

On the cheese market, Ontario colored was steady at 10½c to 10¾c a pound, while Quebec cheese declined ½c, the price being 9¾c to 9¾c a pound. Arrivals totalled 2,335 boxes.

Eggs of the higher grades firmed ½c, graded shipments in car lots or less being quoted at 20c to 23½c a dozen for A large, up ½c; 21c to 21½c a dozen for A medium, up ½c; 18c for B and 16c for C. Receipts totalled 554 cases.

Potatoes were 50c per 80-pound bag for new Quebecs No. 1 and 40c per 80-pound bag for No. 2.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

A revival of bullish speculative interest in the grain market yesterday was responsible for sharp advances of prices, although profit-taking sales held the upward trend in check.

At the peak of buying wheat had gained as much as 1¾c a bushel and corn 1¾c, but closing prices showed selling in the bulge developed. Wheat registered a net increase of ¾c to 1¼c for the day, and corn was up ¾c to 1¼c.

Wheat finished at $1.03¾ to $1.03¾ for September deliveries, $1.03¾ to $1.03¾ for new December, and $1.05¼ to $1.05¾ for May. September corn reached 79c, December 80¾c to 80¼c, and May 83¾c to 83¼c. Oats showed a net gain of ¼c to ¾c, rye was ¾c to 1¾c higher, and barley was unchanged to 2¾c up.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

Havoc wrought to the price structure by pressure of hedging sales, which for more than two weeks has overhung the market, was checked in yesterday's session of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. Wheat futures prices closed ¾c to ¼c higher.

Bolstered by the support offered by export sales of more than 1,500,000 bushels of Canadian wheat, prices scored gains of as much as 1¼ cents. Though the advance was largely swept away by the hedging sales, which deluged the pit near the close, the market generally presented a better front than during the past few days.

Futures traded buoyantly for most of the session, holding the advance until near the finish, and the October option closed at 81¾c, December 82¾c to 82½c and May 86½c.

Trading in cash grains was slow, though demand for top grades of wheat continued good. Offerings, however, were scarce, and spreads closed practically unchanged. Coarse grains futures turned higher in sympathy with wheat.

Early Christmas At Northern Port

CHURCHILL, Man., Aug. 30 (CP) — Santa Claus, the rotund red-cheeked personality, who comes out of the north on his gift-giving [illegible]'s every Christmas, has started his 1934 trek into the hearts of Canadian children already. And to 70 Chipewyan Indian children here St. Nick's visit was just as welcome in August as it would be if he came down their chimney in December.

Rev. L. F. Rowe, Anglican missionary, was Santa's emissary who on August 9, gave out the Yuletide gifts just before the Indians started for their winter trapping grounds in the far north-west.

The Indian tots received toys, dolls, games, puzzles, knives, tops and biscuits and departed to the crags of old Fort Churchill to play with their new possessions until their parents should decide it was time to move to their winter camps.

A Thought

LIFE SATISFYING

Whether one regards life as a garden or a wilderness, there must be a path if one is to travel any reasonable distance and reach any given goal. One need not be a Christian—I, a Christian, insist upon that freedom—but one must adopt some intelligent, inclusive scheme of life, some religion of completeness, if one is to make life satisfying, or even tolerable. Religion touches upon the future, regards the past, but its main concern is always with today; let me repeat that religion is a way of life, a more perfect way of a richer and more adequate life—Handford Henderson.

GAME AGAIN CALLED.

CANTERBURY, Eng., Aug. 30 (CP Cable).—Continued rains and a saturated wicket today again caused postponement of the touring Australians' cricket game with Kent County players. The game opened yesterday and was discontinued on account of the wet weather after the visiting bowlers had dismissed two Kent batters for 21 runs.

MONTREAL POWER ACTIVE.

TORONTO, Aug. 30 (CP).—The industrial section of the Toronto Stock Exchange today staged a preholiday exhibition of trading. Sales volume was low and prices sagged after yesterday's heavy session. International Nickel was the heavy trader but it finished fractionally lower. Other features provided by the continued strength of Westons, up 1-2, and action in Montreal Power which led the utilities for the first time in months.

Market Closing On All Exchanges

WALL STREET.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30 (AP).—Stock movements were erratic today. Active selling unsettled the list in the second hour, but prices rallied in the afternoon under quiet buying in metals and other specialties. Santa Fe almost cancelled a 2-point loss, but the rails were rather heavy. U. S. Smelting moved up a point net. American Telephone and American Can were steady. The late tone was moderately irregular. Transfers approximated 650,000 shares.

God's Lake.

Underground development work at the God's Lake Gold Mines is gradually opening up new ore sections. Eldon H. Brown, mine manager, reports that the drift on the first level shows an ore length 261 feet with 5.3 feet width and carrying .67 oz. gold per ton. On the second level the drift shows 90.6 feet of ore, 4.6 feet wide, with values of .49 oz. The above assays are said to be after the free gold has been eliminated. In addition to the general underground development program, flat drill holes are being pushed ahead into the drift and side walls. Drilling ahead of the drift for 96 feet and into the walls for 5.2 feet have given core values of .49 oz.

So far, however, Mr. Brown states, the true width of the vein on the two levels has not been definitely determined as work is confined to drift width. Later crosscuts will be put into determine the full width of the vein, which is believed to average between 8 and 10 feet.

BROKERS' OPINIONS.

Horneblower & Weeks: "The market should shortly provide a definite clue as to the likelihood of its next important movement and until it does so, we would be inclined to maintain a strictly trading attitude toward committments.

Cassell & Co.: "Difficult as it is to base an opinion on the market's action we continue in the belief that from a trading viewpoint stocks may be bought on any further decline."

Coming Events.

Thus far the improvement in stock prices from July and early August lows has not exceeded the bounds of a normal technical rally. The supply area found at the 99 level for the Dow Jones industrials will have to be decisively hurdled before the majority of traders are convinced that an important advance is to be staged.

Over the near term, speculative attention will most likely be fixed upon individual situations. The day to day news will play an important part during intermediate movements of stock prices. Reactions will most likely be of limited proportions since most of those now long of stocks will sit tight hoping that the seasonal expansioff of trade will measure up to expectations and knowing that long positions in certain issues are good insurance against money uncertainties.

Rapid Development In Gold Range Mines

A. V. Hannam, vice-president of Gold Range Mines, Limited, property near Schreiber, Ontario, reports that development work is proceeding rapidly on the company's property with the present crew.

Plans are now approved for the installation of a compressor and a shipment of five tons of ore is being made to Ottawa for the purpose of determining the plan and type of mill most suited to the ore. Installation of the mill is contemplated before the freeze-up and production before the end of the year is the obective. In order to accomplish this the directors have decided to double the crew of miners immediately.

He reports a multiplicity of veins crossing the hill and several new veins have been discovered, chief of which is a quarts vein 2 ft. 6 in. wide running north and south, heavily mineralized. This vein will be intersected in the adit of No. 1 tunnel. A pumping unit is being installed for additional water supply.

U. K. CATTLE.

OTTAWA, Aug. 30 (CP).—A cable to the department of agriculture reported the arrival of the S.S. Manchester Producer with a load of Canadian cattle at Birkenhead. The shipment was landed in good condition, and consisted mostly of medium quality stock. There was a better trade this week, and everything was readily sold, eastern cattle ranging from 13.2 to 14.8 cents per pound, dressed weight, including offal, and westerns from 12.7 to 14.3.

Manufacturing is prospering in Brazil.

GIVE MOOSONEE TO THE INDIANS

from Baffins Land?" asked Commissioner Racine sardonically.

"No, we didn't look that far ahead" responded the colonel.

There is a channel at Moosonee for smaller craft, Col. McLaren said. There had been "speculation about the supposed mineral deposits east and west of Hudsons and James Bays. He admitted he thought "gradually, the T. and N. O. could build up trade in the Hudson Bay region. Prospecting through the air is not possible by boat, he contended.

Col. McLaren considered the government should give the line "another two or three years trial."

"That would mean another $500,000 deficit," reminded Commissioner Racine.

Col. McLaren asked for "a limited service to give the district a chance with the upgrade of business." The depression, he asserted, had slowed up prospecting.

"There is no reasonable means of communication for the ordinary person because of the swift moving rivers," added Col. McLaren.

"They go in by canoe and there are airplanes being used," rejoined Commissioner Racine.

Col. McLaren "always preached economy after safety," he declared.

Questioned about possible economies in staffs, both headquarters and operating, Col. McLaren said he did not enquire "into the matter as a whole." He considered individual cases as they came up.

Bonus By Ferguson.

Several years ago Col. McLaren was informed by Chairman George W. Lee of the special $2,500 grant to the chairman on authority of former Premier G. Howard Ferguson.

Col. McLaren did not consider it within his purview to dispute or question this grant "authorized by the senior authority."

Bonuses granted by the commission to T. and N. O. executives were considered justified by Col. McLaren "in view of the representations made to the commission by Chairman Lee." The chairman's recommendations were accepted.

Col. McLaren said he did not not know Chairman Lee had received any bonus aside from the special expense account of $2,500 awarded by Premier Ferguson.

FACES EVICTION CAN'T GET HOUSE

Family Advertises For "Christian Landlord."

Faced with a court order for their immediate eviction and unable to find a landlord who will accept relief rent, William McIlwain, his wife and family, 240 Princess street, are to-day advertising in The Examiner for assistance. They are seeking a house owner whose "Christian principles" will enable him to help them in their dilemma.

The owner of the home from which they are about to be evicted is a resident of the United States, Mrs. J. A. Chouinard, who, through the National Trust Company, Limited, has secured the order of their removal. The eviction order was effective August 16, but, through the efforts of C. W. Holland, former president of the local unemployed workers' organization, execution has been delayed up to the present. Sheriff F. J. A. Hall said this afternoon, however, that it would be necessary to carry out the order to-day or tomorrow.

Mr. McIlwain claims to have canvassed every possibility of renting a house in a diligent search for more than six weeks. There are many vacant houses renting at very low figures, but their owners refuse flatly to accept relief rent for the lodgings, he states. He claims further that among landlords who have turned him down are several quite active in Christian religious work.

Mr. McIlwain has been out of work for a long time and has no source of income beyond relief. He has four children, two girls and two boys, but none is able to contribute to the support of the household.

Endeavoring to assist in the situation, Mr. Holland wrote to Attorney-General Roebuck seeking his intervention. A reply from Deputy-Attorney General I. A. Humphries advised that the Attorney-General was not in a position to stay an eviction order. Word reached Mr. Holland from the secretary of the Provincial Relief Department, however, advising that that Department was taking up the matter with the Peterborough relief authorities. No action has been taken as yet by the local authorities.

High-Priced Stocks Hold Mart Interest

TORONTO, Aug. 30 (CP).—Trading in gold stocks provided the interest on the mining section of the Toronto Exchange again today. Despite a firm tone, volume of sales was low. The day's features were supplied by the higher-priced issues and by Central Patricia which shot up to 1.17 for a new 1934 high. Interest in other metals and oils remained at a low ebb. Teck Hughes, Hollinger, Dome, McIntyre and Lake Shore were among the prominent traders, and they held fairly well to high prices reached Wednesday.

GENERAL STRIKE

cloak of Government protection.

"If the mills supported the Government's policy there would be no need for a strike. They have defeated the Government's purpose in the textile industry.

"We are striking against management and our purpose is to correct the unbearable practices of management."

From Charles S. Zimmermand, manager of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, came a pledge of full "moral and financial support" from 30,000 workers in the Dressmakers' Union local of New York City and congratulations were received from the Oil Workers' International Union.

Up to The People

(Copyright, 1934, by The Associated Press)

NEW YORK, Aug. 30 (AP)—The Cotton Textile Code authority put the question of "lawmaking by strike' up to the United States public and the 682 industries under NRA codes to-day.

Speaking as a Government official—as chairman of the Cotton Textile Code authority—George A. Sloan told the Associated Press today that the American people are now faced with a demand "that consideration be given to amending a law under a threat of force."

Sloan, who is also President of the Cotton Textile Institute, refused yesterday to confer with union leaders of the United Textile Workers of America in an effort to prevent the calling out of 600,000 cotton textile workers in a general strike by noon to-day.

"The bitterest injury will be inflicted on the public," he said today. "At the best it is industrial warfare, and it almost inevitably runs into intimidation and physical warfare.'

Sloan stated that the strike was pointed not only against the cotton industry but against all codified industry.

"Under the NRA there are 682 codes of fair competition," he pointed out. "They all have provisions for hours and wages which, like those of the Cotton Textile Code, have had the careful consideration of labor, consumers and industry before approval by the President."

SIGNS ON WALL FOR McCAUGHRIN

Knew Long Before Magistrate's Retirement He Must Be Removed Says Finlayson.

"CADI KNEW IT, TOO."

TORONTO, Aug. 30 (CP)—William Finlayson, former Minister of Lands and Forests in Ontario, today told the Royal Commission investigating the retirement of former Magistrate Daniel McCaughrin of Orillia that he was convinced long before McCaughrin's retirement that he must be removed.

Mr. Justice R. G. Fisher, Royal Commissioner, is investigating the former magistrate's retirement because McCaughrin claimed efforts had been made by Magistrate Howard Gover of Coldwater in association with Mr. Finlayson to buy him out of office.

In answer to a question of F. L. Springsteen, Windsor lawyer and Commission counsel, Mr. Finlayson said "the resignation was not conditional."

"But you were not under the impression that Mr. McCaughrin was handing in his resignation for the disposal of the Government without some financial consideration," counsel suggested.

The former Minister replied: "Mr. McCaughrin, I think, was hopeful and confident that there would be some financial consideration, but he knew also that he would have to resign or be dismissed or there would be an investigation."

TALK STEEL ROADS FOR SOUTH AFRICA

Will Cost Much More Than Tar But Never Wear Out.

PRETORIA, South Africa, Aug. 29.—(CP)—The Iron and Steel Corporation has made proposals to the Transvaal Provincial Administration for the building of steel roads in the province.

These roads, it is claimed, though more expensive to build than tarred roads, will never wear out and so will prove economical in the long run. Dr. H. J. van der Byl, the chairman of the Corporation, is stated to be negotiating with the Administration for the laying of experimental sections.

It is claimed the scheme is quite practicable and has been tested with success in other countries. No foundation is needed beyond a levelling of the road surface, upon which quarter-inch steel plates will be laid. These plates will be manufactured at the steel works in strips and welded together when they have been placed in position. A thin layer of asphalt will be spread on top to protect the steel from rust.

BETTING IN FISH IS NEWEST GAMBLE

DE POE BAY, Ore., Aug. 29. (C.P.)—A new sport, fish racing, has been discovered here.

Fifty-cent pari-mutual bets are paid off at about $2.50, according to the best reports, and quinelas (bets on two entries in a race to take first and second places) pay as high as $14.

The racing itself is a comparatively simple though somewhat helter-skelter event. A square 100 feet on a side is marked off in the bay. At the centre a marine paddock is constructed with a stall for each entry. Sea bass and small blue sharks make the best racers, and they have the additional advantage of coming all equipped with dorsal fins—and this is very important.

Small rubber balloons are attached with metal clips and a bit of light line to these vertical fins, then the barriers are dropped and "they're off!"

Four judges watch the sides of the square and announce the first to cross the finishing lines.

530 Paraguayans Die In Bolivian Ambush

LA PAZ, Bolivia, Aug. 30 (CP)—The Bolivian high command claimed a big victory in the Chaco warfare to-day, asserting the Paraguayans had been led into a trap in which 530 were killed.

"Our troops at present busy burying the bodies of 530 Paraguayans who fell in action yesterday," the statement said.

"On the sown cotton plantation were found rifles, machine guns, army equipment and ammunition in large quantities.

"This disorder gives an idea of the panic which seized the routed enemy forces which could not help but flee. The trap into which the enemy fell has had no equal in any campaign in the Gran Chaco up to to-day.

"The proportion of dead, up to now, as established by the high command, is approximately 100 Paraguayan soldiers to one Bolivian."

"Tight buttoned"

Have You, The "Can't Afford It" Habit ?

THE use of that phrase does not suggest the inability to buy so much as the desire to practice rigid economy . . . to save . . . to deny yourself needed and necessary commodities.

But Man, oh Man, and you, too, Madam, how better and more effectively can you practice economy and thrift than to buy when prices are at their lowest ebb in years? How more certainly can you insure economy than to replace worn or out-of-date furniture than when new is selling for one-third of what it sold for 15 years ago? Or to stock up on food products when they are 40% less than at any time since the war? Or clothing when $53 to-day will buy you what you paid $100 for in 1912?

What you really cannot afford to do is not buy because you cannot afford to miss to-day's low levels . . . prices that are an actual boon to reduced incomes . . . to the practice of sensible, far-sighted economy.

avoid having anything to do with Communists.

The strike committee installed a special telegraph wire at its headquarters ready to flash within a few hours a summons to the workers to leave their machines in 1,221 factories. Peace negotiations are in collapse. The summer White House appeared to be the last conceivable bulwark against a tide of economic conflict sweeping the nation.

Roosevelt Watching

President Roosevelt is known to be watching the situation closely, but what he will do remains to be seen. It appeared inevitable that the strike would at least start. Many believe that some new peace move will seek to halt it quickly to ease the recovery program from a severe shock.

The manufacturers prepared to fight. Although some apparently planned to shut their mills if a strike is called Sloan said the owners in general purposed to keep operating. Denying the workers want a strike, he said he had authoritative information that only 10 or 15 percent would walk out unless intimidated.

Hints of violence were heard. Gorman declaring the owners were hiring private detectives and fortifying their plants, said:

"We are prepared for trickery and violence. We have reports which indicate planned violence. I refer to reports from our representatives about the stocking of arms and tear gas. Private detectives also are hovering over the field like vultures."

Stolen Loot Found Near Campbellford

(By Examiner Staff Correspondent)

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 31. — Stolen last Wednesday night from a freight car at Lindsay, twelve cartons of cigarettes valued at $560 were located here on Monday, reposing near the C.N.R. track north of Campbellford. They were intact, and have since been shipped to their proper destination.

A man on a freight going north from Campbellford spotted the cases by the track as the train was passing and notified the train crew, who later got in touch with the station agent here who had the cartons brought into the station. No damage had been done to them and it is thought that after the cigarettes were stolen that they were brought straight through to this point and dumped for the purpose of being picked up later. C.N.R. police are working on the case.

London Man Victim Of Sewer Blast

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 30. (CP).—Carman Hopper, 25, of 394½ Ridout street, escaped death by inches at 10.30 a.m. yesterday when he was thrown into the air and then dashed into a crater caused by an explosion in a Public Utilities Commission man hole at the corner of Ridout and Horton streets.

He was lacerated about the face and body and is suffering from severe shock.

The explosion took place just as young Hopper was passing over the top of the man hole, Hopper was catapulted into the air and dropped into the eight-foot hole. Broken concrete and the man hole cover, the latter split in two, fell around him. By a miracle, the iron cover missed striking him on the head by only a few inches. Simultaneously another explosion took place at the corner of York and Ridout streets, causing no injury to pedestrians in the vicinity but ripping the concrete sidewalk around the man hole at this point in shreds.

HOME MADE VINEGAR

Home made vinegars are excellent and many a gallon was made by our grandmothers in a thriftier day, the return of which we now experience. The following recipes will be of interest to many who use vinegar in large quantities at this season of pickling.

All sorts of sweet fruit juices can be made into vinegar, and this is a good way to use up jelly that has gone to sugar sorghum syrup, rinsings from jelly glasses, left over juices, when preserves are served, and such odds and ends. Put into a stone jar with just enough warm water to make a sweetened water. Cut a piece of brown wrapping paper about the size of the jar lid; put on it a thin layer of bread dough, and roll them up. Drop into the jar and it will provide the necessary plant. Keep in a warm place, and in about three weeks you will have a vinegar much like the cider variety. Corn vinegar was a pioneer favorite. Boil four cups of corn in a gallon of rain water till the kernels break. Pour into a stone jar and add rain water to bring the total up to two gallons. Cover the jar with three thicknesses of cheesecloth and let stand in a warm place. In a month pour off the vinegar, straining to make sure no sediment is retained. Cover closely and store in a warm dry place.

Peach vinegar is also a favorite. Crush half a bushel of ripe sound peaches with a wooden masher, add ½ cake of yeast, which has been dissolved in a little lukewarm water. Put in a clean sweet keg. Cover with a cloth and stir every day for three days. Keep in a warm place. At the end of three days strain off the juice and let it ferment until it stops bubbling; add ½ gallon of malt vinegar for every two gallons of peach juice. Cover with a clean cloth and set in a warm dark place. Taste each week until it is sour enough. Strain into jars or bottles, and cork tightly.

For cider vinegar, wash ripe apples, cut out all decaped spots and put through the food chopper, or through a cider mill. Strain the juice into a jar or keg and to every five gallons of juice, add a cake of yeast that has been softened in a cup of the juice. Stir it up and cover it carefully with a clean cloth. Keep the jar in a temperature of 80 to 90 degrees, and it will ferment in less than a week. When it stops bubbling, cover it closely and set in a warm dark place. Let air reach it, but do not disturb the film that will cover the top. Taste occasionally and when it is sufficiently sour, bottle for use.

Another cider vinegar is made by adding two cups of molasses to a gallon of cider vinegar together with a cup of home-made yeast. Put in a jug, leave out the cork and in a week the product will be ready for use.

ELGIN ADVANCES HASTINGS FINALS

Takes Second Straight Victory From Outlaws by 15-10 Score.

HASTINGS, Aug. 30 (Examiner Correspondence).—Elgin advanced into the finals of the local softball league on Wednesday night, when they knocked off their second straight win over the Outlaws, by a 15 to 10 score. The end of the schedule found the Outlaws on top with Elgin in third place.

The Tanners and Clerks renew their play-off series on Friday night. The Tanners have a win to their credit and need Friday night's games to qualify to meet Elgin for the handsome Uncle David Trophy.

Wednesday night's battle had the sidelines packed with roaring supporters of both teams. Several fights, which might easily have ended in young riots were quickly stopped by cooler heads before any serious trouble.

McKee started on the mound for the Outlaws, but was yanked before the first inning in favor of Sargent after Elgin had crossed the plate six times. Sargent, pitching under a great handicap owing to a sevtre cut he received on one of his fingers on his pitching hand, checked the rally. Had his teammates played the same standard of ball as they have shown in the majority of their games, the result might quite easily been reversed. On the offensive they were right on: Bond, Philips and C. Radford getting homers, and Johnson a triple

"What-a-Man" Richardson, who has been doing all the hurling for the winners all season, held the Outlaws in check with the exception of the third, when they got to his offerings for six runs. J. Preston with two doubles and a single, and M. Scott with a homer, led the batters.

The painting (below) in the above layout illustrates the landing of Jacques Cartier at Gaspe and the cross he set up there 400 years ago. The painting now hangs in the Seigniory Club, Quebec, and is by A. Sherriff Scott. To-day, 400 years after at the celebrations held in honor of the memory of the "discoverer of Canada" another cross was erected at Gaspe and another crowd of curious and notables gathered to witness the occasion. The TOP picture shows the colorful scene at Gaspe.

SOUGHT CATHAY FROM ST. MALO FOUND CANADA

Jacques Cartier Claimed Gaspe County for France and God.

RECENT PAGEANTRY.

Canada's History Definitely Dates to 400 When French Came.

Just four hundred years have passed since Jacques Cartier landed on the Gaspe shore! Who was this man and what part did he play in the history of this Dominion?

Jacques Cartier was the discoverer of Canada. That is an admitted fact historically proven as true and demonstrated beyond question; America was discovered as a result of a collective undertaking in which English, Portuguese, Spanish and French navigators participated but the interior of the continent beyond the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador, was revealed to the world not by individuals, but by one man. That man was Jacques Cartier, the mariner of St. Malo.

It is this great feat which has been re-lived during the past ten days in the picturesque Gaspe peninsula, in pageants of unsurpassed elaborateness in which many of the nations of the world are participating. Sunday was the last day of the Cartier quadricentennial and in commemoration of the event, bells in almost every church tower in the Province of Quebec gave voice to the recollection of French colonial days, singing over the cacophony of modern automobile horns, fire sirens and police whistles, thus bridging centuries with the same haunting carillons that rang in the ears of the gallant St. Malo mariner when he sailed in the April of 1534, in quest of a northwest passage to Cathay.

Cartier Stands Out

There is something tragic in the travail of discovery. A sort of gloom strikes the pages of history. John Cabot (Giovanni Caboto) disappears after his discovery and sinks into an oblivion that even wraps the date of his death; the two first Corte-Real have the sea for a grave, and Verazzano is roasted alive and eaten by the Indians. Even Roberval dies ruined, assassinated in a brawl in the streets of Paris. What a picture of melancholy!

But out of this pageant of stirring events that moves down the centuries there emerges a figure that carries us back, in imagination, to the vast, silent half-continent of 400 years ago. That figure is Jacques Cartier.

Two Pictures

What manner of man was he? Two pictures of him have been kept. One, which is hanging in the city hall of his native town of St. Malo, represents him an imagery, school texts and history books have popularised him. The seaman's beret on the head, strong facial features resting on a firmly closed jaw, and eyes that seem to be focused on some great horizon. The other, which is being kept in the Imperial Library at Paris, shows him as an old man with tufted beard, and with large eyes, melancholy eyes that are frame in a disappointed visage. If you have seen either of these two pictures, you have seen the map, you have ready his story.

No Gold

But what did Cartier's voyages lead to? Nothing. To the prestigious mirage that had occasioned his expeditions and great discovery, succeeded an atmosphere pregnant with disappointment. Half a continent had been discovered but it yielded no gold! New France might be a fruitful field for robed friars in the conquest of souls, but France wanted gold; she was not interested in claiming new lands for Christ. True the Indians had pointed out to Cartier, when he was at Hochelaga (Montreal), the "country of the silver," westward up the Ottawa, and Cartier had informed the king of the vast wealth that was buried in the interior, but the king was too busy with "wars of religion" to think in terms of colonization. So, Canada waited more than three-quarters of a century for Samuel de Champlain, its real founder. He came to Canada to stay; he wintered in his "habitation" at Quebec, and spent twelve years in exploration. With Champlain begins New France.

HALL MOURNED BY RAILROADERS

Preparations Being Laid for Burial in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Montreal.

SERVICES FRIDAY.

MONTREAL, Aug. 30.—(C.P.) — While railroaders throughout the Dominion mourned the passing of one of the veterans in the business, a man who started as a mechanic and forced himself upward to the office of vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway by sheer determination, final preparations were being laid to-day for the funeral of Grant Hall, who died yesterday morning.

The veteran railroader will be buried in Mount Royal cemetery on the side of Mount Royal here Friday after funeral services have been conducted in St. George's church by Right Rev. Lennox W. Williams, Bishop of the Diocese of Quebec. It was just across the street from the church, in his offices in Windsor Station, that Mr. Hall was seized with a stroke of apoplexy three weeks ago from which he was never to recover.

Men prominent in all walks of life as well as the lowliest workers on the railroad paid tribute to the veteran railroader, known throughout the company as the workers' friend.

E. W. Beatty, president of the company, who was in Calgary when informed of his colleague's death, and Sir Herbert Holt, a director of the company, both expressed their regrets at losing one whose "ability as a railroad executive and operator was outstanding not alone in Canada, but also in the United States and in all countries that operate railways."

Mount Julian

The Holy Trinity Anglican Church garden party which was held on the lawn at Mount Julian on Wednesday afternoon, was a decided success, although a shadow of sadness was cast over the attending crowd by the death of Richard Stubbs who passed away very suddenly at the Stubb's summer home on Stoney Lake at about 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning.

This year, a beautifully handworked luncheon set was donated by Miss Rena Stubbs and raffled on that date, Godfrey Moore being the owner of the lucky ticket. Other raffles were a pair of fur slippers donated by Keith Lech and won by Mrs. John McCauley, a chins tea set donated by Mrs. William Thompson and won by Mrs. Lawrence Graham and a pair of bath towels donated by Mrs. W. G. Stone and won by Mrs. Harry Sherrin.

Messrs Doug Hammond, Ormie Heap, Don. Fowler, Jack McFadden and Rev. E. C. Moore were in charge of the sports. The younger generation greatly enjoyed the various land races, with the good swimmers eagerly entering the water sports. In the girls swimming class 13 and under, Margaret Lawrie won first prize while Matilda Moore easily took first place in the senior girls swimming class.

The bountiful supper was served on two long tables under spreading old shade trees by the lake shore. Mrs. W. Anson very kindly donated the use of the Viamede Pavillion for the evening entertainment, Miss Minnie Jackman, William Clink and musically talented boys from Camp 2 providing the music for round and square dancing their service and all donations being greatly appreciated by the clergy, Rev. E. C. Moore, and the congregation.

Among those attending the Garden Party from a distance were: Mrs. Norman Wilson, Miss Dorothy Bell, Mrs. McGregor and son Bobbie, all of Apsley, Rev. and Mrs. Moore and family of Young's Point, Mrs. A. Tedford and children of Warsaw, Messers Doug Hammond and Ormie Heap of Peterborough and a large number from cottages on all parts of Stoney Lake.

Paving Of Lakefield Road Now Under Way

The job of paving the Lakefield road will be completed within the next two months, Bill Hawkins, foreman of the Law Construction, informed The Examiner to-day. The company's workmen began pouring cement on the road on Monday. About one-fourth of a mile of paving on one side of the road is accomplished each day, Mr. Hawkins said.

All that remains to the project is laying the pavement, all grading and other preparatory work having been completed. Ninety-eight men, including truckers and teamsters, are employed now on the job.

WOMEN PLAY AN UNIQUE ROLE DURING SETTLEMENT OF CANADA

French Court Beauties Save Pin Money for Expedition to New Land.

TO CONVERT INDIANS

By JOSEPHINE HAMBLETON
(Canadian Press Correspondent)

MONTREAL, Aug. 30.—(CP)—The heroic epoch which saw the discovery of Canada was peopled by many extraordinary characters. The women played rather a curious role.

Carried away by the wage of enthusiasm which swept over France for the new world, several women of the French aristocracy accompanied their husbands on that ill-fated voyage, under Roberval, from the Port of La Rochelle on April 17, 1542, for Canada. The thought either to enliven with the French grace, the Seigneuries to be established in the world after the style of the old, or to help put the yoke of civilization on the prodigious untamed forces of the unknown continent.

The beautiful and frivolous women at the Court of France while not actually embarking, wished also to play their part. The new world was the fashion. Therefore while buying their silks and satins, they put aside a certain amount of their pin money to help finance expedition to convert the Indians and certain hours to pray for the souls of the savages.

A curious thing—the enthusiasm which sent the women of the court to their knees to pray in rich chapels for the savages, left the hearts of the women of St. Malo unstirred. They knew too well the real sea life and what it did to their men. They knew too well the long vigils in the night, the mournful watches, the pilgrimages of prayer for those at the mercy of the sea.

The character of the women of St. Malo seems to challenge in its coldness and reserve the daring of the corsairs, the explorers, the sea dogs, with a courage which equals theirs, and strikes a kind of eternal balance.

These men, victims of tempests, of fortune's whims, now at the height of success, now plunged in deepest despair, it seems they needed to temper their bold and restless spirits in the calm of these women's souls, these women with their cold impassive eyes.

Typical Compatriot.

Catherine des Granges, wife of Jacques Cartier, was typical of her compatriots. The only existing portrait shows her with calm face, eyes of deep grey, the color of clouds at twilight.

The same pure lines of the face, the same quiet calm, you can find over and over again in the sculptured faces of the saints, worn by the ages, in the old churches of the city of corsairs.

Catherine was at the same time practical and economical.

The day after her husband set sail on his first voyage for Canada, April 21, 1534, she had planted in their orchard 20 sturdy apple trees, 60 green gage plum trees and several other hardy fruit trees, all these in a warm spot protected from the winds of the sea.

Later they bought the domain of Limollou. Daughters of Jacques des Granges, governor of St. Malo, Catherine, belonged to a family, then much more distinguished than that of Cartier. The position as mistress of Limollou, modest as the property was, satisfied her worldly ambitions.

The Domain of Limollou, still buffeted by sea winds, as when Cartier studied old maps there and made new ones of the world he had discovered, is about half a mile from the coast. A true explorer's home, it stands on a height of land which dips down on side to St. Ideuon and on the other to the ocean. In the direction of the North Star, which has so often been Cartier's sole compass, Cartier could see the Pointe de la Varde, to the left the long strand stretching down to St. Malo, and in the far distance Cape Frehel, signal dear to returning sailors. The wide horizon of the sea dominates the whole. Here Catherine waited to welcome her captain home, in the quiet haven on the wild coast of Brkanny.

Friends In Marmora Honor Mrs. McCarey

MARMORA, Aug. 30 (Examiner Correspondence) — A large miscellaneous shower in which relatives and friends numbering close to one hundred participated, was held in the White Hall, Marmora on Wednesday evening in honor of Mrs. L. McCarey (nee Hilda Phillips) of Madoc.

After thte many beautiful presents had been inspected by Mr. and Mrs. McCarey, both in a few well chosen words responded appreciatively. The gathering then sang "For They are Jolly Good Fellows" and later indulged in round and square dancing to excellent music supplied by Doug Jones violin, Harold Auger guitar and Mrs. C. Jones and Miss L. Campion piano. Refreshments were served around the midnight hour.

Obituary

MRS. MICHAEL McKIEVER

WARSAW, Aug. 30 (Examiner Correspondence).—By the death of Margaret Kelly, wife of Michael McKiever, Douro loses a respected citizen; her church, a devout member, and neighbors, a kind and thoughtful friend.

Mrs. McKiever was devoted to her husband and children, and seldom left her home except to attend church, do some necessary shopping, or some kindly neighborly act. Her neighbors will miss her more than many realize.

The deceased had been in poor health for some time, but death was quite unexpected; in fact, she had been up and walking around on Sunday forenoon, and passed away in the evening.

Besides her husband, Mrs. McKeiver leaves two daughters, Christina at home, and Mrs. Thomas Heffernan, near Douro Church; one son, George at White Plains, New York; three others, Justine, James and Maxwell, all living in Douro; also a sister and three brothers, all in the States, all of whom were here for the funeral.

A large number paid their last respects to Mrs. McKiever on Wednesday morning. The funeral left the house at half-past eight o'clock a.m., and proceeded to St. Joseph's Church, where Requiem Mass was sung by Rev. Father McGuire. Burial took place in the beautiful St. Joseph's cemetery. Mrs. McKiever was borne to her last resting place by her own four sons; her son-in-law, Mr. Thomas Heffernan, and Mr. Garnet McMurray.

WARRANT SYSTEM SOLVES WORRIES

Western Town Issues Form of "Scrip-Money" and Local Conditions React Favorably.

RAYMOND, Alta., Aug. 29. — What is perhaps the closest approach in Canada to the "scrip" system of credit has been found so successful in this town officials show no strong desire to return to the old order of dollars and cents.

"Town warrant," is the preferred term for the medium of exchange, the corporation and the schools use in this sugar beet refining centre. The system has been in effect two and one half years, in which period $60,000 worth of warrants has been issued. Tax payments have increased, town services have improved and more people have consequently found employment.

Made out to individuals, negotiable only by endorsement, and accepted or rejected as traders wished, the warrants were circulated to town employees to assist them in obtaining the necessities of life. Coincidentally the town collected its dues from business houses and individuals who accepted these warrants, as taxes paid in kind through equivalent to cash as they represented the payroll of the civic workers.

Women Population Increases In B.C.

VICTORIA. — Call them members of the "weaker sex" if you will—but women are gradually overhauling men in British Columbia.

Vital statistics released by the government reveal the relative growth in the proportion of males and females in the province. In 1881 men far out-numbered women, the figures being 39,503, and 19,956.

In 1911 there were 251,619 males and 140,851 females.

Came the Great War in 1914.

In 1921 men numbered 293,409, while women totalled 231,173. In 1931 there were even more women proportionately, there being 385,219 against 309,044—about 56 and 65 per cent.

CANADA HONORS LABOR HOLIDAY

Labor Parades Started in 1884 and Act Making Legal Holiday Passed in 1894.

FIRST MONDAY IN SEPT.

Written for The Canadian Press
By HARRY SUTHERLAND

To many Canadians, Sept. 3, first Monday in September, is just another holiday. But to labor leaders and those interested in the labor movement, Monday will represent the 41st year Canada has in this way formally recognized the importance of labor in national affairs.

In 1894, Sir ohm Thompson, Conservative premier of Canada, introduced into the House of Commons, an Act making the first day of September a statutory holiday—a Labor Day. Despite opposition taunts the government was seeking labor votes in the impending election, which, incidentally, resulted in a turnover to the Liberals, the Act was passed and became law. The day has since been celebrated generally throughout Canada.

The Act was put through only after years of work by labor leaders. In 1865, Toronto unions, influenced by the combined efforts of the Toronto Trades and Labor council and the Knights of Labor—a body of intellectuals built on the pattern of the Fabian Society in England — a monster parade was staged to the Exhibition grounds. The movement spread and next year a similar parade was held in Montreal. Agitation was raised to make Sept. 1 a legal holiday and thousands of petitions were signed all over the country. The strength of the movement eventually became so marked political parties showed interest and Labor Day became a legal institution.

The amendment which changed the date of the holiday from the first of September to the first Monday was not at the behest of what is commonly considered a labor body. Commercial travellers, finding 24 hours gave them no chance to get home, did not appreciate the day. Through their efforts, Labor Day was fixed to the first Monday in September, which allowed them the week-end.

Since 1894, though the Knights of Labor has passed out of existence, labor organizations have used the day to display their strength, usually by parades or meetings. It became a practice for the unions, each represented by a float portraying its craft or industry, to march through streets of the larger cities to hear speakers in the parks.

Labor Day is also a legal holiday in United States and similar demonstrations are common. Elsewhere, May 1, "May Day," is the day generally given over to labor fetes, where labor is allowed the privilege of open display.

Finlayson Outlines McCaughrin Affair

TORONTO, Aug. 30 (C.P.).—Two years before his actual retirement, a long series of "difficulties" made it clear Daniel McCaughrin, Orillia magistrate, would have to be removed, Hon. W. A. Finlayson, former Minister of Lands and Forests, told a commission investigating the ex-Magistrate's claim that attempts were made to "buy" his retirement.

Mr. Finlayson said the magistrate had many difficulties with solicitors and town officials and the "rows" were attracting considerable attention from the press. It became more apparent, said Mr. Finlayson, who occupied the stand nearly all yesterday, to Mr. McCaughrin "it was utterly impossible" for the magistrate to carry on.

The agreement for payment of $3,000 to Mr. McCaughrin on his retirement, was a normal agreement, said witness. And the resigning magistrate appeared "perfectly satisfied."

During the hearing Commissioner Mr. Justice R. G. Fisher told the former magistrate he was "sick" of Mr. McCaughrin's expressed inability to recollect or understand when questioned.

SEVERE FROSTS HIT GARDENS AS MERCURY SETS RECORD LOW

MANY FURNACES STARTED

Severe frosts struck at market gardens in the district last night doing much damage to tomatoes, cucumbers, squash and corn. The Examiner learned that the consequent financial loss to gardeners would be large.

"This August has been the coldest that I can remember," Walter Peters, official weather recorder, stated to-day. "It is most unusual."

The mercury hit a new low for the month's cold wave last night when it sank to 38 degrees.

Earliest Frosts

Market gardeners reported that it was the earliest frosts that they had experienced. Frost first was noticed in the district on Monday night, but the damage was greatest last night. The frosts were more severe in low-lying areas.

Housewives will be interested to know that cucumbers will be scarce. "The cucumber crop was almost a failure anyway, but the frost damaged what little was left" one gardener stated.

Tomatoes at Fraserville were badly frosen, it was reported. Corn suffered much from the frosts on the low ground, while one farmer said that his buckwheat was damaged.

"I found ice in my cabbages this morning" another market gardener said in pointing out the severity of the frost.

Shiver In Offices

Fires were started in many furnaces throughout the city last night, homes having become chilled and damp due to the continued cool weather. In some downtown offices yesterday, it was reported that stenographers were so chilled that they had difficulty in working. The city offices were warm and comfy to-day, George Grange, caretaker, having set a fire which pumped steam through the radiators.

O. S. Matthews, manager of the Canada Packers' plant, said that 10 acres of pumpkins and three acres of squash, which the company was counting on for its cannery, had been ruined by the frosts. He minimised the damage to tomatoes, stating that the tops of and vines only had been damaged.

24,000 Plants Killed

V. E. Crebar of Downer's Corners, said he had lost 24,000 tomato plants killed by the frost on 6 property east of the Lift Lock.

"At least 1,000 bushels will be my loss in tomatoes" Mr. Crebar said. "I was just beginning to pick them. All that is left are some green ones. The peppers and corn were also nipped."

London Hit Hard

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 30. (CP).—"Cleaned out" was the way local gardeners described their crops this morning following the frost last night which is believed to have been the earliest and most severe in more than 20 years.

The district immediately about London appears to have suffered heavily. Fifty miles west the frost was not so intense.

Bean fields in low lying lands are ruined and other crops including corn and buckwheat seriously damaged.

Experts say that most of the fruit is too far advanced to be affected very much.

Melons, cucumbers, tomatoes and other low growing plants were the most seriously hit.

From August 1-15 the water maintained an even high temperature around 70 degrees, it was officially stated.

HASTINGS HYDRO RATES REDUCED

Lower Charges Confirmed to Encourage Use of Electric Stoves.

SURPLUS OF $7,000.

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—Because it finds itself in possession of too much surplus money the village of Hastings has made application to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission for authority to reduce rates.

At a meeting of the Commission Wednesday it was agreed to allow a substantal reduction in street lighting charges, and consideration was to be given to a request to reduce the first domestic rate from 4½ cents per kilowatt hour to 4 1/3 cents, and a corresponding reduction in the follow-on rate so as to encourage the use of electric ranges.

There was no reason why this municipality should not enjoy the benefits of cooking by electricity, it was stated, as only 40 kilowatt hours were demanded on the first domestic rate and this was certain to be absorbed by house lighting.

Hastings power bill with the Commission is about $12,000 a year, and the surplus on hand is over $7,000.

TITHE DISTRESS SALE OFF AS AUCTIONEER KIDNAPPED

"BIT OF SPORT"

Worcester.—A tithe distress sale announced to take place at Linacres farm, Claines, recently did not take place because the auctioneer was kidnapped.

A number of farmers had gathered and James Phillips, on whom distress had been levied, told them that, though livestock had been offered, his mother's furniture had been taken, in spite of the fact that she is 87 years old.

A resolution of protest was passed and the auctioneer was awaited. He failed to turn up. A policeman rang up his office in Worcester and was told that a telegram had been received from him which read: "Taken near Banbury; coming back by train."

On his return that evening the auctioneer, Mr. Woodward, explaining his absence, said:

"I was crossing a field from Linacres farm in the early afternoon after seeing Mr. Phillips, when I heard a voice say: 'This is him. A sheet was dropped over my head and roped tightly round my legs and arms, so that I could not move. I was carried a short distance and put into a car. I shouted and was told: 'Keep quiet and it will be all right. We are only going to take you for a little ride.' Eventually they stopped the car, pulled me out, unroped me and off they went. By the time I had got clear of the sheet the car had disappeared."

Mr. Woodward added that he found himself about one and a half miles from Banbury, on a lonely road 50 miles from Worcester. He said he did not accuse Mr. Phillips of any knowledge of the kidnapping. His explanation was that "some of the boys of the village had had a bit of sport."

GET DRAKE'S SWORD AFTER 350 YEARS

Plymouth Ceremoniously Receives Relic of Armada Victory

Plymouth.—After an absence of 350 years, Drake's sword has been brought back to Plymouth.

The sword, which was presented to Drake by Queen Elizabeth, has for years been in the Royal Naval Barracks at Portsmouth, loaned by Godfrey H. Williams of Jersey.

With the decks of the Aircraft Carrier Hermes (now undergoing refit) lined with hundreds of workmen, the sword was received at the Royal Naval Barracks, Devonport.

The entire strength of the barracks was mustered, two guards and supporting companies, with band, taking part in the ceremony, while on the terrace was the commander-in-chief, Vice-Admiral Sir Eric Fullerton, and his staff, and other officers and men.

The sword had been brought from Portsmouth by Lieut.-Commanders Darcy Evans and L. W. Lamplough, and, when the guards advanced at a slow march towards the terrace, it was handed to Lieut.-Commander T. L. Bratt.

Escorted by guards, and led by the band, Lieut.-Commander Bratt then bore the sword to the officers' mess.

On each side of the blade are engraved the globe, with a band running around it — commemorating Drake's voyage round the world—the Tudor rose, and the initials E.R.

The sword is believed to be that with which Queen Elizabeth knighted Drake on the quarterdeck of the Golden Hind when she boarded the ship at Deptford.

FORCED TO PAY $35 FOR LOVE OF GRAVY

Denver Man Raised Fuss Over Hamburger Steak

Denver, Colo.—Albert Fechner's pronounced appetite for gravy cost him a $35 fine before Municipal Judge Alvin H. Pickens here, after he created a disturbance in his home because his wife cooked hamburger and potatoes, but no gravy.

"A hamburger steak with potatoes, but no gravy is as hard to take as a raw egg, and I simply couldn't eat it," Fechner explained to Judge Pickens.

"Well, it may be hard to take, but not as hard to take as the $35 you are going to pay to stay out of jail," replied the judge. "I think you like gravy too well."

FIRE RAVAGES HEATHS

Wild Birds and Animals Die in Path of Flames

Aldershot.—Thousands of acres of Britain have been destroyed by heath and forest fires which have swept across the land during the heat wave.

Plantations, moors, forests and famous beauty spots all over the country are lying blackened and dead.

Many thousands of birds and animals have perished in blazes that are relentlessly spreading despite the utmost efforts of fire brigades and troops.

Aeroplanes were brought into action against an Aldershot blaze, which more than 1,000 troops fought. It broke out on Blackdown plateau, and soon spread over two miles of heath.

PET CAUSES DEATH

Aldershot.—Mrs. Ellen Rosa Read, age 74, a widow, of Church Rd., died of injuries caused when her pet dog tripped her up by wrapping its lead round her leg while out walking.

WED AT 80; DIES AT 83

London.—Major-General Sir William Donovan has died at his Kensington home aged 83. Three years ago he married Miss Annie L. Becher de la Cour, who was 47 at the time.

"GLOOMY" DEAN URGES DEATH BE NOT FEARED

London.—Dean Inge, who is to retire from the deanery of St. Paul's in September, gave his congregation in the cathedral some of his thoughts on old age and retirement.

"We ought, I am sure, neither to fear death nor to wish for it. We ought to feel that death simply does not count," the dean said. He believed all that matters is that a life should be well lived up till the time of its close.

"LET WEDDING GO ON" DYING CLERIC URGES

Weeping Bride Hears Uncle Perform Ceremony in Place of Her Father

Clontibret.—Just before he was to have solemnised the wedding of his actress daughter to a young London ship's officer, the Rev. John Thompson had a heart attack and died in a few minutes in the manse adjoining the parish church.

"Let the wedding go on," were the dying minister's last words, and the grief-stricken bride stood in tears before the altar as her uncle performed the ceremony — which her father had been looking forward with affectionate pride.

The bride was Miss Betty Thompson, a beautiful young operatic singer, who had rushed home from Blackpool, where she had been appearing in a show, only three hours before the ceremony. Her bridegroom was Mr. Leslie Cromar Asser, whose ship is now lying at Liverpool.

The reception which was to have followed the wedding was cancelled, as was the young couple's honeymoon, and Mr. and Mrs. Asser remained at the manse until after the funeral.

WOMAN, 30, HAS SIGHT SIMILAR TO INFANT'S

Operation Results in Gradual Recognition of Relatives Faces

London.—Thirty years old, physically fit and mentally alert, yet seeing the world through the eyes of a baby.

That is the curious experience of a woman patient at the Central London Ophthalmic hospital, who is just learning to see.

For centuries scientists have been puzzled on what babies think when they first look at things used in everyday life.

This young woman, who has been almost blind since birth, may be able to provide the key to that puzzle.

Last March she was operated on by Tudor Thomas, the Cardiff eye specialist, and now, although she will never see as well as a normal person can, she is gradually recognizing objects which hitherto have been merely names to her.

Already she can recognize such articles as a box of matches after being told once what they are.

But the alphabet, although she can read Braille, as yet means no more to her than it does to a new-born babe.

Every day, however, brings a new wonder to her eyes; slowly she is memorizing the faces of relatives and friends.

Two years must elapse, however, before the full benefits of the operation and the training will be known.

WAR RELIC EXPLODES

Aston.—Mrs. Florrie Sheppard, age 48, of New John St., had one of her hands blown off when a live shell, a war relic, exploded as she was using it to break coal.

EARL WORKS PASSAGE SEASICK WITH CATTLE

Western Farmer Is Also Nobleman and Not Afraid of Labor

A British ranches-east, with a civil list pension from the British government and owner of a 1,000-acre farm at Fort Saskatchewan, near Edmonton, Alberta, has arrived in Britain . . . in a cattle boat.

Working and sleeping with the crew, he was plain George Rodney—and no one knew he was an earl except the captain.

He is Lord George Rodney, direct descendant of the famous Admiral Rodney, who was granted a pension of £2,000 a year in 1782. This has since been slightly reduced.

"I worked my passage over because it was the cheapest method, and I am thoroughly used to hard, manual work," Lord Rodney said.

"I have two boys at school in Britain and I have not seen them for six years. That was the main reason for my visit.

"If you work your passage over you are entitled to a free passage back on the same line of ships."

Lord Rodney's day on the cattle boat started at four in the morning with washing down and feeding the cattle. This meant about five hours' hard work which had to be repeated in the afternoon.

"On top of all that," he said, "I was violently seasick for several days . . . but the work had to be done just the same. We encountered unusually heavy weather, and most of the cattle were ill, too.

SCOUT, 14, CHEERFUL AFTER 31 OPERATIONS

Given "Few Days to Live" Twelve Times, He Wins Sport Honors

London. — A broad-shouldered, healthy-looking boy sat in a room in St. Margaret's Rd., Brockley, S.E., recently, working on some complicated experiment in chemistry.

He was Ronald Vickery, a 14-year-old scout patrol-leader, who has returned home from Lewisham hospital after his thirty-first operation. During his 14 years, Ronald has been given "a few days to live" on 12 occasions. He has suffered from pneumonia, mastoids and scarlet fever with many complications.

Yet, between operations, he has excelled at games. Only a few months ago, shortly before he entered hospital for his last operation, he broke three records at his school sports, for running, throwing the cricket ball, and the long jump.

He did 220 yards in 29 seconds and jumped 16 feet 6 inches. He also figured prominently on the rugby field, and is a good boxer and wrestler.

News of Ronald's will-power and courageous fight for his life reached the headquarters of the Boy Scouts' Association, and he has been awarded the Cornwell badge, the boy scouts' exceptional award, "for courage shown during life-long illness."

CONVICTED M.P. SOBS

Glasgow.—Sobbing uncontrollably, Thomas Ormiston, Unionist M.P. for Motherwell, was found guilty at sheriff court of driving his car while under the influence of drink, and of driving carelessly.

Fines of £75 on the first charge and £50 on the second were imposed, and his license was endorsed.

Mr. Ormiston was found not guilty of an alternative charge that he drove recklessly and dangerously, and went on to the footpath and injured a man.

In evidence, Mr. Ormiston, who pleaded not guilty, had protested that "every indignity" had been put on him by the police.

FIRE UNDISMAYS CROWD

Dublin.—Police had to be called to keep a great crowd from forcing a way back into the Palace cinema, after part of the audience had left because of a false report of fire.

TARS DARE DYNAMITE

Though these British sailors at Chatham navy week are carrying a box of dynamite, they're apparently not nervous. Look whose sitting on top of the explosives! Let's hope it's not another gunpowder plot.

WAITER IN WORK-DAY JACKET CONDUCTS FAMED SYMPHONY

At Request of Sir Dan Godfrey, Cafe Employee Wields Baton

PLAYS OWN MUSIC

Bournemouth. — Conductor of a symphony orchestra for a night. That was the experience here of Richard Dabson, a London waiter, who spends his leisure time composing music.

Before an audience of 1,000 Mr. Dabson, at Sir Dan Godfrey's invitation, conducted the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra in two of his own works—a march, "Fighting Yours," and a waltz, "When the Sun Goes Down."

While in the conductor's rostrum he wore a short, cream-colored jacket he uses when at work.

Father Was Bandsman

Many of the frequenters of the restaurant where he is employed were in the audience and his two pieces were given tremendous ovations.

After the concert Mr. Dabson said: "My father was a bandsman in the Grenadier Guards' Band when Sir Dan's father was bandmaster. There was nothing else for me to do when I left the army after the war, so I got a job as a waiter and composed music in my spare time. This chance to conduct a famous orchestra I regard as the turning point in my musical career. But I would not like to give up my work as a waiter entirely. I like both jobs and my surroundings at the restaurant give me inspiration for music."

KILL CAT BELIEVED POSSESSED OF 'DEVIL'

Blame Animal for Mysterious Damage to Rooms

Louth.—Has a half-frenzied cat been to blame for the mysterious happenings reported from South Reston Hall, a 400-year-old farmhouse near here?

Rooms were stated to have been thrown into confusion, ceilings pierced with large holes, and the pantry robbed of food, and thorough investigations had hitherto failed to solve the mystery.

The discovery in a room of one of the farmhouse cats in a state of frenzy aroused the superstitions of the farm workers of the surrounding countryside.

The superstitious immediately conceived the theory that the cat was possessed of a "devil" which gave it the abnormal strength necessary to accomplish some of the damage done to the farmhouse. So the cat, a black and white one, was caught and killed, and, now, say the superstitious, the mystery is ended.

BENEDICTS SAFER

London.—Widowers, divorced people, and bachelors are more prominent in the figures of death due to alcoholism than married men.

This statement was made by Dr. Bandel, of Nuremberg, speaking at the International Congress on Alcoholism at the Imperial Institute, Kensington.

SEARCH 600 CHURCHES FOR ARYAN PEDIGREE

Hitler Regime Causes Germans in England to Learn "Family Tree"

London.—One of the curious sidelights on the Hitler regime has been the invasion of the quiet alcoves of the Society of Genealogists in Malet Pl., by Germans in search of their Aryan pedigree.

"Nine out of ten don't know the maiden names of their grandmothers," said Mrs. Blomfield, secretary of the society. "Others know only that their grandparents or great-grandparents married in London during a certain year. As there are over 600 London churches this makes the work very difficult and often expensive."

"Inquiries may have to be made at hundreds of churches, entailing a fee at each church. In some cases record agents must be employed. They may do months of work before unearthing the necessary data.

ENGLAND GETS RAIN

July Wettest Month Since 1852—Drought Problem Less Menacing

London.—July was the wettest since October, 1852, the rainfall at Kew being 46 per cent. above normal.

Sir William Prescott, chairman of the Metropolitan water board, said that the rain has improved the water position immensely. "The drought is nothing like the menacing problem it was," he said. "Given reasonable rain in the coming months, there should be no need for further water restrictions."

BRITISH INLAND AIR MAIL UNDERGOES BIG EXPANSION

Daily Service Between Key Cities, Is Part of Plan

NO EXTRA CHARGE

Sir H. Kingsley-Wood, the postmaster-general, in a statement, has revealed important plans for the forthcoming large-scale development of inland air mail services in Great Britain. They include:

Regular daily services to be begun between London, Birmingham, Manchester, Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, Cardiff, Plymouth, Southampton and the Isle of Man next month.

Increase in the number of blue air mail letter-boxes and a speed-up in collections.

The plans of the post-office are dependent on the new air services which the railways are inaugurating this month. As soon as they are in operation, the new air mails will take advantage of them.

"We shall start the services to the cities mentioned so far as the flying times permit of practical use being made of them," said Sir Kingsley-Wood.

"There will be no extra charge for letters weighing not more than two ounces or for postcards.

"The only condition is that the blue air mail label shall be put on letters intended for air transmission, or that they be marked 'By Air Mail.' The rate for letter beyond two ounces will be 1d per ounce.

"To ensure that the post-office is kept in the closest touch with air developments, I have arranged, after consultation with the air minister (Lord Londonderry) to appoint an air mail adviser. He will have definite executive rank in the post-office.

TEACH PUBLIC SAFETY FROM AERIAL WARFARE

Belgium to Train Citizens by Series of Mock Attacks

Brussels.—The protection of the Belgian public from danger from the air in time of war has been undertaken by the Anti-Aircraft League, a private organization supported by donations from industrial and commercial concerns, and, in lesser degree, from the public.

The league's funds fall short of its needs, and to augment them an air fete is to be held at Brussels aerodrome during the night of September 1-2.

The participation of Belgium's Air force has been secured, and its machines, illuminated with colored lights and with phosphorescent wings, will perform various evolutions against the darkened sky.

With the aerodrome plunged into obscurity, mimic battles will be fought in the glare of powerful searchlights, aeroplanes will fall in flames, and bombs will be dropped on and set light to specially constructed wooden buildings.

Day and night attacks are being planned and, while the invaders are engaged in battle by the defence force, the public will be required to do its bit by paying attention to warnings by siren and making for prearranged shelters and, at night, extinguishing all lights.

The police, fire brigade, and Red Cross will each have their share of action.

BAR WALKERS FROM ROAD

Police Chief Believes Pedestrians Need "Spoonfeeding"

Wolverhampton. — Special safety railings to keep pedestrians out of the road have been put up by Edwin Pilley, chief constable here, at Princes square, one of the busiest crossings in the town.

Pedestrians need "spoonfeeding" declared Mr. Pilley. "No other user of the road causes so much worry to those responsible for traffic control."

UNREQUITED LOVE ENDS IN SUICIDE

Man Drowns Self When Girl Refuses Marriage Offer

He was ordered to be deported to his native Germany as an illegal immigrant. Aged 23, he had saved £1,000 during five years in the United States. Parting from America was a bitter blow.

But hope was reborn for him in the liner. He fell in love with a girl passenger. He asked her to marry him. She said "no," and Schmidt dashed to the rail anad flung himself overboard. His body was not found.

FEAR PHYSICAL HARM BY INSUFFICIENT FOOD

Diet Experts See Danger to Unemployed if Needs Not Increased

London.—Diet experts have warned the new unemployment assistance board that unless the unemployed and their families get enough food there will be "widespread danger of physical deterioration."

They point out that under the new act a very large number of the unemployed will have to depend wholly or partly on the board.

Their letter welcomes the provision in the act that the allowances granted to an applicant "shall be determined by reference to his needs, including the needs of any members of the household who are dependent on him."

After pointing out that one of the board's duties is "to provide for the re-establishment of such persons with a view to their being in all respects fit for entry or return to regular employment," the experts make this important statement:

"We suggest that a standard of needs which will fulfil the intention of the act can only be properly arrived at in consultation with medical and other expert opinion qualified to estimate the minimum requirements of healthy living and the cost of satisfying them for families of various sizes."

"Needs" are divided into (1) food, (2) rent, (3) fuel, (4) clothing, (5) light, cleansing materials, and sundries.

With regard to food, it is added, scientific knowledge has now reached the point where it is possible to determine fairly accurately the minimum necessary to maintain health and working capacity.

FORMER FOES MEET 17 YEARS AFTER WAR

German Officer Who Had a Heart Greets Britisher He Captured

Shanghai.—Seventeen years almost to the day since he was shot down by German aeroplanes over Radingham, Flanders, during the war, a British flying officer has met in Shanghai the German artillery officer who pulled him from the wreckage of his machine and gave him coffee before he was taken off into internment.

The people in this post-war coincidence are Captain William Turner-Coles, of Henley-on-Thames, former pilot in the Royal Flying Corps, and E. Fuerholzer, manager of a German news agency in Shanghai.

Captain Turner-Coles was over the German lines in 1917 spotting the battery of which Mr. Fuerholzer was lieutenant and adjutant, when he was attacked by six or seven German machines and shot down.

Mr. Fuerholzer pulled him out of the wreckage and took him to his dug-out and gave him coffee until a guard arrived. In the meantime the two corresponded by notes written in English.

In June last Group-Captain R. P. Willock, British air attache in China, was travelling from Peking to Shanghai by train and entered into conversation with Mr. Fuerholzer, also bound for Shanghai.

The war incident was mentioned, and as Group-Captain Willock is a friend of Captain Turner-Coles, he arranged a meeting in Shanghai, when captor and prisoner met again.

Mr. Fuerholzer was able to produce the very notes written in the dug-out at Radinghem. He also still has a piece of the broken propeller from Captain Turner-Coles' machine.

The two had met on social occasions in Shanghai twice before their dramatic reunion, but had forgotten each other's names and did not recognise each other.

BEST MAN LOST RING SO WEDDING HELD UP

Another Secured, Then Original Found in Coat Pocket

Dudley.—A fashionable wedding was held up here while the bridal party and wedding guests armed with lighted tapers searched the church for the wedding ring.

To ensure its safety the best man had placed the ring on his own finger. When the time came and he was asked for it, he found it was missing.

While guests searched the church the best man retired to the vestry. He searched every garment he was wearing—even taking off his shoes to look inside. Finally he dashed out to the nearest jeweller's and bought another.

It was not until after the ceremony that he found the original ring — in his morning coat pocket.

YOUTH FACES UNEMPLOYMENT

London.—Britain estimates that in two years there will be more than 600,000 boys and girls under eighteen unemployed. A quarter of a million are now jobless.

CLAIM GERMAN BUILDING "STRATOSPHERIC ROCKET"

Reaching 60,000-Foot Altitude, Device Could Deal Death to Cities

TESTING SECRETLY

Paris.—German scientists are busily engaged in seeking the means of wrecking a city several hundred miles away by means of a stratospheric rocket which can be loaded either with explosives, poison gas, or microbes.

This statement is made by M. Charles Reber in a study of secret German warlike preparations published by Paris-Soir. M. Reber declares that Col. Hesselbach, who is the head of the department of ballistics of the armaments section of the Reichswehr ministry, is in charge of this research work.

Col. Hesselbach, he says, lives in the hope of the avenging of Germany's defeat in the last war. In 1923, in collaboration with General Watter, he conceived a plan to attack the allied occupation troops of the Rhineland. Since then he has passionately carried on his idea of a great surprise in the next war, like Krupp's Big Bertha was in the last war.

It is under this officer's direction that they have been carried on for several years past at Munich, at Britz, near Berlin, and at Meppen, where the first tests were carried out with the "Big Bertha," and at Stolp, on the Baltic coast, experiments with stratospheric rockets, the article relates. Under the pretext of reaching Mars or the moon or seeking a rocket which can be used for rapid postal services, scientific work has really been going on with the object of finding a new weapon of war.

All those in Germany who make any discovery on these lines and require capital to exploit their idea must address themselves to Col. Hesselbach. Foreigners who make any discovery of this nature and report it to the armaments section of the Reichswehr are granted German naturalization at once.

Herr Tilling, a Reichswehr officer who is a friend and protege of Col. Hesselbach, has revealed this, at least in part, in a technical review for specialists. He says that with an explosive discharging by progressive combustion "the rocket which we propose to build will easily be able to reach an altitude of more than 60,000 feet. At this height engineers will be able to direct the rocket by wireless by means of a transmitting apparatus. Marconi has proved that it is possible by means of extremely short waves to influence a machine and direct its course. He succeeded in this way in controlling in Italy the functioning of a machine situated in Melbourne, Australia, and the Germans sent up over the North Sea aeroplanes wireleased from land."

The only difficulty, according to Herr Tilling, is the uncertainty about the position of the rocket when it can no longer be seen from land, but this problem has been solved by installing within the rocket a wireless transmitting post whose constant waves are received by radiogoniometric stations installed at the firing point. These stations can determine second by second the position of the rocket in space and cause it to fall wherever they like.

BEE WRECKS CAR

Insect Distracts Driver's Attention Resulting in Crash

Deal.—A bumble bee settled on Mrs. Layman of Drum Hill, Walmer, while she was driving with her husband.

BECOMES ILL AFTER TOUCHING HOPE GEM

Owner Wears Diamond—Unafraid But Fears For Others

Southampton.—The famous Hope diamond, which is said to have a curse attached to it, has reached England with its owner—and the chief purser of the liner, H. R. Bennett, who touched it during the voyage, lay ill in bed when the vessel arrived.

Mr. Bennett fell ill soon after touching the diamond, which is part of the jewelry of Mrs. E. L. W. McLean, well-known American.

The diamond was bought for Mrs. McLean in 1911 for $300,000. Its value to-day is said to be much higher.

When the steamer docked, Mrs. McLean, who had been cruising to the North Cape and Russia, was wearing the diamond, hanging from a diamond and platinum chain.

On her neck and hands she wore other jewels worth over a million dollars.

Nearby stood a tall young man whose duty is to watch the Hope diamond and safeguard its owner. He has been with Mrs. McLean as a bodyguard almost round the world.

Mrs. McLean told a reporter that she has no personal fear of the diamond's "curse."

"It has not affected me," she said. "But I dread its effect on my friends and I do all possible to prevent them from touching it. When they do the 'curse' falls on them."

SATISFIED DUELLISTS BREAKFAST TOGETHER

Stolen Kiss Episode Ends in Wounds and Reconciliation

Paris.—In the secluded garden of an ancient house at Neuilly sabres flashed at dawn recently. A young diplomat and a well-known painter were fighting a duel.

The cause of the affair is said to have been a stolen kiss—stolen when the artist's sweetheart had gone with him to the Tuileries gardens, where he was painting.

The painter, obviously an inexpert swordsman, received two wounds. Thereupon the duel was stopped. The two men became reconciled and breakfasted together with their seconds.

DEFENDING CHICKS HEN KILLS HAWK

Marauder Falls Dead From Tree After Severe Tussle

Sydney.—An ordinary hen has killed a sparrowhawk in an amazing farmyard battle at the New South Wales village of Marulan.

The hen was moving across the farmyard with her brood of chickens when the sparrowhawk attacked. The old black hen met the onslaught and, battling with claw and beak, beat off the attack until she could manoeuvre her brood under shelter.

Then the hen "saw red." She flew screeching at the marauder. The flurry ended in the hawk flying awkwardly to a tree.

One of the spectators was about to shoot the hawk when it fell to the ground dead. Deep lacerations on the bird's neck showed the fierceness of the hen's attack.

"I HOPE IT ISN'T A BOMB" JOKE PRECEDES FATAL EXPLOSION

Package Found in Train Brings Death to Stationmaster

INJURES TICKET MAN

Paris.—A stationmaster was killed and four other persons were injured by the explosion of a bomb in the Paris "Metro" (underground).

As a train was about to leave Montparnasse Station a ticket inspector noticed a parcel under the seat in an empty first-class coach. Thinking it had been forgotten by a passenger, he picked it up and took it to the stationmaster, saying jokingly, "I hope it isn't a bomb."

Both men examined the parcel and cut the string with which it was tied. A terrific explosion followed, the stationmaster, M. Castelas, the ticket inspector, and three passengers on the platform being thrown to the ground.

M. Castelas died on the way to hospital. The ticket collector, both of whose hands were blown off, is in a critical condition. The three passengers were only slightly injured.

The bomb consisted of two biscuit boxes wrapped with paper and tied with string. This is the third bomb outrage in Paris within two months.

The weapon used was by far the most powerful of the three, and had it exploded in a crowded coach it would have caused heavy loss of life.

BIG FAMILIES COUNT IN EQUESTRIAN TEST

Father of Seven Children Given Additional Points

Hanover.—"Blessed is he who hath his quiver full" was the implied slogan of an equestrian contest at Verden-on-Aller, Hanover.

In accordance with the German government's campaign to foster larger families, points were scored by contestants for the number of children they had, as well as their horsemanship.

Besides being an excellent horseman, who gave an exhibition of almost faultless riding, he gained many additional points thanks to his seven children.

Baby Car to Be Auctioned For Charity

Dagenham.—The baby car which the Prince of Wales helped to make is for sale to the highest bidder.

After the prince had started the car on the assembly line at the Ford works here and driven it off a conveyer, it was ear-marked for a special purpose. A stainless steel tablet was mounted on the interior stating that the prince was the first to start and drive it.

The car was presented by Sir Percy Perry, chairman of the Ford Company, to the King George hospital, Ilford. It is to be exhibited in Regent St., and sold on behalf of the hospital funds.

Members of the Y.W.C.A. Outdoor Club enjoyed a trip to Camp Ingiestane last evening. This is always one of the special club outings, and the members are very grateful to friends who loaned their cars. The twenty-four members with the regular campers, filled the big camp dining-room and thoroughly enjoyed the delicious hot supper. A sing-song around the camp fire followed by extracts read from the "Y" Camp magazine, 'Ingiestane Breeze' brought the evening to a close.

Some of us, while we'd love a tailored type coat frock, find its not really a becoming model. Just the merest blousing is needed to disguise the fullness of the hips or that little bit of weight we do not need.

The slight blousing of the wrap-over bodice of today's model, gives us what we need. The skirt, with center-front panel, suggests long lines. This model was made of lightweight wool in check effect. The belt is black suede; the buttoniere dull black and white.

Other schemes such as black crepe marocain or grainy surfaced black crepe, could also folow these lines.

Style No. 3155 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50, 52 and 54 inches bust. Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material.

ROYAL WEDDING DATE IS UNSET

Greek Orthodox Officials Expected to be Present for London Ceremony.

PRINCE MAY BECOME DUKE.

LONDON, Aug. 30 (CP Cable)—While the date for the marriage of Prince George and Princess Marina of Greece has not yet been announced, it is expected the Archimandrite of the Greek Orthodox Church will be present in full ecclesiastical robes when the Archbishop of Canterbury conducts the ceremony in Westminster Abbey. Some observers name December as the probable month for the ceremony.

Princess Marina and her family are members of the Greek Orthodox Church. While British law ordains that anyone succeeding to the throne must be a member of the Church of England, the authorities agree this does not apply to princesses not in direct succession. It is generally accepted, however, that those within reasonable distance of succession should be members of the Established Church.

It is pointed out the Greek Orthodox Church has always been on close friendly terms with the Church of England.

Several newspapers predict the title to be bestowed by the King on Prince George shortly will be that of the Duke of Edinburgh.

BROCKS BIRD GRAVEL

CONTRACT BRIDGE

WRITTEN FOR CENTRAL PRESS

By E. V. SHEPARD

THE OBLIGATORY HOLD-UP.

Every day we note examples of obligatory hold-ups—refusals to at once win tricks—where waiting to win tricks until one opponent has none of a suit to lead his partner, removes re-entry cards from the holders of the dangerous suit, so that suit never can be established and run off. Today we have a more rare type of obligatory hold-up, but illustrating the necessity to remove re-entry from the opening leader before his suit can be established.

Bidding went: South, 1-no trump; West, 2-hearts, hoping to stop game; North, 3-Clubs; South, 3-no trumps; not being vulnerable and relying upon clubs for ability to go game. This held the contract.

The opening lead was the J. of hearts. Dummy played low. East overplayed his lone Q, and South passed the trick, hoping that East held a singleton heart. Had the declarer won the first heart trick, West could have utilized two re-entries to remove the second heart stop from dummy and run off

Having no more hearts, East led the Q of diamonds. Dummy's K won the trick. Declarer won the first club trick. When West played the J on the second club led, West was allowed to hold the trick, as one trick in the suit had to be lost and dummy had no cards of re-entry to waste.

Back came a heart, as expected. Dummy's K won the trick, and its 3 good clubs were run off. East let one spade go to his partner's heart lead, then East had to make 3 discards on the club leads, letting go a second spade and his 2 lowest diamonds. The declarer let go his lowest spade and a diamond.

At the ninth trick dummy's lowest spade was led. East split equals, by putting up his 5, forcing declarer's K, and the trick going to West's ace. West had won the third and last trick for his side. He had discarded one of his hearts and his last diamond on dummy's last 2 club leads. West led his top heart. East had to discard, and let go his 10 of diamonds, as being preferable to discarding next to his last spade. Declarer's ace won the trick. Dummy won the eleventh trick with the Q of spades. If East had discarded a spade dummy's 8 would have won the twelfth trick and South's ace of diamonds the last trick. As East had guarded his spades dummy won only a single trick in that suit, but the declarer picked up East's lone J of diamonds with his Ace, then led his good 9, winning 4-odd.

Children's allowances may prove helpful to the youngsters in teaching them how to handle money, or they may prove opportunities for extravagance. Whether they are an aid or a hindrance depends as much on parents as children. It should be determined before apportioning allowances whether they are to be for little luxuries apart from any demands for necessities or accessories, or whether they are to include definite needed or wanted things with some luxuries.

* * * * * * *

What is an allowance which will be sufficient only for necessities is scarcely an allowance in its accepted significance. There is implied a ratio for whatever a child may crave.

* * * * * * *

When very young the craving is apt to be for candy, soda fountain beverages, ice cream, and entertainment, generally movies. There are times when little folk will want marbles, hoops, skipping ropes, and such playthings of a sporting sort, which cost but trifling sums and could be purchased in preference to the first mentioned things even if allowances are small. This is apt to be the first allowance which may be as trifling as a nickel or a dime a week, since parents buy every necessity for the child as far as their own purses permit.

* * * * * * *

As a child grows older such diminutive allowances, which at first may seem riches to the little folk, are outgrown. It is wise when increasing the allowance to also increase the demands upon it. For example, consent to the extra money, which seldom will fail to be asked for, if by a mutual agreement it shall now include some of the accessories of a wardrobe. It may be handkerchiefs, stockings, tooth paste or powder, lotions, ties, ribbons—any or all of these, or whatever different things are found advisable. It is for the parent, who hitherto has supplied the things, to know that such extras amount to in the individual instance. To such a sum added to the original one, there should be, if anyway possible, some increase in the luxury alowance.

* * * * * * *

And so by gradual degrees a young persons gets accustomed to knowing what his or her expenses are and how to handle the money to meet heeds and save something over for pin money. Parents should never forget to appreciate the actual outlay which will be involved when increasing an allowance. It should permit of getting the articles without infringing on a certain percent for what I am terming luxuries, that is, non-essentials.

* * * * * * *

When a young person appreciates that a sum added to the allowance and supposed to cover certain things does not have to, since either father or mother will supplement it whenever he or she exceeds the allowance, no responsibility has to be assumed. It is wisest in most cases of this sort to cut down the allowance to cover luxuries only, and keep to the sum, and supply the young person with the essentials to meet needs and to suit tastes.

Be Beautiful

Over in the ruins of Pompeii, that famous Italian city that was buried by an eruption of Mr. Vesuvius centuries ago, and was only rediscovered in the eighteenth century, a complete soap making establishment, stocked with well-preserved cakes of soap, was recently found. And I think it extremely interesting to know that those early Romans who were killed hundreds and hundreds of years ago, were just as much concerned with cleanliness as we moderns are.

Of course, I don't imagine that the soaps manufactured in that era were any too good. They probably were rather crude products, when compared with the large variety of fine-milled soaps that are produced today. Yet there are crude soaps in existence even today. And that's why every damsel who values her skin should learn to select soaps wisely.

It's surprising how careless some women are about the soap they sue on their faces. Don't ever choose a soap because you like its color . . . or its scent . . . or its shape. Choose a soap only that you know to be a pure, bland product. For the constant use of a poor grade of soap may do irreparable injury to your skin.

Soap is a combination of pure oil and pure alkali. The alkali does not assist in cleansing the skin. It is merely a preservative used to keep the soap from turning rancid. When too much alkali is put into a soap, all of it does not combine with the oil, and the excess is left in the preparation in the form of "free alkali". And it is this "free alkali" that, because of its caustic action, dries and cracks the skin.

The really good soap must be free of an excess of alkali. It must be a neutral product in which the oil and alkali are completely combined. A high grade of pure castile soap is ordinarily excellent, and there are many pure vegetable oil soaps that can be safely used. But the average woman usually has to do a bit of experimenting before she finds the ideal soap for her own particular skin. And what she should search for is a soap that lathers smoothly and creamily, that removes dirt and grime from the skin effectively, and that leaves her skin feeling soft and smooth.

Bowmanville Ties O.B.A.A. Series With 7-3 Victory

RUBBERTOWN SCORES FOUR RUNS IN BIG SIXTH TO COP VICTORY PLAY THIRD GAME IN PORT HOPE

HAS GOOD SUPPORT.

Cogs Field Work Not of Best, Allow Number of Scratch Hits Go for Runs.

Cogs dropped the second game of their O.B.A.A. series to Bowmanville, 7-3, yesterday before a crowd of four hundred at the Exhibition Grounds. One big frame—the sixth in which they scored four runs—gave the visitors the win and tied up the series, forcing a third game. It will be played in Port Hope on Saturday. Last night's game was only a fair tilt with Red Bowman holding Cogs in check all through.

Bowman allowed only seven hits, mostly scattered, while he fanned eleven and walked just one in a smart exhibition of hurling. He was seldom in trouble and had good support most of the fixture. Lefty Billingsley pitched hitless ball for five innings for Cogs but the Rubbertown hitters got to him for three clouts in a row in the sixth and Lefty retired. Percy Vannest finished in fair style, though he was hit pretty hard. Cogs had only one error, and turned in some smart fielding, but they allowed a number of scratch hits that should have been outs, and twice they missed perfect double-plays.

Leads Winners At Bat

Corden led Bowmanville at bat with two for four, while Osborne, Moore and Piper all got two safeties in five appearances. The pitcher was the only one to go hitless. For the losers, Masterson with one hit in one trip to the plate led the way, no one getting two safe blows. Corden and Bowman did some nice fielding for the winners, while Padgett, Crary, Mein and Cadd all looked good at times for the Clubmen.

A minutes' silence was observed for the late Curly Leberr at the start of the game. Cogs got a cheap run in the first when three errors and a steal allowed Padgett to get on and go around. Piper got it back for Bowmanville in the second, being safe on a fielder's choice and tallying on W. Bagnell's high fly to deep centre which Moore dropped. The visitors got one more in the fifth when W. Bagnell walked, stole and scored on Cameron's single. The Davis bunch got it back in their half, Rogers singling, taking third on Crary's hit and scoring on Padgett's safety.

Bowmanville won in the sixth with four markers. Osborne, Moore and Corden all singled sharply one after the other with none out. Vannest relieved Billingsley but Piper, W. Bagnell and Bates all came through with singles before the side could be retired. In Cogs' sixth, hits by Rooke and Moore were wasted. They did get a run in the eighth when Masterson, batting for Wilson, singled to right, stole second and scored on Cadd's drive. The visitors got their last run in the ninth, Osborne being safe on a fielder's choice when T. Bagnell, who had singled, was tossed out. Osborne moved up on Moore's hit, took third on an out and raced in on Piper's infield scratch hit.

CLOCKMAKERS IN GIRLS' PLAYOFFS

Westclox Tumbles Keene Nine 8-6 in Close Game at the Bowl.

The nifty Westclox softball nine practically cinched a place in the playoffs, in the second half of the Ladies' City and District Loop, last night at the Ashburnham Bowl when they tumbled their old rivals, the Keene team, 8 to 6, in a close game. This victory gives the Clockmakers six wins in seven starts, and drops Keene into third place, while Omemee, who have won one game more than the Keenesters, are now in second place.

Keene owe their defeat to sloppy fielding, kicking in with nine miscues, while the opposition, although making four errors, nevertheless, played a heads-up style of ball during the entire game, being at their best in the pinches. Mildred White pitched the nine frames for the winners, and held Keene to eight hits, which consisted of four homers, a double and three singles. She fanned two and walked none. Jean Munro started for the losers, but retired at the end of the fifth in favor of Marilyn McCarthy.

Doubleheader Here Saturday Afternoon

The Dukes are here Saturday to play a double-header with the Petes in Riverside Park. First game starts at 2.15 and second one commences ten minutes after the opening fixture is finished. This second game is a seven-inning one. The twin bill is important as it will settle the top team in the league, and thereby affect the third game of the playoffs. If Belleville—which plays Kingston one more game—finishes ahead of the Petes, the third playoff game will be in Belleville. If the locals finish on top, they get the third titular tilt here. Both games should be worth seeing. The opening game of the Central League playoffs will be staged at three o'clock Monday (Labor Day) in Riverside, between Belleville and the Petes.

Old Time Athlete Slowing Down Now

EDMONTON, August 29. — (C. P.) —Ambrose H. Dickins, 74 year old sportsman, complained to-day because he is slowing down a little these days and is getting all out of practice at his erstwhile pastimes.

Rugby, fencing, boxing, soccer, tennis, curling, hockey and cricket he now finds a little tiring. Even 18 holes of golf are hard to work in but in the misty 70's and 80's it was a different story, he says.

Ambrose at one time captained the Merchiston Castle School cricket team at Edinburgh and later played with Scotland against England. He won the Edinburgh fencing championship in 1877 and in 1866 captured the Manitoba tennis singles championship. Ambrose kept in the top-rankers of Western Canada tennis until he was 65 years old.

ROWE FAILS TO SET BIG TIME HURLING RECORD

Athletics End Schoolboy's Mound Streak at 16, Defeat Tigers 12-7.

DETROIT WINS OPENER.

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Although the lanky "Schoolboy", Lynwood Rowe, couldn't boast a new American League record for consecutive pitching victories to-day, Detroit Tigers could point with pride to a five-game lead as they returned to their home sector after their final tour of the east.

Despite Rowe's defeat yesterday after 16 straight triumphs on the hill, the Tigers got an even break with the Athletics in their closing doubleheader, slamming out a 12-7 victory in the opener with a 20-hit attack marked by a six-run rally in the eighth before Rowe took his 13-5 shellacking. And that came at te end of a tour which, according to predictions freely offered when it began, was to see Detroit strike a serious slump.

At the same time the second-place Yankees dropped a mound duel to the White Sox, 3-1, and lost a half-game to Detroit in the pennant race.

Rowe's trouble, as he admitted after the game, was that he "Didn't have it"—it being the stuff to halt the Philadelphia batters who had a taste of swatting when they made 16 blows in the opener and held lead to the semi-final inning. He gave up a dozen hits and 10 runs before he finally was relieved by Vic Sorrell in the seventh. Just the same it was a big day all around as 33,718 fans, the largest crowd in the history of Shibe Park, turned out to see the Schoolboy make his unsuccessful bid for a record better than those of Walter Johnson, Joe Wood and Lefty Grove.

The Yanks ran into difficulty when Johnny Broaca gave a couple of passes in the first inning and the Hose followed with two of the four hits they made. That produced three runs and Ted Lyons held the New Yorkers at bay, giving only six hits.

Detroit Gets Set To Handle Crowds

DETROIT, Aug. 30.—Detroit has ample accommodations for the thousands of visitors expected here for the World's Series, J. Lee Barrett, executive vice president of the Detroit Convention and Tourist Bureau, said today.

"Detroit hotels can produce 25,000 first class rooms in the downtown area at reasonable rates," he said. "Detroit is accustomed to crowds and its convention experience will make it comparatively easy to handle the baseball fans."

Detroit hotels are getting ready to issue notice to the entire country that there will be ample accommodations for out-of-town visitors, he said.

SMELTERS WIN FROM COE HILL

Tie Final Series in Trent Valley League With 5-1 Victory.

FRANK LEAL ON MOUND.

MARMORA, Aug. 30. (Examiner Correspondence)—Frank Leal, who has not pitched a full game of ball since 1926, (the year he piloted Deloro into the Intermediate championship) lasted the nine innings on the mound for the Smelters at Deloro on Wednesday evening when the Homesters took the second game of the Trent Valley play-offs with Coe Hill by the score of 5-1.

Through a flip of the coin the third deciding game will be played at Coe Hill next Wednesday afternoon.

For the first four innings the Coe Hill batters went out three in a row, the ball not travelling past the infield. Deloro obtained two runs in the first through M. Callery's double, bringing in Leal and Stewart. In the fifth, Boudreau got one of the best hits of the game, his double scoring Stewart and M. Callery. In the succeeding innings Coe Hill got a break with one man down, the retirement of the team through a double play was missed by a mere fraction. Lehigh was nipped running to second from first but H. Giles, the batter, was allowed to reach first, ultimately reaching third, he scored for his team on Rollins' single. O'Neill was spiked in the knee in this innings but after being bandaged continued to play.

In their half, Deloro secured the final run of the game as Simmons raced home from third on an overthrow. In the fifth with two men down, Watt connected for a fine triple but the next batter was struck out. McTavish for the losers pitched a good game and showed no weakening while Leal delighted the home fans through enduring the whole game.

Fred Callery who has been doing most of the pitching for Deloro this season, left a week ago to take a position in the province of Quebec and Leal's comeback provided a real relish under the circumstances.

LEAFS COP 6TH STRAIGHT WIN

Gain Half Game on Bears With 5-4 Victory Over Royals.

WINGS KEEP PACE.

(By The Associated Press)

Although they have less than two weeks in which to complete the job, Toronto Maple Leafs have begun to take definite strides toward a higher berth in the International League standing. When they turned back Montreal Royals, 5-4, last night, the Leafs won their sixth successive game and gained a half game on the pace-setting Newark Bears. They couldn't pick up any ground on the second-place Rochester Red Wings, however, as the Wings copped a 4-3 decision from Buffalo under the floodlights after Newark and Albany had split a pair of 1-0 games during the afternoon.

Since starting their winning streak August 25, the Leafs have recorded 3½ games against Newark and four against Rochester, but they still have 2½ to pick up if they are to overhaul the Red Wings before the season closes Sept. 3 and five to tie Newark.

Toronto made a fast start toward the sixth victory last night by bumping Clyde Castleman for ten hits and five runs in the six innings he pitched. The Royals could hit Al Hollingsworth and Charley Lucas only six times, but took advantage of the former's wildness to make the game close.

Albany took the opener from Newark when Bill Harris limited the league leaders to three hits and Gus Lucas settled the argument with Vito Tamulis by belting a homer in the sixth. Ray Prim followed with a two-hit hurling job, retiring the first 16 batters in order.

The split enabled the Senators to gain a half game on Buffalo in the fourth-place struggle as Ira Smith engineered the Bison's defeat by limiting them to two hits in eight innings, before being driven out in the ninth.

Baltimore Orioles, making a strenuous effort to get out of the cellar, picked up two games on Syracuse Chiefs by taking both ends of a night double-header from the seventh-place club, 3-2 and 9-2. The Orioles bunched their blows more effectively as each team made nine hits in the opener and seven in the afterpiece.

TOO MUCH FOR FAN

CHICAGO, Aug. 30 (CP)—When the Chicago Cubs rallied in the ninth inning yesterday to beat the New York Giants, Owen Bickman, 30, listening to a report of the game, slumped in his chair and died. His death was attributed to heart trouble.

HIS HOSTESS WAS COLDLY COURTEOUS

● He was likable, witty, well-dressed; would be handsome were his face cleanly shaved. But he couldn't hold her interest—she thought only of that horrid stubble! . . . . .

Such a social error is more unpardonable than ever, now that Gillette "Blue Blades" make even two shaves a day—when necessary—simple and comfortable. PUTS McLARNIN AND MANAGER ON PAN FOR "MONEY GRABBING"

(By DAMON RUNYON)

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y., Aug. 30—Making Barney Ross favorite over Jimmy McLarnin in their fight next month, is what the bookmakers call an overlay, in the opinion of the writer.

Ross is a real good lightweight on the order of, say, Freddy Welsh, or Sammy Mandell. He cannot punch. His strength is his boxing intelligence, his defensive ability, and his courage. The writer thinks Ross measures up well with any of our lightweights of the past twenty years.

But he does not think Ross would have had any business in the ring with a welterweight like Mickey Walker, or Jack Britton, or Ted (Kid) Lewis. Unless the Irishman from Vancouver is all done, washed up, a hollow shell, a has-been, and all that sort of thing, he ought to lick Ross.

If he misses this time, McLarnin might as well get married and go away on a nice honeymoon, and forget all about fighting any more. He will have considerable advantage in weight over Ross, is a far better puncher, if he will let his punches fly, and is a more seasoned boxer, though no smarter.

Must Fight Him

The way for McLarnin to lick Ross is to walk into him and knock him out in the first few rounds. Without any shillyshallying about it. Ross has so far displayed nothing that should hurt McLarnin. Ross has a teasing left hand, and is a wonder on defence.

McLarnin is one of the greatest punchers the welterweight division has ever produced. Perhaps "was" is better. There was no evidence of his punch in his first fight with Ross, a dumb fight on McLarnin's part. He let Ross make him fight as Ross desired.

McLarnin's left was a mere lob. He was dropping his right around Ross' neck with no idea of accuracy. McLarnin has always been bothered by good lefts, but a left that cannot hurt him should not keep him away from an opponent. He will fight better next month than he did in June, if for no other reason than that he cannot fight any worse.

McLarnin Manager Criticized

The writer never liked the way McLarnin's manager always sought the best of it in weight, money, and everything else. It may have been good management, but it put McLarnin in a poor light. This was scarcely McLarnin's fault, to be sure.

However, he always acquiesces in anything the manager does, and he never seemed adverse to beating up smaller boys. Thus it was some satisfaction to see a smaller boy finally beating up McLarnin.

But the writer has never underestimated McLarnin's fighting ability. He saw him, as a mere featherweight, give some amazing displays of boxing skill. He saw him make some great battles as a lightweight. It was as a welterweight that McLarnin, through his manager, began taking advantage of weight and teams because of his drawing power.

McLarnin has never been whipped in a return match, as the writer recalls. His second fights against the same opponent, have always been good. He has a chance to regain his welterweight title next month, and if he can rekindle some of his old ambition, he ought to do it.

Ross is a great welterweight. He is not a great welterweight. It is possible he has caught McLarnin at the end of the McLarnin string, but the writer has yet to be convinced of that. McLarnin has been going a long time, but his manner of living has been so clean that it is is hard to believe that his career has ended.

"Eb." Taylor with his eleventh hour entry was successful in winning the last open mixed tournament of the season.

—o—

To Frank (Grandpa) Wise who also was a late entry, goes the honor of coming second.

—o—

Twenty Rinks from this district braved the cool breezes to enjoy the games and stayed 'till midnight.

—o—

Harold Freemans' rink captured fourth prize—while the only prize to go out of town was the one C. Smith of Warkworth won for having the correct average in the last round.

—o—

Up 'Till Noon Taylor had no thought of going into the tournament—and then see what happened.

—o—

Not Only Did Wise beat Cairns' hired help in the third game but he also won in the play-offs—a nice day's work.

—o—

All Rinks looked alike to Wise—he mowed them down as fast as they came up. He asked no quarter, and believe us, he gave none. He pushed Flannery to one side and then walked right into Cairns and sent him to the showers. In the play-offs he met and defeated Sedgewick—used Freeman the same way and then if it wasn't enough he beat Cairns again—just for luck. They all looked alike to him; it was just his day and he made the best of it.

—o—

To Those Who went out and made up rinks at the last minute just to "help out," the club is greatly indebted—especially is this so with Taylor, Wise, Sorenson and Blakely.

—o—

Up At Port Perry yesterday our boys were in the money. The rink was skipped by G. Gimblett, and they landed in third place. R. Bacon, C. Williamson, J. Fitzpatrick and G. Gimblett, skip, each received an electric lamp.

It comes about that Oshawa—the team that really got the C.O.B.L. started this year by their announcement last November at the annual loop meeting that they would not play in the Central League this year—wind up this loop's schedule here Saturday. Les Dukes des Chev play two tussles here, one at 2.15, and the other naturally some little time later. But as it'll only go seven frames—this second fixture—folks may still catch the warehouse before it closes if they hurry. These games are somewhat important, too, as they will affect the Petes' standing. If we finish in first place, we get the first and third playoff games here. But if Belleville—and they play Kingston Saturday, tops us, then they get the second and third games there.

Quite a bunch of citizens sauntered over the bridge in the cool—and decidedly chilly it was, what?—of the twilight last eve and saw Westclox gals hurdle Keene, 8 to 6. A neat number it was, too. The Alarm damsels are now about sure of a playoff berth while ye Keene cuties are shunted into third place back of Omemee. The losers tried a bit of soccer and succeeded beautifully—kicking the ball around the field much to the delight of the Westclox rooters. There's an exhibition tilt at the Bowl tonight betwixt Cobourg and C.G.E.

Cogs got slapped over with a 7-3 defeat by Bowmanville in the ball game down at the Grounds ala Exhibish. They couldn't hit a Mister Red Bowman whereas Mister Bowman's Bowmanville bohunks just couldn't resist ye alants as served up by Lefty Billingsley and Percy Vannest. They found Lefty tough onions for five frames but when they climbed aboard and rode him right off the mound. Percy got by better but they bingled a bunch of his pitches. Looks like it'll take Casey Masterson again to lick this team. Third game is in Port Hope at three Saturday. Don't sell Bowmanville short—look what happened the cocky Cobourg crew.

Nothing really outstanding about the game that we saw except the umpiring of Dutch Osborne on balls and strikes. We rate him ahead of any umpire we've seen this year—although he may have his off-days, too. This ex-pro puck star watched the corners carefully and called very few all evening that anyone took exception to. And he hollered out plenty loud, something like this: "Ball, it's on the inside", or "Ball, it's too low." The fans didn't ride him and both teams thought he was okay. You can't do much better than that. He might be worth a try in the C.O.B.L. playoffs if neutral umps are needed. We know Shiner Johnston and Ken Colling have the assignments for the first three playoff contests.

Kiwanis lacrossers practice at two in the Ashburnham Bowl Saturday afternoon. They're getting set to meet the Cobourg-Belleville winner in the group finals September 4th at home and Sept. 7th away, goals counting on the round. Cobourg won the first semi-final game at home the other p.m. with Belleville, 16-10. It was a rough old tilt with two fist fights breaking out. They play back in Belleville tomorrow.

The biggest local softball tournament of the season will be the L.O.L. County annual picnic and tourney Labor Day at the Oval. A flock of teams have entered so far in the senior, intermediate, girls' and junior divisions, and more are expected by Monday. Good prizes are up for the winners while every team on the grounds will get fifty dance tickets for Rae's Pavilion. Play starts up there as early as nine o'clock in the morning and will go pretty well all day. With good grub, races and probably other games, it should be a lively spot. Send entries to J. A. Holden at 593 Lock Street.

A despatch from London, Ontario, dealing with appointments to the Ontario Athletic Commission—a sort of political job—states: "W. G. (Peeney) Mills of Belleville is, according to word here, also mentioned for appointment to the commission. He has captained the Belleville senior ball team since 1919, and in that time the team has won two provincial championships and has been in the finals twice. He has turned down offers to turn professional catcher several times."

The honesty of baseball teams has been shown repeatedly. Plenty of the world series have only gone four or five games instead of the full seven, when huge gates resulted from every contest. Look at our own loop just recently when either Oshawa or Kingston had a chance at a playoff berth if one team won two double-headers from the other. Neither one would consent to "throw" a fixture and they fought it out on even terms, thereby eliminating each other. And look yesterday at the American League game in Philadelphia. Schoolboy Rowe was shooting for a new American Loop record of seventeen straight pitching victories. The game didn't mean a thing to the Athletics, yet they went out and beat Rowe decisively. We could point to a dozen more such incidents which might give the cynics, who figure everything is "fixed", something to think over.

Picking 'em off the grapevine: Cogs' loss yesterday was their first reverse since Picton beat them last summer . . . . Terrier Juvenile play an exhibition ball game at 5.15 tonight against Millbrook in the Exhibition Grounds . . . . Fashion-Crafts—next year's softball squad—play a game at Camp 4 today or tomorrow . . . . Orphans go to Oshawa for their return O.A.S.A. tilt Friday . . . The Asjmas Club of Belleville has been communicated with by a local man re a possible Central Ont. O.R.F.U. group, including this town . . . . If Spook Scriver feels okay and shows his oldtime form, he may be pitching in the playoffs here yet . . . . What with school starting again and heavy undies appearing in the shops, it won't be long till the advice again will be: Do your Xmas hinting early. . . . . All signed players of local Kiwanis lacrosse team are asked to attend practise at Armouries this evening at 6.30 o'clock.

Canzoneri Beaten In Brooklyn Battle

BROOKLYN, N.Y., Aug. 30 (AP)—Tony Canzoneri, who has held two world championships, is still looking for the right way to get started on a campaign to regain his lost lightweight title while Young Harry Dublinsky is looking forward to further honors, preferably through a shot at Champion Barney Ross.

Dublinsky outpointed Canzoneri in a 10-round bout before 8,564 fans at Ebbets Field last night.

After a slow start, the Chicagoan warmed up in the fifth round and proceeded to batter Tony around the ring during the last half of the scrap.

Dublinsky weighed 139 pounds; Canzoneri, 134½.

OFF C.N.E. BREAKWATER.

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—(CP)—The world's professional championship sculling race set for tomorrow night between Bobby Pearce of Hamilton, the defending champion, and Bill Miller of Philadelphia has been postponed indefinitely because of sudden illness on the part of Miller, Canadian National Exhibition officials announced today.

The nature of Miller's sudden illness was not learned immediately. His private physician advised the exhibition, however, Miller would not be able to race Pearce tomorrow. An official statement clarifying the situation was expected to be issued before long.

Miller got into the finals last Friday by defeating Bert Barry, while Pearce triumphed over Eric Phelps.

ROBSON NOW TIED WITH JULES HUOT

Both Have Scores of 141 for 36 Holes of Medal Play in Quebec Tourney.

MONTREAL, Aug. 30 (C.P.).—A veteran Ontario former champion and a youthful French-Canadian who has yet to figure in the money were battling down the home stretch to-day in the Canadian professional golf championship tournament.

Jules Huot, the stocky little Kent House, Quebec, professional who flashed into prominence last week when he romped away with the Quebec open championship by defeating several of the outstanding professionals and amateurs in Ontario and Quebec, was tied with Lex Robson, of Islington, Ont., former champion, in the van of the field to-day.

Both had scores of 141 for the 36 holes of medal play. To-day they will play 36 holes more, and at the close of the day a champion will be named.

Huot failed to keep up the pace he set over the opening 18 holes of Tuesday when he carded a 68, two below par, to tie for the lead with Dick Borthwick, Toronto, but his 73 was enough to enable him to hold his position. Robson moved up from second position to a tie for the leader by carding 71, one above par.

Willie Lamb, Lambton, Toronto, defending champion, hit his stride after a poor opening round and went around the course in 69, one below par, for the best card of the day. His 75 on Tuesday left him within striking distance, three strokes behind the leaders, with 144.

Bobby Alston maintained his position immediately behind the leaders when he added a 72 to his opening day round of 70 for a total of 142.

CHAPTER 27

"Winter," said Dilly, "is on the way. Even the hens know it. They go around making mournful little noises, and lifting their legs like rheumatic old ladies."

"It has rained," Giles said, "for 17 days. If you hadn't come this morning, Dilly, Scripps and I would have been drowned in the flood of our own depression."

Dilly flashed a glance at him, "I didn't know you were ever depressed.

"But 17 days of rain . . .? Dilly, if you've brought lunch for us in that basket, I shall fall at your feet in gratitude."

"I've more than brought lunch. I've brought chowder, hot as hot, and everything to go with it."

"It's because I like parties myself," Dilly told him. "You two are such pleasant pals. William calls us the three musketeers of the lunch basket."

"Nobody by the wildest stretch of the imagination could call me a pleasant pal," Scripps said, "I commend your charity, Dilly."

The three of them were in Scripps' room. The bookshop above was closed. Giles came to it every day, set his shelves in order, worked over his accounts, and spent hours reading the books he loved. But there were no customers. No one used the boardwalk at this season, and a drug store in the town supplied casual readers with magazines and the latest novels.

Giles had taken one or two journeys besides the one to Portland and had added richly to his stock. But the Portland trip stood out in his mind as a great catastrophe, for when he had come back he had found Joan gone. "Fool that I was," he had raged, inwardly, "to desert her at such a time."

For he felt it a desertion. There had been a mystery about her going. The Hallams and Mrs. Delafield had stayed on at the hotel until its closing. But no one seemed to know Miss Dudley's address. She had, it was explained, simply gone on ahead of the others. There was rumors that the engagement to Hallam was broken. But no one knew.

Giles had felt that their friendship deserved more than this. Surely she might have written him a line. But she had not written. She had, apparently, not thought of him. He had meant nothing to her, and that was the end of it.

But he knew it was not the end for him. She was in his heart forever. And because of her going winter had, indeed, come to him.

He had done the best to be the same to Scripps and Amelie. Yet there were times when he wondered if they did not note the heaviness which had come upon him. He often saw Scripps watching him, and now and then Amelie complained, "What makes you so quiet?"

So more than ever today, he welcomed Dilly with her brightness and her basket.

She seemed her usual gay self until the feast was over. Then suddenly he said, "I'm really not as cheerful as I look."

They demanded, "Why not?".

"Oh, William and I are feeling the weather. We've had a royal fight. And we are still in the midst of it."

"But my dear," Giles began.

"I know," she interrupted, "everybody thinks we are cooing doves. But we aren't. William is playing the heavy husband. Laying down the law. He says I'm not to stay at the lighthouse this winter. That it is too isolated for baby, and that when the big storms come, we can only be reached by boats. He wants me to live in town, and he'll come over when he can. And I have said I won't be separated from him, and there we've stuck . . ." She flung out her hands in a gesture of despair.

"Perhaps he's right, Dilly."

"No, he isn't, Giles. How can you say it? It may be better for baby. But it isn't better for William. He never thinks of himself. But I've never left him since the day we were married. And I won't now."

"In other words, it is an impasse?"

"Yes. I want you to come over and talk to him. Will you?"

"Of course. But he may throw me out for interfering."

"No. He'll listen . . . and I want you to tell him that if I can't have him and my little house and my old hens, I shall . . . die . . ."

He promised, and presently took her down to her boat. When he came back he said, "There's a look of snow in the sky."

Giles poked more wood in the round little stove which heated the room, and when the old gull settled himself comfortably beside it he said: "Aren't you glad you have a warm hearth, Peter?"

It was Scripps who answered, with bitterness, "He'd rather have wings."

"If only we could have what we want, Scripps."

Scripps challened him, "If you could have what you want, what would it be?"

"Oh . . . a thousand things . . ." Giles tried to laugh off the dark mood which had again come upon him. "Just now there are some old libraries in Portland that a man wants me to look at . . ."

"Oh, books . . .! Don't you ever think of anything else?"

Scripps hated to have him go and said so. "Amelie is always restless."

"I know. Yet I sometimes wonder, Scripps, if I went oftener she might learn to do without me."

"She'll never learn to do without you. It is growing worse instead of better."

Giles knew that he spoke the truth. Amelie's demands were more and more insistent. With the shop closed, she saw no reason why Giles should not spend the days with her. She was urgent in her arguments that she needed him more than Scripps in his shop. Giles humored her sometimes to a greater extent than he feared was wise. Yet he dreaded the moments of hysteria with which any opposition to her plans was met.

He found his island home thus taking on gradually the aspect of a prison. He seemed, indeed, spiritually, in chains. In the weeks of dreary weather, Amelie in her bright gowns, playing out her weird game, seemed like some fantastic puppet, acting without her own volition. Often as he drove his boat through the waters and the island rose dark and forbidding against the gray seas, he had a wild desire to leave it all behind him, and to find for himself some separate adventure. Yet he knew that he could not, and would not if he could.

A few days after Dilly's visit, he found his way to the lighthouse tower and had a talk with William. "You can throw me out if you wish, William, but Dilly thought you ought to get an outside point of view."

"I don't see how an outside point of view will help the two of us to come to an understanding. It was very bad last winter, with the baby a wee thing, and all those big storms. And when we couldn't get a doctor, Dilly was frantic. I thought then that it must not happen again. God knows I don't want to be here alone, but I can stand the hardness."

"Why should I let her?"

For a moment, Giles stood looking out on the gray of the racing clouds and tumbling sea. "Perhaps that's the mistake we men make. We all want softness for our women. Yet softness never makes for strength. Dilly would rather fight things out with you, William. Some women ask only easy things. But Dilly doesn't. And you are to be envied. If I were you I'd let her stay."

"But if anything happens to the baby?"

That seemed to settle it, and when at last they went back to the little house and announced the decision, Dilly embraced them both. "You had to make William feel he wasn't selfish," she said, as she stood in the circle of her husband's arm. "I couldn't do it. He has such a nice New England conscience that he thinks anything he likes to do must be wrong."

THE STARS SAY . . .

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Friday August 31

The planetary configurations bearing rule on the events of this day point to some lively and enterprising conditions, but these may be characterized by an element of intrigue, treachery or peculiarity calling for definite wariness and cleverness to cope with. This may be felt in employment or in those business matters of a diplomatic or subtle nature. There are signs of unnecessary extravagances and indulgences, with financial hazards in these secret dealings.

Those whose birthday it is are confronted by a year calling for much discretion and sound judgment as well as personal restraint to cope with conditions of a singular, subtle or intriguing nature. There are financial perils in such openings, as well as scope for loss by unnecessary extravagances and outlays. Employment seems to be jeopardized by similar dangers.

A child born on this day should be energetic, resourceful and aggressive, but may encounter many temptations to extravagances, self-indulgence and certain menaces to success having a peculiar or treacherous quality. It may lean to the occult or physchic.

SCHOOL MAY NOT BE BARRED

WINDSOR, Ont., Aug. 29 (C.P.)—Possibility that Riverside, Sandwich and Sandwich East pupils will not be barred from Windsor-Walkerville Vocational School for the fall term was visioned by secretary Whyte of the school board to-day.

Notice had been sent the municipalities that back fees must be paid up or pupil sexcluded. To-day a check was received from the Department of Education covering fees to the end of June as agreed by the Henry Government. It has been intimated th... present government will guarantee payment for the fall term for pupils from there defaulting municipalities.

10,000 Fires Yearly Laid To Smoking

TORONTO, Aug. 29. —(CP)— J. Grove Smith of Ottawa today laid stress in a paper before the Association of Canadian Fire Marshalls on the number of fires originating from tobacco smoking.

Use of cigarettes by persons of all ages and both sexes has resulted in smoking being blamed for almost 10,000 fires annually, said Mr. Smith. The speaker, Dominion Fire Commissioner, said that with a 100-percent increase in cigarette consumption fires reported having originated from the use have quadrupled.

"Carelessness," he said, "is fast becoming an ingrained habit. No remedy for this condition is practicable so long as the results of negligence can be unloaded on the public through the medium of fire insurance.

Those old favourite shoes of yours may have lots of mileage in them yet

—If you keep them "Nugget"-ed. For "Nugget" works well into the leather, keeping the wet out and the sun from baking it hard. "Nugget" penetrates right into the seams and welts, protecting and weather-proofing.

Shoes that know the simple "Nugget" ritual, last far longer than the hard, dry uppers in footwear left to the mercy of the weather. They look better, too. And, when your shoes grow dusty or mud-spattered there's a bright, gleaming "Nugget" polish underneath that will come shining through at the flick of a cloth. All this for next to nothing per shine.

Ladies who wish to keep their white shoes smart will appreciate "Nugget" White Kid Cleaner.

BEHIND the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

By HARRISON CARROLL.

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 30.—It's good for a chuckle, the way June Brewster disposed of a party pest the other evening

He was soused to the eyes, but became indignant when anyone mentioned it. "Show me a straight line and I'll walk it," he would shout. "I can walk a straight line as good as anyone here."

He kept at it until the party was on the verge of breaking up to get rid of him. Finally, June went to the door of the apartment and opened it. Taking a lipstick out of her bag, she drew a straight line on the floor of the apartment, over the door sill and out into the hall.

"There, mister," she said, "Walk that."

DOCTORS ARE conferring to see whether Bing Crosby will have to go into the hospital to rid himself of a troublesome appendix. The star has been suffering pain for several weeks. He went to one doctor and was advised to have the operation. Another told him there probably was no need of it. The new conference was arranged by Albert Kaufman of the Paramount studios. Bing is supposed to start his new picture, "Here Is My Heart", in a short time, and the studio wants to know whether there is any chance of the appendix acting up in the middle of production. If so, they'll urge the crooning star to get the matter over with at once.

THE TOBY WING- Jackie Coogan romance grows more amusing. The latest arguments between them is whether Jackie is a good enough mechanic to build a miniature automobile. He guaranteed to do it if Toby would pay for the material. So what? So she did and now Jackie is earnestly endeavoring to make good.

There are only 250 in Hollywood. Fifty of these photograph 99 per cent. of all current pictures. It is harder to become rated as a cameraman than a star. There have been only 10 new cameramen in the past five years. During that time 167 new stars have come. A camerman's salary runs anywhere from $250 to $800 a week. The average movie life of a cameraman is 25 years. The average movie life of a star is three years. Cameramen who "shot" famous stars years ago now try to get them extra work.

ANN DVORAK still hopes to persuade her newly-found father, Edward McKim, to make his home in Hollywood, but the movies probably will be out. Her dad says he has been away from pictures too many years and is doing all right in real estate. McKim knew all the big stars of the old days. He was a contemporary of D. W. Griffith at the old Biograph studio and directed early pictures of Mary Pickford, Maurice Costello, Broncho Billy Anderson, John Bunny and Flora Finch. And he acted with Mack Sennett.

What well-known writer-actor, who is noted for his wit and for his love of the grape, was asked to move out this week by an aggravated hotel management—but got the last laugh by an hilarious exit line as he went out the door?

DID YOU KNOW— That Lewis Stone, one of the screen's best-dressed actors, has never had a valet?

BERT WHEELER and Robert Woolsey are here again Friday on the screen of the Capitol Theatre with a bag full of new tricks, crazy capers, riotous comedy and gorgeous girls galore in "Cockeyed Cavaliers," their current RKO-Radio co-starring mirthquake.

As a couple of goofy gallants of the medieval ages, Wheeler and Woolsey trip through a melange of merriment, melody and misfortune with Thelma Todd and Dorothy Lee. "Cockeyed Cavaliers" revolves around the chiseling proclivities of Bert and Bob in the days of old when knights were bold. Dot Lee, as a comely commoner who is trying to evade a marriage with the roly poly Duke of Weskit, joins the dizzy duo and shares their weals and woes. Then Thelma Todd enters the scene, and the comedy catapults dizzily to a side-splitting climax picturing a frenzied hunt for a wild boar.

'Lefty' Lesurf Hurls No-Hit, No-Run Game

TORONTO, Aug. 30.—Behind the brilliant no-hit pitching of 'Lefty' Lesurf, former Peterborough minor ball player, Hillcrest defeated Riverdale Grads by 11 to 0 in the first game of their T.A.B.A. junior playoffs last night. The second game will be played on Saturday afternoon at Willowvale Park at 2.45. Lesurf held his opponents hitless and runless, and not a Grad player reached third base. Lynch, Russell and Tunis led the hitters for the winners, with the first two named getting home runs. Black and Ross were best for the losers.

Character From Handwriting

By BLANCHE A. DRAPER

A Feature Conducted by Peterborough's Leading Handwriting Analyist for the Readers of The Examiner

Full name and address (complete) must be given in all samples sent in.

E. L. Dunn,
204 Richmond Street West,
Toronto, Ontario.

Your handwriting for analysis accredits you with an abundance of good common sense. You are genial and appreciate anything of an inspiring or spiritual nature. There is a tendency to designate the occult for distinctive personal reasons. You prefer to act on your own initiative, but can obey orders from your superiors implicitly. You are not always diplomatic; though you wish to be, and sometimes you go to extremes without the slightest intention on your part. Psychology as a study should interest you, but you would find it necessary to put it into practice on yourself first. In affections you are often too demonstrative; this is due in part to the fact that you desire to please and that you are self-conscious and try to hide your true feelings. You will appreciate the fact that you say exactly opposite to what you mean many times.

The decided downstrokes attendant to your capital letters, illustrates executive ability, and portrays the fact that success awaits your efforts in the field of every-day business. The small uneven formation of the lesser letters reveals a reserve which is peculiar to you as part of your personality, and indicates rapidity of thought, a keenness of perception of facts, and a noteworthy tendency to hurry over lesser details.

Ernest Brown,
176 Adeline St., City.

Your writing for analysis shows that you are a person with a very changeable disposition. You do not seem to be able to concentrate, or set your mind upon any one particular thing for long at a time. There is a tendency to start work and then not finish it. You are easily dissatisfied and restless, desiring change of friends and scenery and even of clothing. There are many times when you let your rather vivid imagination run away with you, then you feel and act morose and stubborn; blaming the fault of your displeasure on somebody else, usually the first and nearest person at hand at the moment It would pay you to try to develop your will-power. Tell yourself that you can do things and that you are quite capable of doing anything you want to, provided you really want to. There is so much good in you that it would be a pity to let it remain dormant, so dress to suit your good taste; look on the bright side of life and happiness will ensue. I have told you what to do in order to make some sort of progress in your life, and I am glad to note that you are ambitious, but your age is against you right now. However, keep up your courage, and no doubt in time you will be a very successful goal-keeper, though your writing indicates engineering as a life work, but sports as a side line will improve your health. Your number is eleven and should inspire you for great good. Leo the Lion is your birthsign. You are ruled by the Sun. Sunday is your best day. January and October your best months, and as these two months coincide with hockey, 'Go to it'.

Millie Victoria Bates,
597½ Annette Street,
Toronto, Ont.

Your handwriting as portrayed on your sample for analysis shows that you are intelligent, conservative and secretive. You are ingenious and business like, very precise and neat. You are ambitious and should be successful, but have to overcome much of your reserved disposition. The small letters, which are all of an even pressure, reflect an inborn reticence and a characteristic imbued with the same closeness. By this I mean that, in order to be convinced about anything, you must be shown. You are thrifty and economical, practical and generally logical, though as regards granting the benefit of the doubt to another less well educated person, you seem to find a firmness peculiar only to you, which forbids you accepting any fact other than your own, as Gospel truth. You hide your feelings very well. Those tall upper portions attendant to your 't's' show imagination which leads you to believe that things are much worse than they really are. Your true disposition is usually about the same. You are dependable, reliable and honest. Firm in your own convictions, but doubtful of the motives of others Your 't' bar crossing disports itself through two 't's' at the same time, and illustrates the ability to make the most of time, energy and money, and is excellent in all business matters.

Miss Marion Fisher,
Omemee, Box 128.

Your writing on sample for analysis delineates you as a vivacious person ever on the look-out for something new. You are generous and kind-hearted, sympathetic and loving, fond of music and personal comfort. You appear to enjoy change and travel. One of your disposition could never remain for very long in a rut. You are determined and quite ambitious and have the power to make things work out in the manner in which you think best. You are most intelligent and observing, and splendid conversationalist. You always have something interesting to say. You are artistic as regards temperament. You could criticize in an exceptional manner along any artistic line, yet you would be careful about hurting the sensitive feelings of others. Your will-power is strong and added to that wonderful determination which you possess, should lend much interest to your charming personality.

Teaching might interest one of your keen mental ability, but business in any other line would accommodate your faculties also, but it would be advisable for you to use your talents as soon as possible in order to make them bring you monetary recompense.

Stoefen Eliminated Grass Court Tennis

RYE, N.Y., Aug. 30 (A.P.).—The field in the eastern grass court tennis tournament narrowed down to-day to the eight semi-finalists, with only one of the original seeded players on the sidelines.

Lester Stoefen, seeded second, lost to the veteran, J. Gilbert Hall of South Orange, N.J., yesterday, 7-5, 7-9, 8-6.

The victory Hall gained when he still overcame Stoefen's power sent him up against another young Californian, Gene Mako, of Los Angeles, to-day. The other matches on the men's singles sent Frank Shields against Cliff Sutter, Berkley Bell, against the Davis Cup doubles player, George Lott, and Frankie Parker against Jack Tidball.

Ginger Rogers, who went to Hollywood as a musical comedy star, prefers straight acting and now hates to sing and dance on stage or screen.

REGARDS SPEED AS BIG FACTOR IF WAR RETURNS

United States Officer Says There is No Fixed Pattern.

FRANCE SINGULAR

Only in Western Europe Are Flankless Lines Possible.

[Many European military authorities are agreed that trench warfare is losing some of its importance and that the next war will be fought in the skies, and by fast-action, mechanized troops on open terrain. General Douglas MacArthur, in the following critique, expresses the authoritative United States viewpoint.]

By GENERAL MacARTHUR, Chief of Staff, United States Army.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—(AP).—There is no fixed pattern to which the nature and methods of warfare conform. Every major conflict develops conditions and circumstances peculiar to itself, and compels the adoption of special means and measures found applicable thereto.

Of all wars the 1914-18 struggle in Europe was beyond doubt the outstanding example of this characteristic of individualism in situation, method and general aspect.

The most accurate generalization descriptive of the war is that it was a conflict waged under siege conditions on extended fronts. . . .

Advantage With Defence.

The relative power of the defence, featuring as it did a skillful use of entrenchments and lavish employment of machine guns, became so pronounced as to make all attacks exceedingly laborious and costly. Local successes, secured with the assistance of concentrated artillery fire, were ordinarily quickly obliterated through counter-attacks—and the characteristic conditions of siege warfare largely obtained.

The war became one of attrition, or exhaustion. All attacks necessarily involved frontal assaults, in which success was sought through the slow methodical using-up of available enemy reserves.

Very naturally, after the Armistice, survivors carried back to their homes a fixed conception of warfare, conforming accurately to the picture presented them during dreary months on a practically immovable battle line. From these great numbers of veterans laymen quickly absorbed a conception of a single unchanging and inescapable type of warfare, the predominant features of which were trenches, immobility and extraordinary bombardments.

This idea was largely accepted by statesmen and legislative bodies, and to a certain extent influenced the doctrine and tactics of permanent military forces. Professionally trained leaders, however, early began to point out some of the fallacies in these conclusions.

Flankless Line.

Little reflection is necessary to appreciate the soundness of such a view. At no place other than in western Europe does there exist a definitely flankless line with populations on each side of it of such density and readiness for war as to man it solidly from end to end. In no other region of equal size does there exist the number of good roads necessary to support armies of the size that fought for four years in north-eastern France and Belgium.

In the United States army, technicians have been busy ever since the war in developing experimental models of the types of equipment useful in a war of manoeuvre. Moreover, almost four years ago the army definitely turned its serious attention toward the development of an organization, tactical doctrine and system of basic training applicable to campaigns featuring speed, sudden attacks and relentless pursuit.

Something had to be done to make tires safer. Every year thousands are killed or injured when blow-outs throw cars out of control. Goodrich engineers met the challenge with Life-Saver Golden Ply. This amazing invention resists the terrific heat inside the tire. Rubber and fabric don't separate. Blisters do not form. The cause of blow-outs is eliminated before they even start. No wonder thousands are changing to this "3 times safer" tire that gives months of extra mileage too! Come in to-day and see us.

Rumor Prince George Is Already Married

SALZBURG, Austria, Aug. 29 (AP) — Prince George of England and his fiancee, Princess Marina of Greece, left to-day for the domain of King Alexander at Bled, Yugoslavia.

Their departure was accompanied by a rumor, occasion by the fact that they came here secretly three days ago, that the Prince and Princess have been secretly married. Competent observers, however, said the rumor was absurd.

The bride and groom-to-be came to Salzburg with Prince Paul of Yugoslavia and not even the local police know of their presence until their departure.

Then it became known that Prince George and Princess Marina attended two performances of the Salzburg Festival and visited the newly-opened Casino as well as the famous Salzkamergut, the salt works.

HALIBURTON WOMAN FACES CHAIR DEATH

Flaring Headlines Reveal Daughter's Plight To Mother

Dubious Past Of Eva Coo Traced From New York State Court Murder Trial To Rural And Remote Village In Central Ontario.

JUDGE'S ILLNESS HALTS TRIAL; MOTHER THOUGHT DAUGHTER DEAD.

Described As Town's "Fancy Woman," Mrs. Coo Is Accused Of Slaying Handyman For Insurance.

In the little village of Haliburton in the neighboring county, a 68-year-old mother of a family of nine children is lying prostrated at news which came from Cooperstown, N.Y., early in the week in the nature of a double shock.

She is Mrs. Margaret Currie, who learned that her daughter Eva who left home twenty-nine years ago and whom she believed dead fourteen years ago, was Mrs. Eva Coo accused of slaying of her handyman Harry Wright at Cooperstown.

Although the trial is scheduled to be resumed Monday physicians were not at all certain that Supreme Court Justice Riley H. Heath, presiding judge would be sufficiently recovered from his attack of influenza to go ahead then.

Postponed Last Night

The trial which is receiving widespread publicity in the national press, halted Wednesday after thirteen days, was postponed again last night until Monday after Justice Heath was sent back to bed by his physicians when he attempted to get up. Meanwhile Mrs. Coo, who lived an obscure life in the Haliburton backwoods until she was seventeen years of age, was almost recovered from the cold which had been troubling her since the trial began. She was reported to have been reading to the newspapers this morning stories that her family in the little Ontario village had learned of her whereabouts and would attempt to aid her.

She had persistently refused to reveal who her relatives were, but her sister, it was learned yesterday heard about the trial and wrote to Cooperstown for information.

Tried to Shield Family

Secluded in her jail cell she could not be reached for comment. It is believed she kept silent during her trial to shield her family from unfavorable publicity.

After leaving Haliburton twenty-nine years ago as a young woman of seventeen years of age, she worked for a time in Toronto and then went to Calgary where she married William Coo, a railwayman, later bringing him back to Haliburton to meet her family. She lived with Coo only three or four years and after they were divorced Coo married another woman who died two years ago.

Presumed She was Dead

Later Mrs. Coo went to New York and wrote her family that she was undergoing an operation and would inform them of the result. The family did not hear from her. They advertised for her where-

Chilliest August In Thirty-Seven Years

The temperature dropped to 35 degrees overnight for the chilliest August weather in 37 years.

On August 27, 1915, the reading was 36 degrees, and on August 30, 1909, the temperature was also 36 degrees. The rainfall for the past month was 1.15 inches.

TO INVESTIGATE RELIEF CASES MORE CLOSELY

Relief Committee Urges the Appointment of Two Additional Employees to Staff.

INVESTIGATION URGED.

Finance Committee Decides to Increase Relief Staff to Further the Work.

In order that relief cases may be more carefully investigated, the Finance Committee of the City Council gave A. G. Metheral, city relief officer, authority last night to add another member to his staff.

The Special Relief Committee recommended the appointment of two additional members to the relief office staff in order that necessary investigations might be carried out expeditiously, Alderman P. G. Tuggey, chairman of the Council's Relief Committee, reported.

"That is just what I have been urging to the Relief Committee for months," declared Alderman Stocker. "Hamilton inaugurated the system of investigating relief cases and saved thousands in a month. Toronto later undertook the same job and saved more than $100,000. We are being chiselled right and left. The Relief Committee is prepared to help needy cases, but some persons are putting it over and those are the ones that we should know about."

Alderman Tuggey pointed that the relief office staff was busily engaged in re-registering all relief cases, as ordered by the Government. "I think there is a great need for investigation of the cases," he said. "It would prove that some persons are taking advantage of the city's generosity. We are in duty bound to make these investigations. The example of Hamilton and Toronto has been cited, but we are not as bad off as those cities because we have not the foreign population, among which most of the crooked ones were found."

The committee decided unanimously that Mr. Metheral be asked to recommend a man to be added to his staff temporarily.

Indian Guide Drowned Near Alderville

TWO MOVIE MEN ARE KIDNAPPED IN BANDIT RAID

Third Escapes But 9 Japs and 5 Chinese Passengers Are Slain.

TRAIN IS WRECKED.

HSINKING, Manchukuo, Aug. 31 (C.P.-Havas).—An American, R. L. Lury, and a Dane, E. F. Johansen, Manchukuon representative and Far Eastern manager, respectively, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Film Company, were kidnapped by bandits, who derailed and attacked a train near Harbin, Manchuria, but J. J. Russell, sales manager of the film company in Tokyo, was safe and unhurt, it was announced today.

Nine Japanese and five Chinese passengers were killed and 21 wounded or injured.

Described as one of the most serious and daring of the many recent attacks, the train was derailed 25 miles south of Harbin. The rails had been previously removed by the bandits. The locomotive fell over an embankment while four cars were telescoped.

Firing broke out almost immediately between the bandits and train guards, who managed to hold off the attackers for almost two hours.

Once in possession of the train, the bandits ransacked the first and second-class compartments after relieving its passengers of their money and other valuables.

Meharry Inquest Provisionally Set

While police have not yet succeeded in unravelling the mystery connected with the slaying of Robert Meharry, 66-year-old widower whose dead body bearing extensive head injuries was discovered lying in a welter of blood on Gordon avenue on Tuesday morning, July 24, the coroner's inquest has been tentatively set for Thursday evening next.

Crown Attorney V. J. McElderry, K.C., stated that while the inquest had been called for next Thursday at 8 o'clock p.m. in the Police Court room, the time and date were subject to change.

The inquest will be conducted by Coroner Dr. T. W. H. Young.

TINY TORONTO GIRL 8, DIES OF BONFIRE BURNS

TORONTO, Aug. 31 (C.P.). — Eight-year-old Vera Hurst died in hospital to-day of burns suffered when her clothing caught fire last night as she played with several companions around a bonfire.

As the child lay in bed last night she told attendants, "I would like to meet my mother beside me." She turned to a sad-eyed policeman who had taken her to hospital and said, "Don't scold me, policeman. I know a little girl like me shouldn't be playing around a fire." Then she lost consciousness.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Aug. 31 (CP) — Attaches at the Venango County Jail are proud of their institution's facilities and menu. They point out that Russell A. Grah, 17, who goes on trial next week for the slaying of his father, has gained nearly 25 pounds since his arrest several months ago.

Ontario Attorney-General, Toronto Mayor Wage War

Ontario Attorney-General Arthur Roebuck (below) has entered into active political warfare against Mayor Wm. J. Stewart of Toronto in one of the liveliest battles of words to take place in many years in the province. It all centres around Mayor Stewart's chairmanship of the Toronto police commission. Roebuck alleges Stewart uses "iron heel" methods in his police administration.

Charging a plot to oust him, Conservative Mayor Wm. J. Stewart (above) battles the combined onslaughts of Attorney-General Roebuck and Premier Hepburn. Stewart charges that Toronto is sitting on a volcano of Communism and that Roebuck is aiding this radical element. Hepburn is quoted as replying that Stewart needs an ice-pack. ELECTION COST PAINS COUNCIL

OBJECTION RAISED.

The provincial election may have been most satisfactory to Premier Hepburn and his workers, but it strained the customary good humor of members of the City Council last night. The Finance Committee of the Council received the bill for the city's share of the election costs. It totalled $1,260.65, which is higher than ever before, according to City Clerk Armstrong.

The bill is for fees and expenses of the Election Board in revising the voters' list.

"Now is the time that we should make a strenuous kick to the Government that they should bear the expense of these elections," declared Alderman G. A. Macdonald.

Alderman Sloan was already to draught a resolution when the city clerk explained that the question of municipalities being saddled with this expense was already before the Municipal Association convention and would be dealt with fully.

BANKER IN PADDED CELL AFTER ATTACKING FAMILY

SEATTLE, Aug. 31 (A.P.).—James E. Davies, 54, discharged bank official, was in a padded cell here today after attempting to kill his wife, daughter and mother-in-law with a hammer because he thought his family would find death preferable to disgrace they faced over discovery of a $10,000 shortage in his accounts.

Arrested and placed in a padded cell yesterday after the attacks, Davies attempted to garrote himself with a cord from his pajamas, the only garment he was wearing. The three women were taken to hospital. Davies' wife, Mrs. Kathleen V. Davies, 52, suffered fractures of the skull and jaw and severe lacerations; his daughter, Mary Davies, 22, University of Washington senior, had a fractured skull and arm as well as cuts and bruises, and Mrs. Davies' mother, Mrs. Agnes Reedy, 74, suffered head lacerations. Physicians expressed the belief all would recover.

JOHNNY CAIRO LEADS.

Toronto Youth's Time is 3.32 Against Nelson's 3.33.33 Third Place.

Cairo's time was 2 hours 22 minutes, and Nelson's a minute and 33 seconds more. Bill Goll, of New York, was in third place, 250 yards behind the leader, in 3.36.33.

Alex Soroman, of New Toronto, was in fourth place in 2.33.23, leaving two Canadian and two Americans in the first four.

Cairo was swimming strongly but general opinion was that he would not last the route and that it was only a matter of time before Nelson took over first place. Cairo, however, showed no signs of weakening.

George Blagden, of Memphis, Tenn., winner in 1932, was in fifth place at seven miles and Dan Dembicki, of East Windsor, in sixth place. The first half dozen swimmers were strung out over half a mile.

NEW CITY DRIVE TO COST $6,000

Board of Works Recommends Stuart Drive to Council

TO GIVE EMPLOYMENT.

By a narrow margin the Board of Works Committee passed a motion last night that the city proceed with the plan of making the Stuart drive along the east bank of the river, north from Hunter street bridge, to the Oval.

By agreement with the Quaker Oats Company the city will be deeded by the company its property on the river so that the drive may be built. Mayor Denne stated that it would be one of the most beautiful drives in the district, and that the project would make for a "better future Peterborough." Also, it was stated, it would supply work for the unemployed.

City engineer stated that the work would cost approximately $6,000. A portion of this amount would be received back from the Federal and Provincial Governments as a relief project.

In an attempt to fill up the old gravel pit on Rogers street, it was decided that permission be given for discarding there of car tops and other bulky materials that are sanitary, except ashes. After the pit has been sufficiently filled up, ashes will be put there. Something must be done to speed up the removal of this eye-sore, Mayor Denne stated.

Although on the 1932 tax roll there remains a total of $28,236.44 in uncollected taxes, the city treasurer was instructed to return the roll.

September Tenders For Snow Plowing

The Board of Works Committee decided last night to slip one over on the Weather Man. Tenders for snow plowing contracts will be called for in September.

In urging that tenders for the snow plowing of the streets be called for soon, Alderman Sloan said "Last year there was a snow fall before we let these tenders. We don't want to be caught that way again."

City Engineer Parsons said the tenders had been let about the same time, November, each year for 20 years.

Great Britain has 10,140,000 people at work.

Smith Of Long Branch First To Leave Water

HOSPITAL TENT, Exhibition Park, Toronto, Aug. 31 (CP)—Walter V. Smith of Long Branch, Ont., was the first withdrawal in the 15-mile swim held at the Canadian National Exhibition to-day. Smith, only a youngster, covered approximately one-eight of a mile when the frigid water forced him to quit.

Jack R. Basset of Ottawa followed Smith into the hospital tent in search of a hot drink and blankets. Basset also complained of the cold water.

SLOT MACHINE TAX PROPOSED BY ALD. SLOAN

Finance Committee Asks Solicitor for Advisory Report.

MAY BE IN CITY.

Sloan Contends They Should Yield Tax to Treasury.

That slot machines are one of the richest sources of revenue in the city and should be taxed by the municipality was the policy advocated by Alderman Max Sloan last night to the Finance Committee of the City Council. He urged that a tax of at least $25 a year should be placed on each machine.

Various aldermen questioned whether the city had the right to tax slot machines. Alderman Tuggey maintained that if it is right to tax billiard tables then it should be right to tax slot machines.

The question arose as to whether the operations of the machines are even legal. There seemed to be a wide difference of opinion.

Finally it was decided that J. R. Corkery, city solicitor, investigate the legality of the machines and of taxing them and report his findings.

The business of the committee was nearly done when Alderman Sloan broached the subject.

Enough Taxes.

"How about putting a tax on slot machines?" he asked. "I would like to see the city put a $25 annual tax on each machine. It would be real revenue for the city."

Mayor Denne said: "We have enough business taxes now without taxing slot machines."

Alderman Sloan: "I've made some inquiries on slot machines. Do you realize the huge returns these slot machines are running up every week? I know one business place that has two machines and in two

BODY OF GUIDE, DELBERT SMOKE, IS RECOVERED

Found Off Cook's Point, Rice Lake, This Morning.

CORONER ENQUIRING.

Indian Missing Since Early Thursday—Was Good Swimmer.

ROSENEATH, August 31 (Examiner Correspondent).—An all-night search for Delbert Smoke, 25-year-old Indian guide of the Alderville reserve, came to a sudden and tragic conclusion as his body was raised from the waters of Rice Lake, off Cook's Point, at 6 o'clock this morning. He had been missing since early Thursday.

The exact nature of the accident by which the Indian met his death is unknown. A young man who earned his living by guiding fishermen about Rice Lake, he was last seen at the reserve Wednesday night. Yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, his empty canoe was found drifting along the shore of the lake near Cook's Point, four miles from the reserve. As he was an expert paddler, no though of an accident was entertained until his friends and relatives became uneasy last night. A search about the district on land proved of no avail. Dragging was begun along the shore where the canoe was found by a number of reserve Indians, and the recovery of the body followed.

Coroner G. W. Ferris of Cobourg drove to the scene of the tragedy this morning to inquire into the affair.

Delbert Smoke leaves two brothers, Howard and Robert, and two sisters, Elsie and Lena. He was well known among Rice Lake cottagers and fishermen as a young but expert guide.

Coroner Ferris said this afternoon it was a case of accidental drowning. An inquest will not be necessary, he stated.

In conversation with The Examiner this afternoon, Coroner Ferris intimated he encountered some silence when making his inquiry. He stated, however, that there were no marks on the body or any evidence of violence which would suggest anything other than accidental drowning.

BENNETT OFF ON TRIP TO GENEVA AND ENGLAND

OTTAWA, Aug. 31 (C.P.).—Hoping to combine a brief holiday with the task of representing Canada at the meeting of the League of Nations, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett will leave for Quebec to-night. There he will board the Empress of Britain for Cherbourg. It is probable that he will proceed directly to Geneva, reserving a visit to England until after he has attended the League meeting. The ocean voyage will be the only holiday of any length which the Prime Minister has had since last summer.

TRUCE IN MILK PRICE SLASHING ORDERED BY BOARD IN HAMILTON

Discounts and Rebates Prohibited by New Provincial Body.

ULTIMATUM TO DAIRIES.

HAMILTON, Ont. Aug. 31.—(CP) —The Ontario Milk Control Board interfered in no uncertain manner in the local milk situation today.

Notice was served by the board on every dairy in the city and district giving warning that "pending an adjustment of milk problems in Hamilton you are hereby ordered not to take any action or promise price discounts, bonuses, rebates etc. to customers until September 15 when further announcement will be made."

It is understood that the trouble arose when a local dairy undertook to pay a dividend to its customers in the form of a week's free milk supply. An opposition dairy immediately undertook to meet this competition.

This brought a blast from one of the largest dairies to the effect that if either of these companies did as they had announced, the big concern would cut milk to 5 cents a quart.

Producers became alarmed, fearing that any price slashing would effect them adversely and waited on the Milk Control Board. Today's ultimatum was the result.

TELEPHONE CALL COSTS TORONTONIAN 18 MONTHS

TORONTO, Aug. 31 (C.P.).—Edward Chard to-day was sentenced to imprisonment of 18 months definite and six months indeterminate after being found guilty of attempting to steal $5,000 in connection with the recent kidnapping of John Labatt, wealthy London brewer.

Chard was alleged to have demanded the money in a telephone conversation with Hugh Labatt, brother of the kidnapped man, claiming he had John Labatt in his custody.

Nothing Illegal In McCaughrin Case

CADI'S AVARICE HELD AS CAUSE WHOLE TROUBLE

After Magistrate Got $2 000 Agreement He Thought He Could Get More.

FISHER COMMENTS.

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—(CP)—Mr. Justice R. G. Fisher retired today to make his formal findings of the inquiry into charges by Daniel McCaughrin that members of the former Conservative government had sought to "buy" his retirement from the magistrate's bench at Orillia.

Hearing of evidence concluded here yesterday and the Commissioner, appointed by the present government to investigate the charges, said there was neither purchase nor bargain in the arrangements between McCaughrin and his potential successor, Howard Gover, so there could have been nothing illegal there.

The Commissioner listened to the presentation by S. L. Springsteen, commission counsel, who reviewed steps taken by Hon. W. H. Price, former Attorney - General, and Hon. W. A. Finlayson, former Minister of Lands and Forests, to unseat McCaughrin.

"The whole trouble in this case," said the Commissioner, "arose because of McCaughrin's avarice. After he got the agreement for $2,000 he thought he could get more.

"Gover was not a purchaser of that office by any stretch of the imagination. McCaughrin was on the brink of dismissal; nothing could save him. They wanted to let the man down gently because he was an old man. It was an unfortunate situation; that's all. The office was gone to all intents and purposes. McCaughrin was going out and Gover was going in. It was a matter of assisting McCaughrin, giving him $2,000."

Chaco War Continues Despite Peace Efforts

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 31.—(AP)—A move for peace in the protracted Chaco warfare was hailed by neutral sources today but rifles continued to crack in the disputed jungle.

The latest proposal for halting the strife came from a Bolivian source. Senator Jaime Mendoza, addressing the Senate on international affairs, urged that Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay intervene "honorably and skilfully" to end the war.

Senator Mendoza defended the principles for which his country went to war and said she has "clear natural rights to access to the Paraguay River."

Neighbors of the belligerents have long been interested in schemes to halt the war but efforts from these sources and from the League of Nations have been fruitless thus far.

Then he noticed two "numbers" books peeping from her dress pocket. Mrs. Hagenbeck joined her husband in the south side police station.

SAYS RAYS CAUSE CANCER.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 31 (C.P.).—Ernest Gonzenbach, Swiss tree expert, asserted to-day that Cosmic rays cause cancer and that these same rays produce cankers on trees.

He declared that this was recognised 4,000 years ago by the Chinese Emperor, Hwang-Hu-Tsu, who forbade his subjects to build homes where the "earth demons" existed.

The speaker further asserted that cosmic rays direct the growth of trees, bending them in line with the direction of the rays. He sought to demonstrate this with the use of the old time divining rod. Many of those attending the opening session of the conference differed with the theory.

GUELPH STRIKE FINALLY ENDS

One Firm Will Return to Toronto, Other Continue On in City.

NO WAGE ANNOUNCEMENT.

GUELPH, Ont., Aug. 31 (C.P.).—The nine-day strike at the plant of the Superior and Popular Cloak Companies was ended to-day with an amicable settlement reached between company heads and representatives of the Garment Makers' Union. The strike produced several clashes between strikers and workers who refused to quit their jobs with police and firemen called in to settle the disputes.

J. L. Cohen, Toronto lawyer, announced the agreement which calls for immediate return to Toronto of the Superior Cloak Company. The Superior firm will resume operations at the Toronto plant and the Popular Cloak Company will operate in Guelph. No announcement was forthcoming regarding wage changes Lengthy negotiations in which Attorney-General Arthur W. Roebuck and J. F. Marsh, Ontario Deputy Minister of Labor, took part, resulted in settling the strike. Pickets were removed from the plant by the union, and authorities dismissed the special police guarding the establishment.

In confirming the report of the settlement at a mass meeting of workers, Sam Kreisman and H. Langer, officials of the union, declared their organization would eventually force a five-day week of 35 hours and unemployment insurance in the garment industry.

C. Armstrong of Warkworth. F. D. Boggs of Cobourg acted in his capacity as Crown Attorney.

From the evidence submitted the jury brought in a verdict, "Death from a broken neck and other injuries, said injuries received in a manner unknown.

Coroner Armstrong said the man's neck was broken and in his opinion he was dead at least eight hours when found.

Engineer Reeves of Lindsay told of seeing the body along the ditch on Thursday afternoon and of notifying the agent of Hastings.

County Constable Robert Kelly of Warkworth who had charge of the case was also a witness. It was the accurate description of the man given to The Examiner by Constable Kelly that had him quickly identified.

The following gentlemen comprised the jury, Dr. J. H. Hess, foreman, L. E. Kelley, W. R. Learmouth, W. Welkman, J. F. McCarthy, T. A. Walsh, P. Barry and S. Hatherly.

BANCROFT ROAD TO BE HIGHWAY

BOON TO TOURISTS.

BELLEVILLE, Aug. 31. — The announcement by Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Minister of Health, through Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways, that a highway would be built from this city to Bancroft, a distance of 76 miles, as a relief measure, came as a welcome surprise yesterday.

The road will be the regulation width, and with a permanent surface. It will supply all the relief for the county during the winter months, and will fill a long-felt want, as it will open the resources to the North, stimulate trade with the southern portions of the county, and be a boon to tourists using that section for camping and fishing grounds.

The taking over of the road will relieve the county of a considerable amount for maintenance and also widening and straightening stretches which are a hazard at the present time. The work will be started immediately, and standard wages will be paid.

With the possible exception of the black bass there is no fish that affords more sport to the angler or that is found over a greater range of country than the brook trout.

BANISH COMMON CONSTIPATION WITH DELICIOUS CEREAL

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brings Relief

Look out for headaches, loss of appetite and energy, sallow complexions, sleeplessness. Frequently, these are warning signs of common constipation. If neglected, your health may be impaired.

Today, you can rid yourself of common constipation by eating a tempting cereal. Laboratory tests show that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN furnishes "bulk" and vitamin B to aid regular habits. ALL-BRAN is also rich in iron for the blood.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is much like that found in leafy vegetables. Within the body, it forms a soft mass. Gently, this clears out the intestinal wastes. How much better this is than taking patent medicines!

Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily will usually overcome most types of common constipation. Chronic cases, with each meal. If seriously ill, see your doctor. ALL-BRAN makes no claim to be a "cure-all."

Serve ALL-BRAN as a cereal, or use in cooking. At all grocers. In the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

BRITISH LABOR DECLARES WAR UPON FASCISM

Manifesto Issued by General Council Throws Whole Organization Into Fight.

STREET FIGHTS OCCUR.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 31. (C. P. Cable).—British Labor to-day declared war on Fascism. A manifesto issued by the general council of the Trades Union Congress threw the whole weight of British organized labor into the fight.

"Born out of the postwar confusion and despair" the manifesto declared, "the Fascist party in Italy and the Nazi party in Germany have used their powers to supress by violence all other parties.

"Murder, torture and exile were their weapons. They have filled the world with the horror of their deeds. Concentrating the power of the state in the leader of the party, a servile obedience has been exacted from every citizen.

"Freedom of thought, of Faction, of the press, of association have all been swept away. The spirit of war and the creed of blood have been glorified. Peace and all its agencies are treated with contempt.

"The middle class in Germany—professional men, clerical workers—all find their salaries reduced to starvation limits when they are fortunate enough to find work. Their standard of life is continually sinking.

"Fascism brings in its train nothing but oppression and suffering. The Labor movement is determined that Fascism shall be thoroughly exposed once and for all.

"Each affiliated organization, every lover of democracy and freedom, is called upon to make all possible efforts to achieve this object, and strengthen the hands of the Labor movement in the campaign to ensure the victory of democracy and socialism over the forces of dictatorship and reaction."

Sporadic street fights continue with over-zealous British Fascists. Two of them were fined at Greenwich to-day as a sequal to a conflict with a crowd at Lewisham. A Blackshirt was seriously injured in a Chelsea street attack last night.

RACINE TO TOUR T.,N,O. BY PLANE

Will Consider Possibility of Future in Keeping Moosonee Branch Open.

TRIAL PERIOD SUGGESTED.

NORTH BAY, Ont., Aug. 31.—(CP)—Armand Racine, K.C., commissioner investigating administration of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, will leave today on a flight that will carry him over the railway's extension from Abitibi to Moosonee on James Bay.

The flight will be made to enable the Commissioner to make an aerial survey of natural resources along the line to see if there is any justification for keeping the branch in operation.

Suggestion the extension be operated for another trial period when operation would be kept at low cost was made at the hearing yesterday by Col. J. I. McLaren of Hamilton, a member a member of the Commission operating the railway for the Ontario government. He thought this trial period would give "opportunity for development until times are good." Original plan for construction of the line, he said was to provide for such development.

"Another two or three years' trials, however, would mean another $500,000 deficit," remarked Mr. Racine. Possibility of mineral deposits in the Hudson and James Bays area led to the belief the railway would be able to obtain trade in the region.

Lt. Col. L. T. Merlin of Ottawa, another member of the board, said he was unaware of the true financial status of the branch line.

He expressed the belief the line should be closed, but agreed the line might be kept in operation at a minimum cost.

FIVE DEGREES BELOW.

LAKEFRONT, Toronto, Aug. 31.—(C.P.)—Lake Ontario's temperature at 9.30 this morning was 57, five degrees below the figure required for the starting of the Canadian National Exhibition's 15-mile swim. An on-shore wind was blowing, however, and it was expected to warm the water five degrees before 11 o'clock, when the swim is scheduled to start.

Reckoning Day

EASTVIEW, Ont., Aug 31 (C. P.) — To-day was dog day in County Court here when more than 20 owners appeared on charges of having failed to obtain licenses for their pets. In the majority of cases the owners paid their fines plus the tax, while others who were on relief were allowed two weeks in which to find the necessary $5.

Toronto Livestock Review

TORONTO, August 31 (C.P.) — Common to medium quality cattle cluttered up that division of the Toronto Livestock Market this week, and despite the activity in good and choice grades, 450 head remained unsold when the market closed. Total receipts for the week were 800 lighter than the previous week and prices were slightly easier on some grades. No actual losses were registered.

The only marked gain in the four days' trading was made on the lamb market when the division went up 25 cents on off cars on Wednesday. They held the advance during Thursday's dull session. Receipts of sheep and lambs were more than 1,000 head lighter for the previous week. Calves sold steady and unchanged throughout the week while hogs after selling steady for the first two days closed a shade easier.

Local packers took the five loads of choice weighty steers at $5.60 to $6, while good weighty steers sold strongly at $5.25 to $5.50. Common steers went down to $3.25. Best butchers made $4.25 to $4.50 with odd sales of choice up to a top of $5. The bulk of the butchers sold from $3 to $3.75, with common as low as $2.75. Good cows were easier and only a few sales went above $2.75.

Exporters paid from $2.50 to $3 for good weighty bulls and bolognas were unchanged at $1.75 to $2. Fed calves held steady at $5 to $7 for choice, with mediums selling down to $5.50. T few stockers and feeders changed hands at $2.25 to $3. Lacking outside demand, milkers and springers moved slowly at a top of $60. Exporters also took a few weighty steers at $5 to $5.25, but most of the steers sold for export were light to mediums at $4 to $4.50.

Good to choice veal calves opened a shade stronger at $5.50 to $6, with occasional tops at $6.50. The division held firm throughout the week and closed at the top levels. Common to medium vealers sold from $3 to $5, while grassers moved within a range of $3.25 to $3.50.

Showing but little variation in movement for the week, hogs opened at $5.90 off car for bacons and closed weaker at $5.75. F.o.b. supplies closed at $5, while off trucks, which were up to $5.50 for two days, closed at $5.40. Selects brought the usual $1 premium while fows took the regular $3 discount. Butchers and lights and feeders held their $1 discount, with heavies at a discount of $1.50.

Lambs opened steady at the previous Thursday's close of $6 for good ewes and wethers. Wednesday's market was firmer with off trucks holding at $6 and off cars moving up to $6.25. Closing sales were made at the advance. Bucks and culls brought $5 to $5.25 while four-fifths of a supply of Western lambs went at $5.50 with the other fifth at $6.75. Sheep were steady at $1 for culls up to $3 for good, light ewes. Some yearlings sold up to $4.

The market will be closed Monday, September 4, Labor Day.

HANDS THAT WOULD NOT HOLD

Woman Who Was Powerless With Rheumatism

NOW DOES ANYTHING SHE WANTS

Another case of rheumatism of long standing has yielded to what has become to be recognised all over the world as the one really scientific treatment. The woman herself writes as follows:—

"After suffering for eighteen years from rheumatism in my arms, hands, legs, and feet, I decided two months ago to give Kruschen Salts a trial. I am glad to say I have received great benefit from them. I have attended hospital for electrical treatment, and tried numerous so-called remedies, none of which have benefited me at all. My hands have been so bad at times that I have been unable to hold anything with them. Since taking Kruschen Salts, I have been able to do practically anything I want. I shall always recommend them."—(Mrs.) L. B.

Unless the kidneys—or body filters—function properly, certain acid wastes, instead of being expelled, are allowed to pollute the bloodstream and produce troublesome symptoms: rheumatism for one, excessive fatigue for another.

What is needed is a special kidney aperient. Ordinary aperients cannot do the work. In the light of present-day knowledge, Kruschen Salts is one of the finest diuretics or kidney aperients available for assisting the kidneys to excrete acid impurities by direct action on the renal cells, thus causing a more rapid and copious "flushing" action and washing away of those harmful acid waste products.

VIENNA CHIEFS DINE, WINE MOTHERS CRY FOR BREAD

Night Clubs Flourish Amid Barbed Wire and Oppression, Reporter Finds.

SIMMERING UNREST

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN, Central Press Canadian Writer.

VIENNA, Aug. 31.—Zurueck, sonst wird geschossen! Back, else you will be fired upon!

Suddenly I stood before this sign, which was fastened to a barbed-wire entanglement in the middle of a street. It was pure chance that I noticed the cryptic and deadly warning, which was no bigger than half a foot each way, and I had fully intended to walk on, following the sidewalk where there was an opening in the barbed wire. I looked around to see if I could discover why this particular street was barred. Not a soul stirred. Nothing but a monotonous row of self-same red-brick apartment houses. Should I chance it? I wondered. Maybe, I thought, the sign and the wire are but left-overs from the recent street battles. But just as I took one more step forward, trusting to chance, I caught sight of two steel-helmets in a deep doorway across the street. Two men were watching me as they lay in that porch, rifles ready-poised. It was only next day I learned of Prince "Rudie" Starhemberg's order to his green-grey Heimwehren boys: "You shoot, I'll go the explaining." But suppose I hadn't been able to read German? Or suppose it had been an hour later, and pitchdark?

"Why is that street barred?" I asked a schutzman (cop) a few blocks on my retreat.

"Who are you?" he asked. I told him.

"Foreigners shouldn't go snooping in these neighborhoods," he said caustically. "Stay on the main streets. No cafes here. No music here. No girls here."

"What's here that needs guards?" I asked.

"O, bad people live here?"

"Bandits?" "Worse than bandits. Socialists!"

"I thought it was the Nazis who killed Dollfuss!" I said innocently.

"Don't give me any of your lip," snapped the scutzman, "get back to the main-streets and stay there!"

Woman Refused Bread.

I walked back through that mournful quarter. At one corner there was a commotion in front of a grocery store. A woman was being led away by six policemen. She was weeping. "Let me go," she pleaded. "My children are home. They have nothing to eat. I only wanted a loaf of bread. Let me go. Are my children to starve?" The cops had no mercy.

"Did she steal?" I asked a bystander. "No," he said. "She tried to get the bread on credit."

"And for that?" . . . I began. I did not finish the sentence. "Freiheit Brot!" (Freedom, Bread) screamed the woman. "Freiheit!" the cry was immediately answered from the windows above and from the bystanders. The policemen fumbled for their revolvers.

I went to Mannheim. I do not mean the great city on the Rhine in Germany. Vienna has a little Mannheim all of its own. It is a sort of mountain-resort with ritzy restaurants and fashionable dance clubs. The air is cool up there and the place is out of bounds to the plebeian mob. I had been told that you could see all the Heimwehren chiefs there of an evening with their ladies. It was a little after dusk when I rattled out that way in an old fiacre. The road was covered with limousines. I had to bribe a maitre d'hotel to let me sit in an unobtrusive corner.

Splendor of Vienna.

Soft-tempered lights. Dreamy music. Beautiful women. Gay laughter. Popping champagne bottles. Heels clicking in stiff salutes. Brilliant decorations. Gorgeous uniforms. Marvellous gowns. Exotic perfumes. Obsequious footmen. Around each table a flock of dignified, silent-footed waiters.

Archduke Wilhelm was to be there in the course of the evening, I was told. I saw Starhemberg come in. He had a frown on his face. Many rose to greet him. When he was seated a blonde woman lifted her glass and called out a toast. All present joined her. The prince drank champagne. But the frown did not leave his face. A bell-boy came in and handed him a note on a silver platter. Starhemberg threw the boy a few coins, read the message and left, stepping nervously. People got up to dance. A crooner sang in English: "Your Dog Loves My Dog!" The couples on the floor hummed the song. I tried to estimate the cost of some of the jewels I saw flashing by in the big room. Outside you could see the million lights of Vienna in the distance and a purple glow against the sky.

Plenty of Money Now.

"There must be plenty of wealth in this town yet!" I said to a newspaperman who used to work on the confiscated Arbeiter Zeitung, when I had returned to town and had found a seat in a crowded cafe on the Ringstrasse, Vienna's Broadway. "Plenty of money has come in of late," he said. "A few weeks ago even Starhemberg was broke."

"How do you know?" I asked.

"Vienna is a small town," he said. "Everybody knows everybody's business."

"Well, you don't mean Italy is sending money in here? They haven't any money to spare in Rome," I objected. "Don't know where it comes from," he replied. "But there is plenty among the Heimwehren chiefs."

There was a sudden commotion in the cafe. Life is that way in Vienna. Fits and starts. Voices dropped, rose again, dropped to whispers.

Hides From Society

Marie Gladys Deacon of Boston, second American wife of the late Duke of Marlborough, has retired from her high position in English society to live in seclusion with a lone companion and 30 spaniels.

People were excitedly discussing something.

"What's up?" I asked, "another putsch?"

"It's something about Russia!" he said when he came back, "but I can't find out what it is exactly. "Let's go outside!" he suggested. We walked a few blocks, then turned into a narrow street and went into a dark tap-room at the end of a labyrinthal maze of alleyways.

"Heard the news?" someone shouted to my companion as we entered.

"No, what is it?"

"The children are in Moscow!"

Children Get to Russia.

This had to be explained to me. In February this year 178 scutzblunders fought their way to the borders and escaped to Russia. Once established there, these men wanted their wives and children to join them. The Austrian Government refused to let the relatives depart. Yet, in spite of drastic measures, the women and the children did manage to get across the border by an "underground" system as existed once in the United States in the days of slavery. Word had just come that they had reached their destination.

"And," came the further news. "Paula has escaped." Paula Wallisch was meant, the wife of the leader of the scutzbund, who defended the apartment-house block Ottakring against Dollfuss' artillery. Her husband was hanged, she was imprisoned.

When we went back into the streets, excited groups of people were standing about everywhere. Masses of Heimwehren suddenly appeared. In one cafe the police were making a raid. I watched the proceedings. Someone put out the electric lights and the crowd burst loose with the song: "Zusammen, busammen, wir marschieren busammen!" (Together, together, we're marching together)

TWO PRIZES TO MRS. C. COVENEY

Mrs. L. Loftus Wins Refrigerator at Kiwanis "Karnival."

THE LUCKY TICKETS.

Happy crowds thronged Brock street to take part in the Kiwanis Karnival last night, and the underprivileged children of the city were the beneficiaries.

It was a real "Karnival" with all the trimmings, Husky-voiced Kiwanians and their volunteer assistants exhorted the throngs to try their luck at the alluring games of chance with all the persuasiveness of professional Midway barkers. And the response was whole-hearted. Kiwanians reported at the conclusion of the evening that the Karnival will be remembered as one of the most successful the club has attempted.

With clear skies and a reasonably warm breeze gracing the occasion, crowds circulated about the seven booths in undiminished numbers from 7.30 o'clock until the midnight hour. The three wheels of chance in operation held interest at all times, while the feature attraction, the Bingo Booth, did a landoffice business, proving that the old corn-and-number game has lost none of its appeal. An airplane wheel and a novel game of fortune offering in the Laura Secord candy booth both did well.

Interest heightened as the time for the big draw, 11.30 o'clock, approached. Crowds moved from the street into the Brock Street Summer Gardens, and Mayor Denne took the spotlight.

"I feel that the Kiwanis Club is to be congratulated on this fine work it is doing for the underprivileged children of the city," Mayor Denne declared. "Everyone will join with me in wishing them success to-night." He thanked the public of Peterborough for rallying with such enthusiasm to the fine cause.

FLARING HEADLINES REVEAL DAUGHTER'S PLIGHT TO MOTHER

abouts without success and presumed that she was dead.

Today the news that her daughter is alive coupled with the added shock that she is on trial for murder, has been too much for her aged mother to bear. She is fearfully wondering what fate holds for her long missing daughter. There is a possibility according to physicians that Mrs. Currie will not survive the dual shock.

"I can't believe Eva did it", Mrs. William A. Baker, sister of Mrs. Coo said. "She had a wonderful father and mother, and it seems impossible that a girl with her background could do such a thing".

Can't Help Financially

Mrs. Baker said neither she, nor her three brothers Bert, Bill and Ross Currie who live in Haliburton would be able to help their sister financially.

She has communicated with the five other sisters in the Currie family who are scattered across the Dominion from Halifax to Vancouver, and planned through correspondence to seek their advice as to the best course to pursue in efforts to help their sister.

Mrs. Martha Clift, who stands indicted as an accessory, has already testified at the trial. Unless she can send "Little" Eva" Coo to the electric hair, she must stand in its shadow itself.

Must Shift Blame

The gist of her first confession was that she and Eva killed the helpless old bum, Harry Wright, in a prearranged plot, and to save her own life Martha must place all the blame on Eva.

"I'm telling the truth—the truth" she shrieked again and again. Once tears of rage filled her small eyes.

But "Little Eva," the town's "fancy lady" showed no emotion. Hour by hour she sat drawing with squares of paper while her attorney and Martha were literally fighting a battle to the death—since if Martha's story is broken, she becomes an accomplice and must stand trial for first degree murder.

Describes Killing

Martha finished her account of how she and Eva lured the crippled handyman, Harry Wright, to the haunted house on Crumhorn Mountain on the night of June 14, and how she ran him down with the car after Eva struck him on the head with a stone-cutter's hammer which was loaded with iron.

And she described how, on the following day, Eva came into the bedroom of "Little Eva's Inn" where, she, Martha, was lying down, took something from a chest, hid it under her dress, and went out. Later, she said, Eva told her she had taken Harry's cap to the spot where they had dumped the body.

Loses Assurance

Martha, a tight-lipped masculine woman, lost some of her assurance during cross-examination, but her defience increased. Asked about the domestic arrangements at "Little Eva's" resort, Martha said:

"Harry slept on a davenport in the kitchen. Sometimes she hit him. When he was in the house he sat on a rocking chair near the kitchen door. At night she locked him in, or out, of the kitchen. When she locked him in she hid the liquor outside. But he had a key hidden in his shoe, and after she had gone he'd let himself out and get a few nips. When she found him drunk, she'd hit him."

On one occasion Eva beat the crippled derelict because chickens had been dying and he threw them over a fence without telling her.

$14,000 Insurance

Yet Wright was sufficiently grateful for a place to sleep and eat to will over $14,000 in life insurance to Eva.

Martha, under indictment for first degree murder, will be allowed to plead guilty to second degree for testifying against Eva Coo. She denies that she and Eva discussed the plot to kill old Harry. She claims that she became nervous as she was turning the car around in the haunted lane. Eva was walking beside the road and Harry was directly in the path of the car. Suddenly Eva struck him on the head with the hammer, and Martha, confused, ran the car over him.

Eva raised her eyes and it was then that their glances met. For a moment, the pencil paused.

"I don't want anybody to burn!"

"You don't want to burn yourself?"

"I'm—I'm taking my own share of responsibility."

At another time Byard asked:

"Were you promised the $200 car for killing Wright?"

"No, sir."

"Would you kill a man for $200?"

"No."

"Would you save a life for $200."

"Certainly."

Removes Glasses.

Then dramatically and for no apparent reason Byard ordered her to remove her shell-rimmed glasses and face the jury. She did so, and an astonishing transformation was produced. An ugly deformatory between her eyes until then concealed by the glasses, gave her a startling evil expression. Spectators gasped. Her first statement in which she admitted planning the crime with Eva, was shown her. She said it was a lie, and that she told the truth on the stand upon being promised immunity. The "truth" is that she ran him down in a spell of nervousness, after Eva struck him. She had a "bargain" with the District Attorney she explained.

The defiance that had glinted in the eyes of Eva Coo later changed to a look of despair as the relentless chains of evidence were gradually being forged around her.

Eva Coo was prepared for adverse testimony but hardly for the sensational statements that Martha Clift made on the stand when questioned by the District Attorney.

Pushed Him Into Car.

Admitting that she had acted as the shauffeur that night, Mrs. Clift declared:

"Eva motioned to Harry and said, 'Come on Harry.' He got out of the car and started up the driveway. Then I started up the driveway in the car. Harry looked around and saw the car coming. He started to step out of the wheel track and then Eva hit him and pushed him in front of the car."

The 27 year old woman admitted that she made no effort to avoid hitting Wright. She said that she was "too nervous" at the time. Then, Mrs. Clift related how she see-sawed the car back and forth across the unconscious Wright until both women were convinced that he was dead.

Rehearsed It.

Shrewdly the State used Mrs. Clift to establish its vaunted claim that the murder of Harry Wright for $14,000 insurance was plotted long in advance. Eva Coo, according to the State, planned the death of the crippled man of all work last April.

It was then, according to Martha Clift's testimony, Eva's plan to use the car of her lover, Harry Nabinger as the instrument of Wright's death. She planned, said Mrs. Clift, to run the car, with Wright in it, off an embankment.

Rehearsal of Crime.

District Attorney Donald Grant used the testimony of Nabinger to establish the fact that Mrs. Coo held a "rehearsal" of the alleged crime on Decoration Day. On that occasion, Eva conducted an outing at which Martha Clift, Nabinger and Gladys Shumway, prosecution witnesses were present. They drove up to Crumhorn Mountain at Eva's suggestion, by the route eventually followed on the night of the murder.

When the party reached the deserted Scott home, Eva got out of the car and went indoors, remaining for some time. It was in the driveway of this abandoned mountain retreat that Harry Wright was killed.

Gladys Shumway later testified as she looked at the mallet shown her:

"That looks like the one Eva carried on Decoration Day when we all went to gather May flowers on Crumhorn Mountain. I remember Eva swung it over her head as if she were hitting someone. She said to me: 'Wouldn't this be good to hit somebody with?'"

Eva Coo Testifies

Eva Coo climbed into the witness stand yesterday as though it were a throne and stared with cold disdain upon those who crowded the courtroom.

And with the same contempt she read and identified her first damning statement after her arrest in which she described how she and Martha Clift murdered her crippled handyman, Harry Wright, for his insurance.

She was placed on the stand by her own counsel to testify that this statement was forced from her by threats and promises of immunity. But she failed to reveal much of either threats or promises.

Even that lonely night at the haunted house on Crumhorn Mountain when she was forced to touch the exhumed body of old Harry during re-enactment of the crime, lost its flavour of horror as she told it.

At the opening of the afternoon session the District Attorney himself took the witness stand. Being duly sworn, Mr. Grant said:

"As I can recall I was never alone with Eva Coo at any time, nor have I at any time made her any promises, direct or indirect of immunity. I further state that I did not promise her that she could go home."

Grant said that he had acted as her attorney in 1924, 1927 and in 1930.

Third Degree Mentioned

Q. Did you ever use the words burn or first degree to her?" A. I believe I did.

Q. Did you use words: "third degree" to her? A. No. she used it to me.

Q. Did she say that she was sleepy?" A. I believe she did once.

Byard asked if Grant himself had not gone home and slept during Eva's cross-examination. He said that he had, but denied he had had the state troopers ask Eva framed questions on Crumhorn Mountain.

Sheriff George Mitchell was placed on the stand to say that he never knew Grant to be alone with her. Troopers and Court House attendants were called for similar testimony.

EVA TAKES STAND

When put on the stand Eva spent 15 minutes laboriously reading her first statement. Eva identified her signatures at the bottom of the page.

"Were these the questions asked you on June 20th, also your answers?" District Attorney Don Grant demanded a cross-examination.

Eva looked down upon him defiantly.

SLEPT WHEN QUESTIONED

"I think they were. I was pretty nervous, so I don't remember. I went to sleep while you asked me these questions. I sat on the chair beside you, didn't I?"

Grant objected to her questioning him.

"Well, I am questioning you."

"Two or three times they shook me up to make me answer."

She admitted she had been told to read each page before signing it. But that she merely looked them over. She had been questioned all day and all night, she said.

"Who questioned you?"

"Everybody—one trooper said to me, he said: 'Don't think we'll get tired. There's 96 of us, and we can relay all the time'."

At the beginning of the cross-examination Grant requested her to remove her hat. She compiled, exposing her frowsy, bleached hair for a few minutes, then said she preferred to wear a hat, and put it on again.

In her own words Eva told of demanding that she and Martha Clift be given the third degree.

It was on Friday, June 22, she said, and Grant was asking her what she knew about Harry Wright's death.

Her wierd blue eyes shot white darts at him as she described the scene.

THIRD DEGREE

"I said I didn't know nothing." I said: "If you think I run over Harry Wright, you take Martha and I and give us the third degree'. You said: 'Are you sure you want the third degree? What about the first degree?' I asked you: 'Well, which will make you tell the truth quicker?' I didn't know what the first degree was. About four o'clock you told me that Martha said I was the one who ran over Harry Wright."

Q. You asked for the third degree? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you get it? A. No.

The sheriff once slapped her face to wake her up she said—but he was only fooling.

ACCUSED MARTHA

And then she identified the second statement, in which she charged Martha Clift with running down their victim.

Eva testified that he promised her immunity only when they were alone together.

Although she seemed somewhat nervous on the stand, "Little Eva" was nowhere near softening. She snapped at the district attorney in a tone not lacking in vigor.

"IMMUNITY" A PUZZLE

Eva's weakness is to talk too much, occasionally volunteering information.

When Grant, reading from her statement, asked her if she had been asked if anyone had promised her immunity for making a statement, Eva's answer was that she didn't know what "immunity" meant.

"I told you I'd sign anything if I could go home."

"And you thought 'immunity' meant going home?"

"Yes, I did."

"Did any one promise you that you would not be prosecuted for any crime if you signed this statement?"

To all queries about promised immunity in her statement Eva had answered "no."

PICTON WOMAN RESCUES 2 MEN PAUDASH LAKE

Spots Sinking Pair From Car —Braves Waves in Battered Punt.

CANOE HAD UPSET.

Uses Stockings as Lifeline—Lights Fire, Revives Both—Disappears.

BANCROFT, Ont., Aug. 31 (CP).—Two men to-day owed their lives to a courageous woman who dared the turbulent waters of Paudash Lake in a rickety punt with a broken oar to bring them to safety after they had been tumbled into the water from a canoe. The woman is Miss C. Folcard of Picton, Ont., employee of the Ontario Mothers' Allowance Commission.

She rescued Dr. F. Hopkins and George Bradshaw, Illinois vacationists at Paudash Lake, who fell from the canoe when one of them changed position to haul a fish into thecraft. The canoe overturned and the wind sent it gliding out of reach while Dr. Hopkins struggled to keep Bradshaw from sinking.

Bradshaw had already gone down twice, and Dr. Hopkins was fast surrendering his fight when the brave woman battled the waves in the old punt to pull up alongside the two men. Miss Folcard took her stockings and neck scarf off and fashioned a rope with which she lashed the unconscious Bradshaw to the stern of the punt.

Valiant efforts to haul the weakened doctor aboard were successful and Miss Folcard turned her boat ashore for another battle against the river with a single, shattered oar. She landed the old punt and helped the doctor and his companion ashore, where she brought Bradshaw around, and then lighted a fire with driftwood.

Dr. Hopkins was finally restored to normal, and he then helped Miss Folcard to bring about the recovery of Bradshaw.

It was while driving along the shore road in her car that Miss Folcard noticed the plight of the fishermen. Without hesitation she started to their aid, and when she had accomplished her task, departed quietly for her home, where efforts to interview her were unsuccessful.

Alberta Cabinet Women Member League Delegate

Mrs. Mary Parlby Announces Retirement When Present Government Ends.

By T. B. WINDROSS.
Central Press Canadian Writer

EDMONTON, Alta., Aug. 23.—Romance, courage and culture all had a part in shaping the career of Hon. Mary Irene Parlby, M.L.A., minister without portfolio in the Alberta U.F.A. cabinet, who has told her constituents that she will retire from public life at the end of the present administration in the province.

Mrs. Parlby was born in England and came to Alberta as a visitor to see friends. While in the prairie province she met her future husband, W. H. C. Parlby, M.A., Oxon., who had also come to the west on a visit some time before and stayed. They were married shortly afterwards. Mr. Parlby took his bride to his new Dartmoor ranch home near Alix.

Travelled in India

Alberta's first woman cabinet minister was born in London, and as a girl of 13 went to India with her father, living there until she was 16 years of age. After returning from the east she travelled in Germany and Switzerland.

During her public career she has shown herself a woman of exceptional education and deep culture and talent with understanding of the problems of rura" life in her adopted province. This, combined with her grasp of public affairs and her knowledge of parliamentary procedure, has made her a most useful and competent member of the government.

She came into prominence in 1915 when elected president of the U.F.W.A., a woman's organization of the farming movement. She served in this capacity for five years. When the war conference of women from all over Canada met in Ottawa in 1918, she was one summoned to attend from Alberta.

At this conference her ability to express herself clearly and her convincing oratory brought her rapidly to the front.

Red Cross Worker

She was elected to the Alberta legislature in the general election of 1921, when the farmers' party swept the province, and has represented her constituency of Lacombe ever since. She was invited to join the cabinet of Premier Greenfield as a minister without portfolio and accepted.

Mrs. Parlby is a grand-niece of the late Captain Marryat, R.N., famous author, whose book, "Settlers in Canada," fascinated her as a young girl. She recently told an interviewer that she loved the old pioneer times better than the present days.

She has been on the board of governors of the University of Alberta for many years, is a vice-president of the provincial Red Cross Society, and has strenuously advocated better rural conditions in her work with the society with ability and success.

Attended League of Nations

In 1931 she was selected by Premier Bennett and the federal cabinet at Ottawa as a full delegate to the eighth assembly of the League of Nations. While there she was active in committee work and gave valuable assistance in the consideration of social service and women's and children's interests. She was recognized as one of the outstanding speakers among the women delegates at the assembly

Pickford Forgives Estranged Husband; Fairbanks Rumored in Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., Aug. 31.—The "Sweetheart of America" was close to having her own sweetheart again yesterday, for Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, the royal pair of screendom, were reported to have patched up their differences.

Mary refused to deny there had been a reconciliation with Doug, and that she had forgiven the athletic and world-wandering star of the screen.

"I won't deny it," Miss Pickford said. "I hope it is true. I can't discuss it now. I have never discussed the matter. Why should I begin now?"

Thus it seems that within a few days Fairbanks will return to Pickfair, the Windsor castle of Hollywood's screen realm, to pick up the threads of the romance which held all motion picture-lovers in its grasp until Fairbanks sailed away to Europe 15 months ago.

Fairbanks was visiting at Pickfair yesterday but he successfully evaded all efforts to obtain a statement. Close friends said that the final step in the reconciliation would come in the next few days when Miss Pickford will dismiss divorce proceedings instituted some months ago.

Speechless Mystery Man Found In Boat Admits He is Fugitive From Chain Gang

HALIFAX, Aug. 31.—(C.P.)—Paul Dewees, speechless mystery man who was found unconscious in a boat in Halifax harbor nearly a fortnight ago, was able to talk today as the iron cell door of the city police station clicked behind him.

His long silence broken, he told police he was a fugitive from justice with a prison record extending over nine years. He expressed intense hatred for southern chain gangs from which he said he escaped. Dewees unfolded a story of prison life that contained an episode in nearly every section of the United States.

For a week after he was found in the little boat ashore on George's island, he lay in hospital here, unable to talk. He wrote down his answers on paper when questioned by police. To-day he was still unable to explain, now that he had regained his powers of speech, how he came to be in the boat. He was held on a charge of vagrancy.

Fingerprints received from the Chief of Police at Bellingham, Washington, showed that he was allegedly a fugitive from justice, it being claimed that he escaped from the Utah State and Louisiana State penitentiaries. He will be turned over to immigration authorities.

HUMORING "THE QUEEN."

FORT ERIE, Aug. 31 (C.P.).—The "Queen of England" entered the Dominion at Fort Erie on an early morning train to-day and so insisted upon being greeted by border Customs and immigration men, but she was en route to a Hamilton mental institution and accompanied by special matron. Her insistance upon being greeted as Her Majesty was humored by Canadian frontier inspectors.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 31, 1934

CONSTRUCTION IMPROVES.

Although construction in Canada is still far below normal, and this conditions is one of the most serious factors in the unemployment situation, it is gratifying to learn from the statistical summary of Canadian construction issued for publication to-day by MacLean Building Reports, Ltd., that there has been a distinct improvement recently.

According to this authentic source of information, the contracts awarded for the month of August showed an increase of 21 per cent. over July and an 11 per cent. increase over June.

The figures for the whole Dominion amounted to $13,543,900 for August, $11,190,500 for July and $12,209,900 for June. The total value of contracts for the first eight months of the year amounts to $95,651,100 as compared with $65,043,800 for the same period in 1933, a substantial increase of 37.4 per cent.

Quebec led the rest of the provinces with a total of $4,918,400, Ontario following close with $4,317,200. New Brunswick takes third place with $1,837,000, Manitoba $847,600, Nova Scotia $609,200, British Columbia $455,600, Alberta $414,100, Saskatchewan $198,000 and Prince Edward Island $46,800.

The contemplated work for August amounted to $14,782,900, bringing the year's total to date to $186,013,200, compared with $119,975,900 for 1933.

The only fly in the ointment is the fact that governmental construction work is responsible for most of the increase, the list of large contracts awarded in August showing the majority of the items as part of the Federal Government's public works scheme and very few of them the result of private enterprise.

THIS IS RATHER AWKWARD.

At a directors' luncheon the other day, Col. F. H. Deacon, president of the Canadian National Exhibition, expressed that Great Britain might see the wisdom of erecting an Empire building at the big fair which would house the exhibits of the British Empire.

Undoubtedly such a building would not only be an asset to the Canadian National Exhibition, but it would play an important part in furthering the interest of Empire trade and in bringing the various sections of the British Empire closer together.

President Deacon has, however, chosen an impropitious time to advance such a proposal in view of the refusal on the part of the Ontario Government to authorize a provincial exhibit at the Canadian National.

Certainly the management of Canada's great fair is robbed of an important talking point by the decision of the new administration.

When the Government of the province in which the O.N.E. is held declines to spend $25,000 in financing an exhibit, in spite of the fact that a Government building is already available and the Provincial Government is called upon to contribute $60,000 a year toward the cost of the structure, it must be admitted that it takes a certain amount of audacity to propose to the British Government that it should go to the expense of erecting an Empire building at the "Ex."

The fact that the Ontario Government has questioned the value of an exhibit at Toronto makes it awkward to approach outside administrations to interest themselves in Canada's shop window.

AN ADMIRABLE POLICY.

Two features of Attorney-General Roebuck's instruction to the magistrates of the province are being endorsed on all sides.

In the first place, there is general approval of his appeal for decorum, kindness, consideration and courtesy in the hearing of cases.

Although our local court has not been an offender in this respect, it is the case that there have been magistrates elsewhere who seemed to take a delight in indulging in witticisms at the expense of some of the unfortunates on trial before them.

Mr. Roebuck is quite right in insisting that this kind of thing must cease, and he is on equally firm ground in his policy of separating the work of hearing complaints and laying information from that of deciding cases.

The preliminary work is to be done by the new justices of the peace, and the magistrates will know nothing about the particulars of the cases until the evidence is given before them.

In this connection Mr. Roebuck urges the magistrates to "set their faces sternly and strictly against efforts to acquaint them with the facts of the case before the evidence is heard before them to the end that all me n may come to realise that justice in our police courts is fair, unprejudiced and above board."

That is an ideal to which the magistrates should feel it a credit to aspire, for the tone and efficiency of this branch of the administration of justice should be appreciably elevated as a result of the Attorney-General's splendidly conceived and admirably expressed policy.

WHY NOT PETERBOROUGH?

It is announced from Gananoque that Fish and Game Inspector Robert G. Sheppard, of Leeds County, whose name appeared in the list of dismissed officials the other day, has been reinstated, the Government having decided to retain his services.

A despatch telling of this change of front says:

"In a county such as this where the conservation of fish and game means so much to guides, hotel-keepers and others who depend upon their living from the tourist traffic, and particularly the visiting fishermen, the loss of the inspector was viewed with considerable apprehension. However, the announcement that he is to be reinstated has set at rest the fears in many quarters that the new Government's rigid policy of economy would retard the many years' effort to keep the waters of Leeds stocked to such an extent that they would offer their usual attraction to the tourists who leave so much money here every year."

The Government is to be congratulated upon its frankness in admitting in the case of Leeds County that it made a mistake in discarding its game and fish protective service and upon putting back on the job an official that had been dismissed.

Surely in Peterborough County where every argument advanced in Leedf for the retention of the game inspector applies with equal force we have a right to expect that the new administration will also change its policy and announce that in view of the importance of conserving the fish and game resources of this district the services of Overseer Marshall will be retained.

Strong representations to that end have already been made from sportsmen and other citizens of all shades of politics, and now that the Government has established a precedent by reinstating Eastern Ontario officers, the same treatment should be accorded the Kawartha district where the fish and game mean so much.

SERVED GOOD PURPOSE.

(Border Cities Star)

Mr. Stevens has rendered an important service to his party, even if certain persons included in that party are resentful of his attitude. In this day and age it has been amply demonstrated that certain firms and certain individuals have not played fair with their staffs nor with the ultimate consumer. And in other cases unfairness has been extended to the primary producers.

Substantial evidence has been offered to thoroughly prove this fact. It follows, then, that the uncovering of such evidence—through the medium of Mr. Stevens' leadership—is a valuable thing from a national point of view because, even if it be difficult to apply corrective treatment through legislation, the moral effect of such revelations cannot be doubted.

If one doubts this let him consider the fact that the tobacco growers of southwestern Ontario are scheduled to receive a much better deal this year than they have secured for some time.

There is reason to believe, also, that more than one worker will receive better wages as a result of some of the evidence laid before the parliamentary committee. After all, public opinion is a mighty instrument and public opinion has been thoroughly aroused by some of the facts brought out at Ottawa.

EDUCATIONAL MEDIUM.

There is one incident in the life of the late Marie Dressler which probably was not given the prominence it deserved at the time of the passing of this world-famed actress, but which is undoubtedly worthy of special comment.

It is said that when she started out in the world with very little education in the way of school training, her mother advised her strongly to "read the newspapers" and thereby learn about people and events. Miss Dressler never forgot that advice, but followed it religiously. She attributed much of her success to the information she gained in that way.

It is a fact that no man or woman may be described as "uneducated" if the proper attention is given to reading and digesting the news which is happening from day to day. In fact, the reading of newspapers should be a compulsory part of primary, secondary and higher education. We provide scholars with many volumes on history which is nothing more nor less than a running comment upon the current events of other days; and while it is necessary to have an intelligent conception of what has occurred in past ages in order to understand the significance of things to-day, it is just as necessary that the intelligent scholar keep abreast of the history of the present, by reading it at first hand out of the daily newspapers.

Imporant things are happening in the world to-day. There is the situation in Russia, in Germany, in Austria and in the Far East—all history in the making which will appear in the text books of the future. Young people of to-day do not have to wait until the books are written before studying these interesting national and international subjects. They may get it all from day to day in the columns of the press.

The Daily News understands that Mr. Harry Collins, principal of the Chatham Vocational School, so thoroughly realizes the value of newspapers as necessary educational media that he is preparing bulletin boards to be erected in the school, containing clippings of current events which should be familiar to all young people of the institution. He has prepared a complete outline of the Austrian situation through clipping and piecing together press dispatches and maps which have appeared in the Chatham Daily News pointing out that if anyone will but read this material he will have a complete and comparative grasp of the whole situation and its bearing upon Austria's future influence in world affairs.

Newspaper reading is something which should not be done carelessly or spasmodically. Every person in this community, young and old, should set apart a certain portion of each day for a thorough perusal of the events of their own community and the world in general. It is particularly necessary in children who have their lives before them, and who should enter life's duties with a thorough background of knowledge of situations and conditions which are being established day by day.—Chatham News.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Moved and carried, that the Mayor Stewart-Attorney-General Roebuck controversy be referred to the League of Nations.

Interest in the federal by-elections is already keen with the greatest excitement centring upon the contest in Toronto East where the celebrated Tommy Church is the Government candidate.

The success of last night's carnival will enable the Kiwanis Club to continue its social service activities, and for that happy condition thanks are due to the public for its splendid support.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—Premier Hepburn is running true to form in his reply to Dr. Shields, showing an utter lack of dignity and an entire absence of a sense of responsibility. To stigmatize the sober, decent portion of the citizenship of Ontario who are opposed to the disgusting conditions set up by the beer parlors as "offensive temperance cranks" shows a lack of appreciation of the fact that the Government of the province has a duty and responsibility to every class of the community.

Much has been said and written of the right of those who desire it to have the liberty to satisfy that desire in the purchase and drinking of intoxicating liquors, but I think that the decent, sober part of the community have also the right to demand that they be allowed the use of the streets in decency and safety, whether as pedestrians or as motorists. The drunken driver is a menace to all, and the authorities so far seem unable to grasp the seriousness of the evil.

The position of the drunken driver careering through the streets, irratically steering a high-powered car, is analogous to that of a madman running amuck with a knife or a gun, and he should be treated in the same way. The first thing we should do in the case of the madman would be to confiscate the weapon and then lock him up until he was cured, and I maintain that if a man is caught driving a car when drunk the car should be taken away from him and he should be given a stiff jail sentence. What is the use of a fine of $10 or a 7-day sentence in such a case? A drunken driver is a potential and probable murderer, and should be dealt with as such. Whether the authorities appreciate it or not, the sober, respectable part of the community have a right to consideration in this matter.

Unfortunately for us, the brewer and the distiller have become the real governors of Ontario.

Yours faithfully,
GEO. LEADER.

Climate offers a considerable contribution. Child-life gives insight. Would you know children? See them at camp. Tolstoy wrote an interpretation of the child. Tolstoy was a psychologist. He wrote from the inside of a child. In this article, it is the outside of a child we write.

A picture of the Russian children in the summer time is attempted. The Summer Camp is for them no new thing. The manner in which they now spend the summer vacation is. If you were in Moscow, or in any other Russian city, you would be sure to hear the measured light footsteps of thousands of the children marching to some martial music in long lines, two abreast. These boys and girls have a bewitching organization appellation, "We Are The Pioneers!" They are as proud of the name as men are, of the regalia, given as a distinction.

Out of Moscow this summer marched 100,000 boys and girls to recreation camps during the first week of vacation. Out they go at this rate every week for two months—out where the fields are; and the mountains, the meadows and the seashore. For the first time the children are really hilarious. For they have gone not to be bothered with political harangues. They have not gone with the spectre of Socialism staring them in the face. What do boys and girls care about Socialism or any other "ism". They want above all things, when on a vacation, to be just boys and girls. Why in Canadian summer schools, sandwich in between games with advice, and such wise counsel and goody-goody talks? The whole effort becomes a weariness to the flesh of youth.

Formerly, a permanent feature of the summer vacation in Russia was the political meeting in which current Soviet problems were discussed. The children were bored and tired. Now all is changed. Bright games and wholesome unstilted recreation lend charm to the vacation days of Russian children and youth.

GEORGIA—ANGELA HERNDON

IN OUR part of the world human rights cannot be trampled on for long. The Supreme Courts are for justice. When a lower court wrongfully convicts, or illegally acquits, the Supreme Court is the last resort for justice. But when a Supreme Court sustains an illegal conviction of a lower court, the people are really the highest court of justice.

The Georgia Supreme Court has recently sustained the conviction in a lower court of a nineteen-year-old negro youth on a charge of inciting revolution. He was sentenced for eighteen years to the chain gang. The sentence can be lengthened to twenty-five years.

Consider the charges. He participated in a meeting of unemployed negro and white workers. Count two. The police raided his home and found radical literature. One pamphlet was entitled, "Communism and Christianism," by the former Episcopal Bishop William Montgomery Brown of Arkansas. Another bore the title, "The Life and Struggle sof Negro Toilers," by George Padmore.

At the trial the prosecution appealed to racial, religious and political prejudices. The Assistant Solicitor, John B. Hudson, had the audacity in an American court of Justice to say that it was not Herndon who was on trial, but Lenin, Stalin, Trotzky and Kerensky. Every state witness called was a public employee. Among them were detectives.

The defence attempted to put on the stand white economists of reputation from Georgia universities. Each of these economists is an expert on the literature and theories read by Herndon. The court blocked the move. Who are behind this disgraceful treatment of as fine a lad as can be found in either white or negro homes in Georgia?

Georgia has one very old criminal statute. It dates back to 1833. It was enacted in the days of American slavery. If predatory wealth could hold the reins the negro in Georgia would still be driven.

WEST VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA is to be congratulated. Beautiful, not costly, houses for the miners' families, at Reedsville, Morgantown and Scott's Run and where are located the coal fields of northern West Virginia. President Roosevelt is venturing large projects. Mrs. Roosevelt on her own initiative is also venturing a bit. Homes for the miners is her favorite job. She has decided that the miners shall live in self-respecting homes. Her project is termed the Reedsville Experimental Community. The Government will appropriate the necessary funds. But the provision for the building of the homes make possible, with the wages to be paid the miners, the self liquidation of the investment by the government. The miner is given twenty years to pay for his charming home.

You are anxious to know what the home looks like and what it is inside. These houses arrived. The came from a mill in New England. To Virginia they came in sections. This kind of house was chosen because Mrs. Roosevelt wanted them right away. Carpenters cannot work as fast as machinery. Mrs. Roosevelt takes time by the forelock. In a few days the order was filled and in a few more the mill houses were where wanted. But they were all alike. Mrs. Roosevelt would none of this. Variety is to her taste. And so carpenters were called. An architect came from New York. He is an artist architect. When he and the carpenters had completed the re-making of the little mill houses they had the appearance of palaces. Instead of being all alike they were all unlike.

In each there is a bed room with a big double bed and a cradle. You can guess for whom. Then there is another bed room but smaller, with a single bed and a double decker. In this room will sleep three children when the need arrives. A combination living and dining room, beautifully decorated, and hung with drape and curtain is attractive and restful. Then there is the bath room and kitchen and pantry. In the basement are the furnace room and workshop for dad. Each house has its own well and electric pump.

ON THIS DATE

A DAY IN CANADIAN HISTORY

By Red Williams

DECIMAL CURRENCY IN CANADA.

On this date in 1851, the Assembly of the Province of Canada passed an act permitting the use of decimal currency, but it was refused royal assent. There was strong opposition from the merchants and those engaged in trade with Britain who preferred the sterling system. But year by year the public were more and more converted to the simplicity of the decimal system. In 1853 an act was passed permitting the use of dollars and cents as optional to pounds, shillings and pence and providing for the issue of token money in terms of 20 cents, 10 cents, 5 cents and 1 cent.

Following the reciprocity treaty with the United States more energetic measures were taken in 1855 to secure "the legal adoption of a decimal currency and coinage of like denominations and values as that of the United States" and in 1857 the arrangement providing for the optional use of dollars and pounds was abandoned and dollars and cents became compulsory.

The "loyal" element was much disturbed at this "betrayal of British interests" and held meetings of protest, but public convenience overcame "patriotic protest" and as the old timers died out there was an end of the agitation for a return to the British system. It was an interesting illustration of how, despite British traditions and sentiment, Canada was influenced by continental conditions.

ALL OF US

(By Marshall Maslin.)

HOW WE LOST OUR JOB.

We wanted a job, so my brother and I asked our uncle, who had charge of an apple packing concern, if he would give us one.

It was the in-between season, and we knew that there was work if we could get it . . . Out in the field, near the plant, was a pile of damaged boxes as big as one of the pyramids. Some of the boxes had nails out of them, some had broken sides or ends. Somebody had to repair them—and why shouldn't that somebody be my brother and me ("Me" sounds better). It would give us some nice spending money through the winter.

So we went into conference with Uncle Harry. He said we could have the work, but he didn't know what it was worth. Suppose we worked a sample day and saw how many we could work over in eight or ten hours. . . . So we tore into that pile and in one day we fixed an enormous number of boxes. We didn't stop a minute. We took only ten minutes for lunch. We fixed or examined an unbelievable number of boxes. Perhaps a thousand, perhaps twelve hundred . . . And when we told the total to Uncle Harry, he said that would be worth about a dollar and a quarter a day. So we could go to work, keep count of our own hours, let him know and he'd pay us at that rate.

We took over the contract . . . But we didn't keep up the pace. We never did attain that great total again. We dawdled, we played, we took an hour for lunch, we yoo-hooed at other kids going past, we discussed great problems together, we wished it was summer and we could go swimming, we talked about going down to the river and spearing driftwood in the flood, we sat on boxes and dreamed of the unseen future. . . . And just about that time in our lives, Uncle Harry walked round the corner of the box pile and took one look at his recumbent nephews and fired both of them on the spot . . . It seemed that we were dishonest, that we were lazy, that we didn't keep our word, that we were just a couple of little bums and he didn't want us on the payroll any more and we could take our little hatchets and go home to our mother and tell her what had happened to her little boys. So we went.

And ever since that day I've understood that if you're going to loaf on the job you should at least PRETEND to be working—and not underestimate either the intelligence or the patience of your boss . . . It was a lesson to us.

What's in The NAME

of Canadian Cities and Towns?

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Up until 1859 this city was known as Queenborough, as it then was the capital of the crown colony of British Columbia, which did not then include Vancouver Island. The name was bestowed on it by the Royal Engineers in honor of Queen Victoria.

Victoria was then the capital of the colony of Vancouver Island and as it was known as the Queen City, its residents objected to this community being called Queensborough. Governor Douglas then asker Her Majesty to change the name of the British Columbia capital. The queen complied, giving it the name of New Westminster, after Westminster in England. The name of the town was changed in 1859.

PRICE OF TOMATOES RAISED BY CANNERS

Prince Edward County Growers Offered Thirty-Two and a Half Cents.

PICTON, Aug. 31.—Hundreds of farmers in Prince Edward County were surprised and delighted to learn that Canadian Canners, Ltd., will pay five cents per bushel more for tomatoes than the contract calls for. The announceemnt was made this morning by E. A. Pearce, Eastern District manager of Canadian Canners. The contracted price was 27½ cents per bushel. The new price will be 32½ cents per bushel.

"We are trying to secure a quality pack at this is the only kind we can sell," stated Mr. Pearce, "so we are offering a better price hoping to get better quality tomatoes."

The hundreds of women who peel tomatoes were also the recipients of good news. Instead of receiving four cents per pail they will receive five cents.

These two increases will mean many thousands more dollars being distributed to Prince Edward County farmers and factory workers.

A Thought

TRUE HAPPINESS

True happiness can never be founded upon falsehood. The profits of lying are much overestimated. It pays to be true. At least we shall be at peace with ourselves.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE REVIEWS

ONTARIO GRAIN

Approximate prices track shipping point: Wheat, 89c to 90c; oats, 35c to 36c; barley, 55c to 60c; corn, 85c to 86c; rye, 85c to 87c; buckwheat, 55c to 56c.

MONTREAL PRODUCE

Egg prices continued to advance, while butter and cheese prices were easier on the Montreal Produce and Dairy market yesterday.

Butter declined ¼c, fresh No. 1 in cartots or less, being quoted at 19¾c to 19¼c a pound. Small lots to the retail trade were quoted by jobbers at 20½c to 21c a pound for solids, and 21½c to 22c for prints. Arrivals were 403 boxes.

Graded shipments of eggs in cartots or less were 24c a dozen for A-large, up ½c; 22c for A-medium, up ½c; 15c for B, and 18c for C. Receipts totalled 713 cases.

On the cheese market, Ontario colored brought 10¼c a pound, and Quebec cheese sold at 9¾c a pound, each being off ½c. Arrivals totalled 2,501 boxes.

New Quebec potatoes were 45c to 50c per 80-pound bag of No. 1 grade.

CHICAGO GRAIN

Grain prices were confined to a narrow fluctuation range yesterday by apparent hesitancy of trading interests, and the market consequently was nervous and erratic.

After minor price changes, wheat closed barely steady, ⅝c down to ¼c higher, compared with Wednesday's finish; while corn netted a ¼c to ⅝c gain.

May wheat was the only one of the five futures contracts in that grain that showed a net loss for the day. Many finished at $1.05 to $1.05¼, unchanged to ⅝c down. September options were at $1.02⅝ to $1.03, unchanged to ¼c higher, and December new sold at $1.03⅛ to $1.04.

December corn closed at 80⅝c to 80⅞c, a fraction above the level at which resting orders to buy buoyed that grain, although at one time this delivery showed a high of 81¼. Rye was off ½c to ¼c, oats were up ¼c to ⅝c, and barley closed ½c down to ⅝c up.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

Moderate export sales of Canadian wheat, coupled with support offered frrom other sources, enabled wheat futures prices to resist the hedging pressure on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange yesterday. Values closed unchanged to ⅝c higher, October at 81⅝c, December 82⅝c to 82⅛c, and May 86⅛c to 86⅜c.

Sales of wheat for foreign shipment, announced late in the session, enabled futures to display a burst of strength in the closing minutes. Earlier fractional declines were fully recovered. Generally, however, the market was quiet and the late spurt was almost all the day's activity.

Though considerably lighter than for the past two weeks, hedging sales comprised most of the selling. Country receipts of new-crop wheat Wednesday totalled 3,476 000 bushels compared with 1,373,000 on the same day a year ago. The export sales—500,000 bushels—largely offset this pressure.

Other grrains were quiet and closed unchanged. Buying of barley and oats, presumably against export sales, featured coarse grains futures, all grains closing higher.

FLIER RESTS IN OTTAWA AFTER GREENLAND FLIGHT

OTTAWA, Aug. 31 (C.P.).—John Grierson, British airman, rested here to-day after an east to west trans-Atlantic flight which carried him across Iceland, Greenland and Canada's far northern regions. In the early afternoon yesterday he nosed his Gypsy moth plane to a perfect landing on the Ottawa River, finishing a journey begun at Rochester, England, more than a month ago.

The flight, undertaken by the tall, slender flier, with a view to surveying a possible air-mail route from the United Kingdom to Canada, was not devoid of discomfort, mishap and delay. But today Grierson, a guest of the officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force at the Ottawa air station, was enjoying the relaxation and comforts of civilization again. He will rest up in Ottawa for three or four days, and then go on to New York, where Mrs. Grierson will join him.

QUINTUPLETS GET FIRST BATH

CALLANDER, Ont., Aug. 31.—(CP)—All five of the Dionne quintuplets were out of their incubators today and established in beds where they kicked and rolled with every manifestation of keen pleasure. They all had baths today also. It was the first time Emilie and Marie, the two smallest girls, had been washed in water.

GOLD ISSUES ARE STANDOUT

Senior Issues Hold Fairly Steady at Previous Levels at Toronto.

Market Closed Saturday.

TORONTO, Aug. 31 (CP).—With gold stocks in the foreground the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange today wrote finis to summer trading. It will be closed from tonight till Tuesday morning, when brokers hope for a fall boom market. The only feature of the day's activity was the ascendancy of Central Patricia to a new 1934 high of 1.21. Senior issues held fairly steady at previous levels, slight variations were recorded in secondary golds. Base metals displayed some action, but silver and oils were quiet.

Hollinger displayed strength throughout the day and gained 5 points to 19.50. Dome, and Lake Shore sought lower levels. Lake Shore dropped to 56.00, down $1.00, while Dome and McIntyre lost 30 points. Teck Hughes was slightly higher and Wright Hargreaves and McIntyre held steady. Noranda dropped 40 points to 41.50.

DULL SESSION TORONTO TRADE

Industrials Close Activity for Summer Season With Light Market.

PRICES SAG.

TORONTO, Aug. 31 (CP).—The industrial section of the Toronto Exchange went through the motions today of winding up a summer's dull market and closing down for a long week-end. Volume was light and prices sagged. Trading interest was low until the last half hour when alcohols came to life with Distillers Seagrams and Walkers taking the lead. Walkers Common and Distillers gained over previous quotes.

Late trading interest sent Walkers Common to 28, up 1 and Distillers Seagrams also for a point gain to 15. Strength in these issues changed the whole section with even the breweries being influenced. Brewing Corporation Pfd. scored a gain of nearly a point. The common wavered slightly. Industrial Alcohol gained 1-2 to 8 1-2.

BLOUIN LAKE GOLD MINES

Latest reports from the Blouin Lake Gold Mines property, according to W. W. Davis, M.E., consulting engineer for the company, are that several shears have been picked up by surface exploration near the grandiorite-greenstone contact. These shears strike approximately north and south and also northwest and southeast. In some cases quart tourmaline veins have formed in these shears, the latest one to be uncovered being about five feet wide. Rock trenches are being put in to get below the weathered surface vein matter so that it may be inspected and sampled.

The property is located in Bourlamaque Township, northwestern Quebec. It adjoins Sigma and Lamaque on the north and Nu Sigma on the west.

Head office of the company is 3-4 Carleton Chambers, Ottawa, with Senator A. B. Copp, Sackville, N.B., as president, J. M. Fancy, vice-president and O. E. Culbert, secretary-treasurer.

HOPE U.S. WILL BE NEXT ENTER LEAGUE NATIONS

LONDON, Aug. 31 (AP)—Hope that the United States will be the next in line is held in unofficial circles to-day with Russia's entrance into the League of Nations all but assured.

Swift action to give the Soviet a permanent seat at Geneva—on a par with Great Britain, France and Italy—is expected when League sessions begin next Friday.

Diplomatic quarters recall that old aspirations of League adherents are only half-way realized by this steps. The group has held out hope for several years that when the opportune time came both the United States and Russia would join simultaneously.

After early years of the League, when aversion to the Bolshevist regime in some quarters was wearing away, the world's two largest non-members were invariably linked as possible converts. Japan and Germany are now the only other major powers which are not members, and they resigned.

GEORGE YOUNG IS WITHDRAWN

ed, because of cold water, the big splash got underway in a temperature of 60, two degrees less than that stipulated in the entry forms.

Substitute Race

Elwood Hughes, Exhibition general manger, got around the necessity for 62 degree or better water by calling off the race that was to be staged and substituting another with the same conditions except for the temperature stipulation. It was merely a technical change.

He gave the swimmers the chance of having their entry fees returned, but not one dropped out. They were eager to get away and didn't mind water a little colder, sixty-two would have been cold enough to wipe out any chance of a great number of them had and the couple of degrees was expected to make little difference.

Gianni Gambi, of Italy, led at the end of the first leg, a distance of one mile 134 yards, in the Canadian National Exhibition 15-mile swim to-day. Charles Garreau, of Sudbury, Ont., was second.

Gambi's time was 26 minutes, four seconds, a second more than the best man over the same distance in last year's swim. Bill Nolan, of Chelsea, Mass., was third. Alex Sorosan, New Toronto, fouith and Bill Goll, New York, fifth. J. Cairo Toronto, was in sixth place, George Rundle, Montreal seventh and George Young of Toronto, 1931 winner, eighth.

The swimmers were rounding the buoy in bunches and officials were unable for some time to place them. Marvin Nelson, of Fort Dodge, Iowa, the defending champion, was about 100 yards back of the leader.

"Rad" Radakovitch, Duquesne P. A., swimmer led the pack at the 2-mile mark in the Canadian National Exhibition 15-mile swim to-day after taking the lead over from Gianni Gambi, of Italy, who led at the mile mark.

Young In 5th Place

Radakovitch's time was one hour flat. He and the next half dozen swimmers were so closely packed the placing meant little. Charles Garrau, of Sudbury, was second and Johnny Cairo, young Torontonian, third.

John Cortawki, of Trenton, N.J., held fourth place and swimming strongly behind him was the 1931 winner, George Young, of Toronto. Gianni Gambi had slipped back to sixth place, with Marvin Nelson, defending champion, seventh.

Radkovich increased his lead in the third lap and was more than a hundred yards ahead of Johnny Cairo, the second man at that point. George Young, of Toronto was in the third spot. The leader's time was one hour 29 minutes 23 seconds.

LAKE FRONT, Toronto, Aug. 31. —(CP)— Gianni Gambi, of Italy, leader at the first mile, withdrew from the Canadian National Exhibition 15 miles swim today shortly after he completed the second mile leg. He has swum in three races and was second to George Blagden, of Memphis, Tenn. winner in 1933.

Charlie Garreau, of Sudbury, was third, Alex Sorosan, New Toronto, fourth, and Bill Goll, New York, Leonard Campbell, Mount Dennis, Ont., Marvin Nelson, Toby Tobin, San Diego, Calif., and Dan Dembicki, East Windsor, trailed in that order.

Radakovitch, after leading for two of the first three miles, was taken out of the water on the fourth leg. John Cairo, Toronto youngster, took over the leading position.

George Young, the "Catalina Kid," led Johnny Cairo, another Torontonian, by a minute and 40 seconds at the five mile mark in the 15-mile Canadian National Exhibition swim to-day.

Young, swimming strongly in the cold water he likes, took over the lead in the fifth mile from Cairo after Gianin Gambi, of Italy, and Ell Radakovitch, Duquesne, Pa., former leader, had withdrawn.

Young's time for the first third of the race was two hours, 25 minutes and 48 seconds. Cairo's was 2.26.18. Alex Sorosen, young Toronto swimmer, was in third place and Bill Goll, New York, fifth. Sorosen's time was 2.31.45 and Goll's 2.37.57. .. ..

Young Withdraws

George Young of Philadelphia and Toronto was taken from the water as he was leading in the Canadian National Exhibition 15-mile swim to-day. He had completed more than five miles in the 60-degree water, supposedly made to order for him.

The Toronto swimmer, who now makes his home in Philadelphia with his wife, Margaret Ravoir Young, trailed the leaders for more than four miles to-day and then spurted ahead of Johnny Cairo, another Torontonian, and was on top by 30 seconds and swimming strongly at the five mile mark.

"This is my last swim," Young said, as he was pulled out of the water. He had covered six miles.

ENGLISH STOCK BROKER SEES ANOTHER WALL STREET BOOM

Major L. L. B. Angas Has Predicted Four Out of Five Market Rises

Major L. L. B. Angas

(By LEONARD ARNOLD)
Central Press Canadian Writer

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—When a man has been right four times out of five guesses, people are bound to give heed to him, even if he is a stock broker. And when he predicts a boom in the stock market at a time when every other guesser is so muddled and despondent that he can't even articulate, his appeal is enormous.

Major Lawrence Lee Bagley Angas, an English stock broker, has been credited—rightly or wrongly—with causing a good-sized flurry in Wall street, sending prices up and causing a buying wave with his $1.50 pamphlet, "The Coming American Boom," Wall Street, and to a milder degree, the Canadian exchanges, are a bit excited over his predictions and his tip to buy stocks now, buy common stocks, and buy "rubbish" preferably.

Direct Impetus

A conservative economist on Wall Street, who has an international reputation, but whose name must be undisclosed here told this correspondent that there is no doubt that Angas' boom booklet was directly responsible for the market buying and upward run during the last few days. This economist had a great deal more to say concerning Major Angas' prognostications with regard to American recovery. He pointed out, and here he lines up with most of the financial reviewers, that Angas may be right about a market boom—indeed, might even cause one—but that he is hardly correct regarding a recovery. And there is obviously, a wide difference between boom and recovery.

Another observer, however, sees it the other way around, and none of them, of course, can be refuted for some time to come.

Cheaper Money

Boiling down all that Angas says amounts to this: Confronted by the stonewall resistance of the banks and big money men, the United States set out to make money so cheap that there would be perforce a loosening up of credit which would start the business wheels turning and rattling out the good times medley once again.

Angas says: "Business confidence is largely engendered by causing lack of confidence in money." He explains that if money is cheap, people will lend and buy and trade their money for goods.

Angas is concerned primarily with the stock market. He says so. His booklet is a market wise proposition, pure and simple. It is a tip sheet. He backs up his tip with economic reasons, as summed up in predicting the release of credit through the cheap money process, and he seems quite convincing — especially to the psychologically parched and despondent speculator.

Four-Year Rise

He even says that the boom will not last—that like all booms, it will come down as fast as it goes up. He says the rise, with minor fluctuations, will last about four years.

Well—he has been right four times out of five so far: He predicted in previous pamphlets, the English boom (which came about); the collapse of rubber (which came about), the rise in gold shares (and they did); the upswing in Wall Street in 1933 (right again), and the collapse in gold (which did not come, due to Roosevelt's devaluing the dollars.)

Right or wrong, Wall Street loves it. It's brought some business. One house distributed 2,500 copies and the orders to buy stocks poured in.

'KNOTTY' LEE GUEST OF KIWANIS CLUB

Peterborough Coach Appeals in Behalf of Boys.

"Knotty" Lee, coach of the league leading Peterborough Ball Club, and a veteran ball player on his own account, urged the Kiwanis Club to help make Peterborough baseball conscious by arranging access to the ball park for children of the city next year in a short address to the club at noon to-day. The way to develop a pennant-winning baseball community is through the youngsters, he said.

Chances look good for an Ontario championship for Peterborough this year, Mr. Lee reported. He promised to do all in his power to bring the pennant here.

Reporting on the Karnival staged last night, Al. Sharpe, Karnival chairman, characterized it as an unqualified success. He paid tribute to Frank Roszel, a guest at the luncheon, who sold a total of 1,470 tickets on the main Karnival draw in a diligent effort over a period of several weeks. The work of Ivan Lillico, draw chairman, was mentioned, and all who aided were thanked. Louis Loftus, 11 Benson Avenue, husband of the winner of the main prize, was a guest.

J. A. McKone reported that the Kiwanis Club share of the proceeds on the draw for pheasants staged by Bert Wainman at the Exhibition was $42.70.

ITALY TO LEND SUPPORT

ROME, Aug. 31.—(AP)—The Italian government notified London today that Italy will collaborate with Great Britain and France to facilitate Soviet Russia's entrance into the League of Nations.

No Bulbs For Parks Due To High Costs

The Parks Committee will purchase no bulbs for the city parks for next year, Alderman Stocker, chairman, said he had investigated prices of bulbs and reported that they had advanced 125 percent over last year and their Government had had to come to their assistance. Difference in the exchange was the main factor.

"So lets just forget bulbs for a year," he recommended. "It will help the beds to give them a rest next season."

Alderman Sloan put through a motion asking the chairman of the Board of Works and Parks Committee to estimate the cost of grading and levelling King Edward Park.

Red Gold.

Financing of Red Gold Mining Company is being carried out to provide Stadacona Rouyn Mines with additional cash and at the same time a substantial equity in the property, states Roy Anderson. Red Gold was recently forced to acquire from Stadacona the section of its holdings known as Black 8, and the terms of sale are $60,000 cash and 1,000,000 shares of Red Gold.

St. Anthony.

St. Anthony Gold Mines in the Sturgeon Lake area, continues to make headway in its production and the daily rate is being maintained above 130 tons. A third gold brick is reported shipped and it is estimated production at this rate will be held up close to $35,000 monthly. Negotiations are under way whereby an important financial deal will be consummated whereby U.S. interests invest in around a million shares in this new gold producer of the province. The deal would involve private parties.

Buffalo Ankerite.

The value of ore now being treated shows a recovery of around $5.00—present gold price—per ton, the lowest in some time. This is explained primarily because of the intensive development along vein areas in which the low grade ore instead of being discarded was utilized for the mill which largely paid for its cost of mining and did not throw the burden of cost on the higher grade which might otherwise have been used. It is expected by the management that this grade will materially increase.

Buffalo Ankerite, for the first six months of the year, shows a net profit of $35,177, equivalent to approximately 7 cents a share on stock issued to the end of last year. It is understood, however, that additional shares have been issued to the end of 1933.

Hollinger Consolidated.

Hollinger Consolidated has taken over the Councheneur Williams property and agrees to spend $100,000 on exploration work, it was learned from unofficial sources yesterday. The property is located near the McKenzie Red Lake holding in the Red Lake district and is said to contain one of the largest low grade ore bodies in Canada. The mineral zone is 200 feet wide and has been traced over the hill for upwards of 2,000 feet. It originates in a swamp and dips into the lake.

KALADAR MAN IS EXONERATED IN DEATH OF DELBERT HUGHES

FLINTON MAN HURT.

(Examiner Correspondence)

TWEED, Aug. 31.—Empanelled to investigate the death of Peter Hughes, 88, who was struck by an automobile driven by Delbert Hughes, near Kaladar, on August 12, a coroner's jury at Kaladar Wednesday afternoon completely obsolved Delbert Hughes of any blame in the elderly man's death.

Herbert Sedore of Flinton while coming to Tweed, was badly injured when he was thrown head foremost from a truck driven by his son. It seems that the truck headed for a ditch and turned partly over and when the door flew open, Mr. Sedore was hurled violently out. A scalp wound on the body and side of the head, six inches in length and a painful twisting of the neck was the result. The son was merely shaken up.

Ontario Provincial Constables Melly and Evans were dispatched to Arden to investigate an alleged unsuccessful holdup, that was reported to have happened near that village shortly before 2 a.m. Saturday morning.

According to the information received by Inspector Gardner, two paymasters of a construction company operating on Highway No. 7 were held up at the point of a gun, as they were motoring along the highway. The driver, as was stated, by police, managed to start the automobile and evade the robber, as he is alleged to have fired one shot at the fleeting motorists.

Alice, the en-year-old daughter of Henry Wilson of Queensboro was seriously injured on Wednesday at her home. It appears that she was playing with another child in the yard and was struck in the leg by a scythe in the hands of her playmate. The wound was extremely deep and the leg was half severed below the knee. The youngster is still in a serious condition but it is expected that she will recover although she suffered considerably from loss of blood.

Dr. Dales of Tweed was involved in a slight motor accident at the corner of Dundas street and Bleeker avenue, Belleville when his car was struck by a motor driven by Mrs. Orville Hill. The matter was amicably settled.

While working at the Nicholl's Chemical plant at Sulphide, Mr. George Akey had his thumb badly injured and he was brought to Tweed for medical attention. He will be unable to resume work for a few days.

IT'S LIVER THAT MAKES YOU FEEL SO WRETCHED

Wake Up Your Liver Bile and Get A New Lease of Life. No Calomel Is Necessary.

For you to feel healthy and happy, your liver must pour into your bowels a pint of bile into your bowels every day of your life.

Without that bile, trouble starts promptly. Your food just won't digest the way it should and your bowels get clogged. Food decays inside you and your entire system is poisoned by this poisoned matter. You have indigestion—the distress of gas, bloating, heartburn and sourness. You are apt to be headachey. Have a furred tongue, acid breath, a sour taste in your mouth, bad breath and you feel down in the dumps. You never feel like you've got a healthy appetite at all. In fact you feel generally rotten.

Now ask your druggist to give you a quantity of this compound by asking for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Take them as directed. Then see how much better you feel—how much more cheerful you are—how much more pep you have. Carter's Little Liver Pills are purely vegetable, act gently but surely. Don't accept substitutes. Insist on Carter's Little Liver Pills. Refuse anything else offered. Only 25c at all druggists.

WAYS OF LIFE

PORT ERIE, Ont., Aug. 30—(CP)—One hears tales of Russian Princess Now washing dishes, but Port Erie children buy their popcorn from a former bank official of Sofia Bulgaria. He is Anton Evanoff, 35, who came to Canada in Sept., 1930.

Evanoff sadly admitted today as he rushed his wagon he had not only held responsible positions with various banks in Bulgaria, but for three years managed a glucose factory there employing a large number of hands.

With the exception of government purchases, Bolivia is importing practically nothing.

WOOD CLOTHES FOR GERMANS

"Woolstra," Substitute for Wool, Developed by Scientists.

TRADE WAR MOVE

BERLIN, Aug. 31.—Nazis today turned to fashion limitations in the big battle against lack of raw materials.

As imports of wool were increasingly restricted by the shortage of foreign exchange, survey of Berlin's style authorities and textile experts showed that women—and men—are begining to wear so-called "wood cloth" derived from what Nazi chemists call "liquefied wood."

The new substitute for wool has been officially named "woolstra" and, it was said, is nearly equal to wool in warmth, strength and pleasing appearance.

"Just As Good"

Richard Dillenz, director of the Reich Institute of Fashion, claimed "woolstra" strikingly resembles wool.

While Dillenz insisted that "German women can still wear all the pleats and frills they desire," he admitted necessity is dictating the production of artificial wool, silk and linen.

The new "woolstra" textiles are fashioned through hundreds of tiny threads being woven together, it was explained, and represent years of effort by textile experts since world war days when paper suits were in vogue.

In some cases wool thread from discarded garments is used as the base for cloth.

Dillenz, who is also art director for the officially inspired Reich "fashion bureau," took occasion to deny reports that German women are being urged to simplify fashions for economy purposes.

He said Chancellor Hitler was definitely opposed to a complete program of artificial textiles, adding:

"It would throw millions out of employment. Both Hitler and Minister of Economics Hjalmar Schacht have repeatedly indicated they do not desire to interfere with the normal workings of world trade in this connection."

LEAVES CASTLES FOR TRAP-LINES

French Countess Will Winter in Canadian Wilds to Stock Furs.

MONTREAL, August 31 (CP) — Castles in France have been exchanged for a trapper's camp in Northern Manitoba by Countess Guyot de Mishaegen, who plans to spend the winter on a trap line north of Sherridon in search of new experiences.

Countess Guyot is no stranger to Canada. For several years she has visited Canadian forests in search of moose and deer during the hunting season. Her explorations have included canoe journeys from Roberval to James Bay and down the northern rivers. During her last visit she followed a trap line for three weeks in the north and became so enamored of the life that this winter she will stake out her own trapping territory.

Countess Guyot will leave shortly for The Pas, Manitoba, and from there will go to Sherridon, where her equipment, including sleigh dogs, canoes and outboard motors, will be waiting. After building her main camp miles away from civilization, she will set up two outpost camps and follow the trap line during the winter season.

Mexico plans to develop its tourist trade to a point that will bring in annually more than $100,000,000.

G. E. McINTOSH DIES IN OTTAWA

Federal Trust Commissioner Had Wide Experience in Organizing Marketing.

PASSES IN 70TH YEAR.

OTTAWA, Aug. 31 (C.P.)—One of the best known officials of the Dominion government service died last night in the person of George E McIntosh, fruit commissioner for the Department of Agriculture. While he had not been in good health for some time, death came suddenly after only a few days of serious illness.

In his death the country loses a man who had exceptional qualifications for the work which he was called upon to do. A training which included not only orchard work but also covered the whole field of organization and marketing fitted Mr McIntosh to deal with the problems which arose in the branch which he directed.

Born in Forest, Ont., 69 years ago, Mr. McIntosh received his early education in the schools of the district. From 1895 to 1910 he was owner and editor of the Forest Weekly Standard and used his opportunities to advertise the County of Lambton as a fruit producing area. During this period, working jointly with the district agriculture representatives and local fruit organizations, a general campaign of orchard development was carried on as a result of which the conditions of the industry in that district were much improved.

Investigated Markets

About this time the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association invited Mr. McIntosh to make a study of markets for Ontario fruit, paying particular attention to the transportation facilities. An exhaustive study was made of the situation, and largely as a result changes became effective which improved conditions generally, more particularly with regard to car rate adjustment, better trackage facilities, the establishment of fruit shelters at shipping points.

Soon after Mr. McIntosh was asked to undertake organization work among the fruit men and in 1913 he was instrumental in establishing some 16 or 17 local fruit growers associations throughout the province. During this period he continued in charge of the transportation for the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association and also represented other provinces before the railway commission on matters affecting the industry.

In 1919 Mr. McIntosh became transportation specialist to the Dominion fruit branch under Commissioner Dan Johnston. His appointment as commissioner came several years later.

He is survived by his widow, formerly Helen Murray, and two daughters, Mrs. W. Sanderson, Ottawa, and Mrs. C. Williams, Toronto. In religion he was an Anglican.

SLOT MACHINE TAX PROPOSED

weeks the machines earn enough for that man to pay the rent, $30, on the whole establishment for the month. He only gets 50 per cent., the owner of the machines the other half."

It was suggested that the machines were owned out of town. "Not all of them," explained Alderman Sloan. "Thirty of them are owned by a local man. I'd like to see a license put on them and removed from cigarettes or something else."

Mayor Denne stated that the city collected about $2,000 in cigarette licenses. "You couldn't make that up on slot machines," he said.

Are They Legal?

"You'd be surprised," answered Alderman Sloan.

Alderman Tuggey: "If we have the right to tax billiard tables, and we have and do tax them, then why not slot machines?"

City Solicitor Corkery: "Are they legal?"

Alderman Ellis: "I understand they are legal if you get back something each time for the money one puts into them. About half them one doesn't and they are not legal."

Mayor Denne maintained that the tax would be borne by the storekeeper. "Is there some way we can get at the man who owns the machines" he inquired. "I understand a Jew in Toronto owns most of them."

Mr. Corkery: "We can't tax an illegal thing." He explained that the things that are taxable by municipalities have been set forth strictly in regulations.

It was decided then to have Mr. Corkery investigate everything in connection with the machines and report back to the Council.

A DEADLY SURPRISE

BENEDICT, Neb., Aug. 31 (CP)—Arthur Clayton, Jr., eight, yelled to his brother John, five, that he had a surprise.

It was a surprise for both of them—a shotgun that they didn't know was loaded. When Arthur pulled the trigger, the charge killed John.

Reduction Allowed For Street Lights

HASTINGS, Aug. 31 (Examiner Correspondence).—The local Hydro Commission consisting of Walter M. Fowlds, chairman; Reeve G. B. Stevenson and W. J. Warner, were in Toronto on Wednesday and made application to the Hydro Electric Power Commission for authority to reduce the rates.

At the meeting it was decided to allow a substantial reduction in street lighting charges. The new street lighting rates, reduced from $30 per annum for 20-watt lights to $25; from $24 to $19 for 100-watt bulbs.

Street lighting three years ago at the commencement of Hydro cost $2,300 a year and now, in three years, this is reduced to $1,300. On account of the overcharge in street lighting the corporation is getting a cash refund of $1,178.75. This item will go a long way on the village overdraft, and will mean a saving to the taxpayers of Hastings. The new rates on street lights become effective from January 1, 1934.

The new domestic rate has been reduced from 5 cents per kilowatt hour for the first 45 k.w. hours to 4½ cents, and from 3 cents to 1½ for all over. The minimum bill will be $1.00, less 10 per cent for prompt payment will bring it down to $1.50. Three years ago the first Hydro bill, less discount, was $2.50 a month.

The new commercial rates are from 5c to 4½c per k.w. hour on the first 100 hours of connected load and from 3c to 1½c on the remainder. Minimum bill, $1.00 less 10 per cent. for prompt payment.

These rates will become effective on the next billing.

There was no change of the power rates.

The local Commission did everything in their power to get a bigger reduction in rates, as they feel there is no reason why the citizens of this municipality should not enjoy the benefits of cooking by electricity.

Hastings power bill with the Commission is about $12,000 a year, and the surplus on hand is over $7,000.

Hillsburg Fiddlers Win Old Time Event

TORONTO, August 31 (C.P.) — Two of the three Old Time Fiddlers' contests, one of the features of Music Day at the Canadian National Exhibition, were won by entrants from Hillsburg, Ont. Neil McCormick scored 83 marks in the class for 75 years and over to win first place and Charles Dyer took the event for 65 years and under 75 with 82 marks.

The remaining class with fiddlers between 50 and 65 years, ended in a tie between John Flanagan and M. P. Bowes, both of Toronto, who had 85 marks apiece.

The fact that the earliest known manuscript maps of Australia are the work of French cartographers would suggest that French navigators were the first to visit those coasts.

CROP RECORDS FOR BURNBRAE

George Ingram at Menie Holds Total Bushels Mark With 2,388.

(Examiner Correspondence.)

BURNBRAE, Aug. 31. — While the district of which Burnbrae forms the centre is not primarily a grain-growing area, the 1934 crop is setting some records for yields that will take some beating, even in the so-called grain districts. George Ingram at Menie, holds the total bushels record so far with 2,388 bushels of oats and barley threshed by Melville Petherick. Bert Hay, whose farm, is just a mile east of Burnbrae, obtained a total of 1906 bushels, including some wheat, barley and mixed barley and oats. Of this amount, 1000 bushels was threshed in one afternoon of five hours. Messrs. Fry & Co., were the threshers. The Charles Stewart crew stand third with 1727 bushels, on the farm of Alfred Barnum and Sons, near Pethericks Corners. Ernest Eagleson has already threshed 1800 bushels on his farm, near Menie, with a few loads yet to add to his total. John W. Rannie on the next farm is expected to top local yields, though L. J. Watson & Sons at Burnbrae corners may be also in the running as they have over 1300 bushels threshed with only about half of the acreage handled.

While some of these totals may not seem imposing to the operators of large grain farms, they are very satisfying in this dairying community, and the yield of grain and straw will in a large measure, solve the feed problem, made serious by the short hay and corn crops.

Not even a miracle could save some of the withered stands of corn in this district, while other fields might show some progress with rain and favorable weather following. Considerable corn is being fed now, to try to sustain the falling milk flow, as pastures are almost a thing of the past here.

MILL OFFICIALS ARE ASSAULTED IN MACON CLASH

WANT 30 HOUR WEEK.

Textile Trades of United States Demand Union Recognition.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31 (CP) — A walkout of cotton textile workers throughout United States is scheduled to begin tomorrow night.

Violence already has echoed the strike call. Employees of the Payne Mill, in Macon, Ga., struck yesterday and before midnight two officials of the plant had been clubbed and five persons arrested. Pickets, armed with clubs, marched outside the mill fence; company guards, carrying firearms, patrolled inside the gate.

An estimated 425,000 workers in the cotton textile trade will be affected by the general strike. Another 300,000 employees in affiliated fields such as silk, rayon and wool have orders to "stand by," Francis J. Gorman, strike committee chairman, predicts they will join the walkout.

About 300,000 mill hands are members of the United Textile Workers of America, which says that their average weekly wage is only $10.86. The manufacturers' organizations, the Cotton Textile Institute, disputes this, saying the industry has granted bigger wage increases under the NRA than any other line.

Invokes the NRA

The NRA is a centre of the fight. The union demands, under the Industrial Recovery Act, the right to represent labor in collective bargaining. The operators say they cannot see where it is representative.

The union asks: A 30-hour week with the 40-hour pay; an end to the "stretch-out" of the individual worker's duties; collective bargaining recognition, and cessation of discrimination against union members.

Charging it would repudiate the NRA as the code-making authority, the manufacturers refuse to arbitrate the strike demands. They say they cannot increase costs and remain in business.

From Maine to Alabama the 1,281 cotton mills extend,, with scattered plant in inland states. The Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Massachusetts and Rhode Island have from 20,000 to 92,000 workers each, the union figures show.

1,250,000 Affected

In the background, but vitally affected, are the families of the workers; the grocer who must carry their account to the breaking point; the landlord who wonders how he will meet his overhead. The U.T.W. places the cotton workers and their dependents at 1,250,000.

Many of them remember only too clearly the bloodshed of past strikes.

But the only word government negotiations had for them after yesterday's negotiations was that no "substantial progress' had been made toward a settlement.

The government did, however, appear ready to launch a neutral inquiry into the issues behind the strike as all hope of averting the giant walkout vanished.

Still striving for a quick peace, Chairman Lloyd Garrison of the National Industrial Relations Board —had in mind the appointment of a committee of three to explore the conflict impartially and perhaps recommend a solution.

Late Conferences

After flashing the order for the cotton struggle to begin at 11.30 p.m. tomorrow, union leaders conferred again late yesterday with Garrison. So—at a later hour—did George A. Sloan, head of the Cotton Textile Institute, who has declined to attend a "round table" with union leaders. Yesterday's conferences came to naught.

Sloan, who disclosed he intended to go back to New York, was asked whether he hoped the strike could be avoided:

"I suppose," he said, "that every citizen in America is hopeful the strike won't take place."

Prospect for direct intervention by President Roosevelt appeared to have faded, although it is known he is watching the conflict carefully.

His eyes bloodshot from lack of sleep, Gorman was told that some sections of the cotton mill area stretching from Maine to Alabama fear violence.

"There won't be any violence," he said sharply, "unless the employers start something with their hired thugs, masquerading as private detectives."

Weddings

CREWS—RATHBUN.

King Street United Church at Trenton was the setting for a summer wedding when Gertrude Evelyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob E. Rathbun, was married to Mr. Kenneth William Crews, son of Mrs. Crews and the late Mr. J. Wellington Crews, Trenton. Gladioli and ferns decorated the church, and Rev. A. E. Edmison performed the ceremony. Mr. Leslie Hearts played the wedding music, and during the signing of the register Mrs. Robert Waldron sang.

The bride wore a lovely gown of ivory satin with short train. Her finger tip veil of tulle fell from a coronet of braided satin, and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley. Miss Vera Sheffield, Belleville, maid of honor, was gowned in peach net over peach taffeta and wore a matching mohair hat, green shoes and gloves. The bridesmaid, Miss Lenore Breach, Trenton, was in green point d'esprite over green taffeta, and wore green shoes, gloves and hat. Both carried Talisman roses. Mr. Ross Sibbit, of Toronto, acted as best man, and the ushers were Mr. Jack Richmond and Mr. Grant Rathbun.

Mrs. Rathbun, the bride's mother, was becomingly gowned in black lace, black velvet hat and wore a corsage of red roses ,and Mrs. Crews, mother of the groom, was in mulberry velvet and wore orchids. They received the guests at the reception, which was held later at the home of the bride's parents. For travelling the bride wore a nigger brown fur-trimmed suit, brown felt hat and brown accessories. Mr. and Mrs. Crews will live in Trenton.

BOMBS KILL RAINMAKER WHILE BLASTING CLOUDS

WAXAHACHIE, Texas, Aug. 31 (A.P.).—James A. Boze, 41-year-old self-style rainmaker, who was critically burned when several bombs exploded yesterday as he tossed them over the side of a plane in an effort to bring rain to this drought-ravaged section, died in hospital here last night.

The electrician, who conceived the idea of blasting threatening clouds with bombs to induce rain, developed pneumonia from severe body burns.

THEATRE LOSES GREAT FIGURE

BROADWAY MOURNS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Broadway mourned to-day one of its leading figures—Charles B. Dillingham.

The noted theatrical producer died last night after being seriously ill since Sunday. He suffered a general breakdown several weeks ago. He was 66.

There were time when he had as many as a half dozen shows on Broadway at the same time.

Dillingham was the last of a triumvirate associated in the theatrical business for many years. The other two were A. L. Erlenger and Florenz Ziegfeld.

He was born in Hartford, Conn., on May 30, 1868, the son of a clergyman. At an early age he went to work for a Hartford newspaper and later worked in Washington, Chicago and New York before entering the theatrical business as an associate of the late Charles Frohman.

Among Dillingham's best-known shows are the Fred Stone revues, including "Chin Chin," "Cries Cross," "Stepping Stones"; Victor Herbert's "The Red Mill" and Mlle. Modiste," and "Lady of the Slipper," "The Candy Shop," "The Slim Princess," "Dolly Dollars," "A Madcap Princess," "Sunny," with Marilyn Miller; and the Frederick Lonsdale comedies, "The High Road,' "The Last of Mrs. Cheyney," and "Aren't we All?"

His last production was "New Faces," a last season revue which was made up of virtually unknown talent.

Behind the Scenes in Hollywood

By HARRISON CARROLL.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 1.—Guesses are being made as to why George Brent is in such a hurry to complete his 50 hours in the air, which qualifies him as a passenger pilot. Some say that Myrna Loy will be the first Hollywoodite to go aloft with Ruth Chatterson's ex. Others insist that Garbo was given the first refusal.

George Brent

The romantic-looking actor has had the gossips puzzled ever since his separation. He took a temporary flyer into night club life with various partners and then retired into the privacy of his bachelor quarters at Toluca Lake. Not so long ago he was reported as being interested in Jean Muir. Now the Garbo rumors are uppermost.

Like as not, the real interest is somewhere else entirely.

HOLLYWOOD'S

Champion stickler for realism is an old Scotchman who has been working with Helen Hayes in "What Every Woman Knows". The studio has taken pains to secure an accurate background for this picture. They duplicated the railroad station at Kilburnie even to the big clock.

Finding that the ancient Scot once was a resident of the district, they asked him if the set was perfect in every detail.

After comprehensive study he replied: "Well, yes, except you have the train coming in on time and, in all the 20 years I lived there, I never saw it happen."

IF AFFECTING

Farewells mean anything, the romance of Raoul Roulien and Conchita Montenegro is on the up-and-up. The South American star made a special trip to Malibus lake to say goodby to Conchita who was on location with the Fox troupe making "Hell in The Heavens". The actress was plenty upset when told that the company would work till 1 a.m., making it impossible for her to see Roulien off on the midnight plane. At 9 p.m., when the director relented, she burst into grateful tears.

Miss Montenegro

However serious their romance, the couple will be parted for the next three months. Roulien flies to Havana and Porto Rico for personal appearances and then sails for southern Europe.

KNICK-KNACKS—

Plenty of stares when Gloria Swanson, who used to ride in swank limousines, drove into the M. G. M. lot the other day in a small open roadster of popular make with Baby Bridget as the only other passenger.... The chap who accompanied Loretta Young to the preview of her picture was Phillip Ormsby, young Pasadena architect-actor, who designed the star's new Bel-Air home. And, incidentally, Loretta has ordered a swimming pool and a playroom to be added to her estate. ...As soon as he finishes "The Painted Veil", Director Richard Boleslavsky goes into two months of seclusion to complete his third book, "Escape of a Lancer".... Patricia Farley is back in town and she DIDN'T get married back east.... Louis B. Mayer will be entertained by Maurice Chevalier when the actor returns shortly to his estate at Cannes.

SMART DESIGNERS ENDORSE KNITTED CLOTHES

By LISBETH

Hand knitted and crocheted garments are carrying on into the fall, endorsed by many of the most famous Paris dressmakers.

These three photographs from Paris show the latest styles in this popular type of thing. At the left, a fall street dress of mercerised crochet cotton, severely plain in line, but achieving individuality in the pointed, double revere collar, large patch pockets and square covered buttons.

The little sailor hat and the gloves also are hand made.

The blouse, center, is from the collection of Tilly Trois, Parisian creator of hand-made chic. It is washable and is intended to supplement the smart woman's inevitable tweed tailleur. Notice the ribbing which forms the design, and the clever way in which the sleeves are set in. Little round covered buttons and a tie collar are characteristic touches.

In her collection of fall fashions, Anny Blatt showed the two-piece outfit, right. It consists of a sleeveless dress in ecru, with pullover in ecru, blue and Spanish red. The stitch and design are very plain, although the pattern is quite complicated with its gay stripes. The jacket has set-in sleeves and a little stand-up collar. It buttons up the front, and is ideal for autumn days worn under a thin tweed coat.

Character From Handwriting

By BLANCHE A. DRAPER

A Feature Conducted by Peterborough's Leading Handwriting Analyst for the Readers of The Examiner

Full name and address (complete) must be given in all samples sent in.

Miss Jane Magee, Box 113, Omemee, Ont.

Your handwriting indicates that you are a person of keen discernment. You are quite ingenious and progressive, but you are not one of the type to undertake a project unless you can see clearly the ultimate outcome. You are shy and reserved, yet you make really good friends. You have a natural ability of drawing people to you. They seem to want to know what it is that attracts them, but as you are deeply interesting, and do not lack for intelligent conversation, you may be sure that some of the attraction lies along that line. You dress with expert care, and always endeavour to have the colors harmonize with your moods, and you appear to have many of these moods. You see you are versatile, not like many other people who simply must live from day to day in the same rut. You get out of it, and search new fields of enterprise. You are energetic and do your work well no matter what line you happen to be engaged in at the moment. Your well expressed capital letter 'J' reveals an interest in out-of-door sports and this should be encouraged for the sake of your health. Your 't' bar, with its cross nearly over the top indicates that you do not exert your will power as much as you might for your own betterment.

Georgina Keefer, 378 Water St., City.

Your handwriting for analysis shows that you are determined to do the work on hand to the very best of your ability, but it reveals the fact that at present it is all uphill work. You are generous, but you do not know where to draw the line. There is so much real difference between giving and rewarding honest efforts that it would be of much interest to you to think about this before you let yourself be imposed upon to your own detriment. The crossing of your 't' bar shows genuine talent and ambition, and I feel sure that you can be successful if you make up your mind to be. You have a fair share of will-power and determination which should assist you greatly in the attainment of your objective in life. There is one characteristic which is worthy of note, and that is: That the tendency to let people domineer you will persist in spite of your efforts to gain control of your mental forces in order to assert yourself. Have you ever thought of writing as a profitable means of passing your time? If not, learn all you can about the subject, for your writing shows great possibilities and excellent imagination. You appear to choose your own style in dress, and do not relish being told what to wear upon certain occasions. Do you?

* * *

Miss Alberta Williams, Hastings, Ont.

Your handwriting describes you as a person who is rather apt to think too quickly, and to rush into things and wish afterwards that you had not been so hasty. The tall, upper loops attendant to your smaller letters delineate a keen imagination which perhaps allows you to soar up above the clouds of realism and to dream dreams of a romantic nature. There is a nervous tendency noted in the forward leaning angular letters, which, as a rule, depicts unfortunate circumstances of health. Your capital letters bespeak generosity and I think you are one of those kindhearted persons who cannot refuse to do little deeds of merit for others, often to your own disadvantage, because of the strain it requires both mentally and physically when you need all the energy at your command in order to keep yourself in good health. You are genuine in your estimation of your friends and retain them at any cost. You are not over-anxious to acquire new acquaintances, but really do appreciate thoughtful kindness and repay it many, many times. If you have an appointment to keep, you always endeavour to be on time. You are adaptable and pleasing at all times.

Your handwriting shows that your mind works quickly. You are perhaps a little too fussy without being at all accurate. It would be much better for you if you were to do your clear thinking first, then take your time and act slowly and with deliberation. You are humorous when you want to be, but you do not always feel in the mood; therefore, you show two decided sides to your nature. You are keen and alert and have a certain amount of executive ability which could be developed in such a manner that it would bring you monetary recompense. However, there is decided need for the development of your will-power if you wish to be successful in any line. You are a sensitive person and seem to be easily hurt through your feelings. I expect this characteristic has much to do with your disposition and your reticence in expressing your emotions and thoughts. That also would account for your tendency to rush ahead with your plans and ideas before you [illegible] yourself time to consider them properly. You see, you are afraid that if you were to stop to consider, you would lose your nerve. There is so much good in you that I feel sure it will assert itself in due time and bring you happiness and contentment.

You asked for "all" about yourself and so I hope the above will fill the bill without hurting your feelings. Your lucky number is 3; your sign Aries the Ram; June and July your best months. Tuesday is your lucky day. You are ruled by Mars.

Be Beautiful

Back in the days when Robinhood and his Merry Men roamed through Sherwood Forest there were no such things as marketed beauty preparations. In those days the troubadours used to go from castle to castle selling recipes for beautifying creams and lotions to the fair ladies of the land. For the beauties of that era had to make their own beauty preparations.

Nowadays, of course, there is no need for any woman to turn chemist. For the market is simply flooded with an endless variety of excellent preparations designed to preserve feminine loveliness. There are creams, lotions, powders, mascaras, nail polishes and like cosmetics in an endless variety for the modern lass to utilise.

There are, however, a number of women who get a great kick out of making their own beauty preparations. They like to dabble with different substances and different formulas. I myself, however, am not very much in favor of the making of creams and like preparations by the amateur at home. In the first place, manufacturers today engage skilled scientists and skin specialists to devise effective formulas. And in the second place, they also have specialized machines to purify and perfect their products until they far surpass the preparations that could be made by an amateur.

There are, however, some products that can be made easily by the amateur at home. One of the foremost of these is nail polish remover. In this day and age of frequent changes in nail polish shades most women use large amounts of polish remover. And they eventually find it quite an expense to keep a supply on hand.

If you use nail polish remover frequently, and prefer to make your own, you can do so very simply. Procure a small bottle of acetone from your local chemist and add it to a very small amount of castor oil. Then shake the mixture well. This makes a remover that is most effective. The acetone removes the polish. And the castor oil counteracts any drying effects and helps to keep the nails and cuticle healthy.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES!

Hair

Dolly: The hot oil treatments for thickening and reconditioning the hair, and the salt water treatments for falling hair, are described in my "Beauty Culture" booklet. This booklet also gives an excellent dandruff remedy.

Henna

Julie: The pure, Egyptian henna, made of the leaves of the henna shrub, is not harmful to the hair. The chemical henna, however, contains metallic salts and may prove injurious to the hair health.

Vinegar Rinse

Joan: The vinegar rinse is indeed excellent for bringing out the highlights in brown hair. It tends to soften the hair and invigorates and enlivens it.

Powder Base

Fannie: If your skin is dry apply your make-up after you have cold-creamed your face. If your skin is oily, use a mild astringent before powdering. This forms an excellent powder base for an oily skin.

Colors

B. B. L.: I think that you will find shades of tan, brown, russet, pinkish beige, capucine, cool greens, mat white and black most becoming to you.

Editor's Note: To obtain Miss Glad's pamphlets on "The New Figure" and "Beauty Culture" write, care of this paper, enclosing a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, and ten cents in coin for each, to cover cost of printing and handling.

KILLED IN CRASH.

PEMBROKE, Ont., Aug. 31 (CP).—Crushed between the door and top of his light coupe when it crashed into the ditch on the upper Desjardins-Chapleau Road yesterday, Edison Bell, 20, of Allumette Island, was instantly killed, Harold Kennedy, 20, also of Allumette Island, who was driving when the accident happened, escaped unhurt. Dr. L. Renaud, Campbell's Bay, coroner for Pontiac County, was called, and after viewing the remains, decided an inquest was not necessary, death being purely accidental.

Your Health

by DR LOGAN CLENDENING

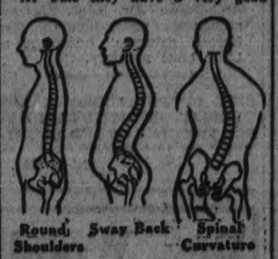
In most colleges and many high schools this fall as the students enroll they will be referred to the hospital or gymnasium for a physical examination.

A number of important things will be investigated, but perhaps most time will be spent on postural and other orthopedic defects. Certainly most of the time devoted to correcting or treating physical defects will be spent on these.

It is an astonishing statement which I heard the other day from one of the physical directors at Yale, that in four years they had found only about thirty freshmen who were considered passable in posture and balance. Only thirty who did not need treatment.

The large majority had some minor postural defect, such as round shoulders or sway back or slight curvature of the spine. A good proportion had very serious defects of bony and muscle structure.

At Yale they have a very good



Round Shoulders — Sway Back — Spinal Curvature

method of correcting these faults. It is called the Mensendieck system to functional exercises.

The student is taught by a chart what muscle masses should be developed to correct his fault. Is taught exactly what motions to make in order to develop them. Then, in fron of a large mirror with another movable mirror behind him, he goes through the exercises day after day. The results of a year's work are quite astonishing.

The main features of the exercises are that they are done slowly so as to cause maximum contraction of the muscles and they are not done rhythmically to the count of a voice or gong or anything of that sort.

Breathing is emphasized, the muscle movement being made only on the exhalation. No dumbells, pulleys or weights are used.

Athletic directors frequently say that athletics (without corrective exercise) will correct these faults, but such is not the case. In fact, they usually make them worse because any single athletic sport is likely to create a one-sided development.

While I do not believe that these postural faults are as detrimental to health as some of the more enthusiastic physical directors or orthopedic surgeons say they are, yet they are sufficiently important to need attention. It is a pity that we should have to wait until college years to begin adjustment. In high school the body is so much more supple and adaptable that here the corrections could be made to so much better advantage.

Editorös Note: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Fashion Service

You can carry it out in navy and watermelon (an off red) lightweight woolen mixture, as the original. And for the cunning blouse, use plain navy wool crepe, it's really fetching, and so practical. The skirt and blouse are separate, so if you please, an extra blouse could be made, affording a smart change of costume. The miniature sketch shows it fashioned of cotton broadcloth with satiny finish white ground with navy dots.

Another pleasing way to carry out this model is in brown and white checked woolen with plain brown woolen blouse.

Style No. 2231 is designed for sizes 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 2¾ yards of 39-inch material for the jacket and skirt and 1⅛ yards of 35-inch for the blouse.

"THE CITY IN THE VALLEY"

There's a City in the Valley,
And if you care to climb the hill,
There's a glad sight will reward you
It will give your heart a thrill.
There's a little shrine up yonder,
To which frequently I roam,
To view the City in the Valley,
That's the place we call our home.
There's a quickly flowing river,
And a mill beside the stream;
The sturdy maple shades the streets,
With foliage fresh and green.
There are hearts so sad and weary,
There are spirits bright and gay,
In that city in the valley,
Of the Old Otonabee.

There's a lassie in that city,
And if you should enquire,
I have heard her on the Sabbath,
Sing in the Old Church Choir;
She's everybody's lassie, 'cause
She helps sweet Charity
In that City in the Valley
Of the Old Otonabee.

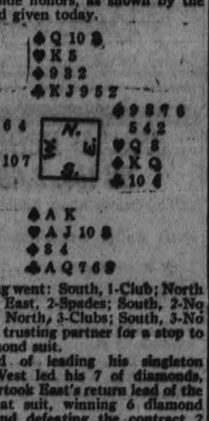
CONTRACT BRIDGE

WRITTEN FOR CENTRAL PRESS

By E. V. SHEPARD

GUESSING WHAT PARTNER HOLDS.

Sometimes when partner has opened the auction or made a forcing overcall, your own hand shows what partner should hold. When partner has done nothing more than support your opening call, particularly if he has returned you to your original suit call, it is very dangerous to assume that he holds any specific side honors, as shown by the first hand given today.



Bidding went: South, 1-Club; North 2-Clubs; East, 2-Spades; South, 2-No Trumps; North, 3-Clubs; South, 3-No Trumps, trusting partner for a stop to the diamond suit.

Instead of leading his singleton spade, West led his 7 of diamonds, then overtook East's return lead of the K of that suit, winning 6 diamond tricks, and defeating the contract 2 tricks.

There is a certain game at clubs. In case West leads his lone spade there is a small slam at clubs. Quite a difference in score, even if South was not vulnerable.

Note the next hand, on the bidding of which East had a perfect right to assume specific cards in his partner's hand.

Bidding went: West, 1-Diamond; North, 1-Heart; East, 2-Clubs; South, 2-Spades; West, 3-Clubs; East, 3-No Trumps; West, 4-Diamonds, showing considerable length in the suit, which was one thing his partner wanted to know; East, 4-No Trumps; West, 5-Clubs, again showing both length and strength; East, now satisfied that his partner held the two minor Aces plus the K of one of the major suits, 7-No Trumps.

East had calculated upon at least 10 tricks in the two minor suits, with 1 trick in one major suit and 2 tricks in the other major suit. Of course the hand was spread for a grand slam, with a trick to spare.

QUAKER OATS SALES UP

Business of the Quaker Oats Company, measured in unit sales, has shown a slight gain so far this year, compared with the corresponding period of 1933, according to G. A. Macdonald, vice-president. Employment forces at the company's plants have been well maintained and the number of workers on the payroll is practically unchanged from a year ago, he said.—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

MARINA'S OUTFIT TO BE LIMITED

Princess' Father Has Had No Income Since Brother, King Constantine, Lost Throne.

REAL LOVE MATCH.

BOHINSKO LAKE, Yugoslavia, Aug. 31 (A.P.) — Gracious Princess Marina of Greece must limit the trousseau for her wedding toPrince George to modest proportions, informed circles said to-day

Marina's parents are almost as poor as a proverbial church mouse. This was cited as further evidence that the match is a "love" one.

Prince Nikolas, Princess Marina's father, has been without an income since his brother, the late King Constantine, lost the Grank throne 12 years ago.

The Princess' mother has given Marina her old pre-war wedding gown to wear when she goes to the altar with Prince George in Westminster Abbey this winter. This nuptial garment, although considerNicholas in the brilliant court at Petrograd, will require considerable alteration to make it fit Princess Marina, who is taller and more slender than her mother.

Like Princess Marina's father, her mother, who was the Grand Duchess Helen Vladimirovna of Russia, has no regular income of her own. Friends believe the family has been helped considerably in the past by Prince Christopher of Greece, Princess Marina's uncle, who inherited some of the Leeds tin plate millions and who is now living in Rome. He is the widower of the late Mrs. William B. Leeds.

Soon after leaving here early in September Princess Marina, accompanied by her mother, will go to Paris to purchase a few inexpensive dresses for her honeymoon.

But any elaborate wedding outfit, it was feared, will have to depend upon help from more affluent relatives.

WIDOWS ARE MARK FOR ALCOHOLISM

Bachelors and Divorcees Also More Susceptible Than Married Men.

LONDON, August 31 (C.P.) — Widows, divorced people and bachelors are more susceptible than married men to the impervious effects of alcohol, said Dr. Baudel of Nuremberg, in his paper on "Alcoholism and Mortality" at the International Conference on Alcoholism.

Figures of mortality arranged according to age and sex provided the most important material for ascertaining the influence of alcoholism on mortality, he said. In Denmark an important fall in the male death-rate coincided with the decrease in the consumption of alcohol during the war. The same phenomenon—fall in male mortality along with decrease of alcoholic consumption—had been observed in Germany, Belgium, Sweden, Hungary, the United States and other countries.

Specific male mortality rose in all the countries where it had fallen during the war as soon as the former alcoholic consumption manifested itself again, said Dr. Baudel. The movement of mortality due to alcoholism could be followed most accurately by comparing the male death-rate with that of females. England, however, occupied a situation apart. During and after the war her alcohol consumption was diminished, yet the specific male mortality did not fall. The comparatively large proportion of female alcoholism was a peculiarity of England.

Just Between Us Women

A daily chat with Examiner neighbors conducted by Anne Wilcox

The occupations and activities of a homemaker are widely diversified. While there are certain things which have to be done each day, which have a regularity that would be monotonous unless relieved, the variety of them tends to rid the work of this undesirable element. There are no two days alike in any home or household. There is a saying that Nature abhors a vacuum, and it should appear that she felt the same way about duplication.

* * * * * *

In all the years of a long life there are never two which are identical. However monotonous the tasks in repetition make them seem, there is endless variety. Institutional life comes the nearest to having identical days. Man would divest them with monotonous rounds of work. Even the recreation has its repetitions. The time of a sailor on a long voyage without putting in at many ports, is apportioned with mathematical precision. The work in factories frequently is a round of mechanical labor, such as tending a machine. Nevertheless, the days in the entirety are never absolutely the same. There is the human equation to be reckoned with.

* * * * * *

It is in the home, however, that great opportunity presents itself for change, and despite certain repetitions of tasks diversity is constant. For example, the hours of meals may have to be exact, but the food is never precisely the same either in kind, quality or quantity, or in the way it is prepared, or the perfection of its preparation or cooking. Between meals duties may fit and dovetail together excellently, but in some particulars identical repetition is interferred with—sometimes annoyingly, sometimes delightfully.

* * * * * *

It is one of the pleasures of homemaking that there is such diversity, and that the homemaker can instil it into her life and that of those dependent upon her. This does not mean that routine should be abolished. It is too important, but it does signify that the humdrum life of monotony is no actual necessity within a home. The homemaker who sees her existence as one monotonous series of days, alike in hours and tasks, is either half-sick or wishful to complain. The possibilities of great changes may not exist, but the multiplicity of opportunities for deviations from repetition in small matters certainly does exist.

* * * * * *

When once the homemaker considers bringing diversity into her work through different planning, that moment she will begin to note how it can be done without interfering with the comfort of the family. It is important to plan for time for recreation as well as work, for without recreation she becomes like Jack who was warned that—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

Gelatin Hint

In preparing pineapple gelatin be sure that the pineapple is first cooked; otherwise the raw acid will prevent solidification of the gelatin.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS TOURING OPERA STARS FORCING KING JAZZ FROM MUSICAL THRONE

Symphony concerts and opera music are making things difficult for King Jazz. Reginald Stewart (UPPER LEFT) is playing to packed houses in Toronto at his summer "prom" concerts, while the San Carlo Opera company is making a tour of more than a dozen Canadian cities. The latter group has been touring the continent for the past 25 years and are now the only group of its kind in the world. Their success is due in no small part to the genius of Fortune Gallo (UPPER RIGHT. A scene from the opera Salome is shown centre, while members of cast of this peculiar opera company, which spends most of the year travelling, are shown BELOW. Left to right, Carlo Peroni, director, Blaca Saroya, soprano, and Dimitri Onofrei, tenor.

BY MARCUS ADAMS
Central Press Canadian Writer

TORONTO, Aug. 31. — Another king has been forced to abdicate; King Jazz and his trained troupe of trumpeting troubadors is fleeing in confusion before the onslaughts on the Goddess of Music.

Witness Reginald Stewart and his 'prom' concerts in Toronto. Despite the fact that Toronto had never before experienced such a sensation as symphonic music on a stifling hot night played before an audience dressed in shirt sleeves and smoking, it has nevertheless filled to capacity a great arena previously held sacred to hockey fans.

King Jazz calls in the cabinet; they invite the greatest jazz bands in America to come to Toronto. The night before they arrive, the greatest crowd that ever attended a symphony concert, listened, listened enraptured to the music of Reginald Stewart's make-shift orchestra.

And now, to make the rout of King Jazz complete, comes the San Carlo opera company, that intrepid band of singers and musicians who have stuck together for the past twenty-five years, touring the continent, presenting, not to the "high-hat" music lover, who attends a concert because it is the thing to do, but thrilling the great mass of real music lovers to whom opera had been more or less a legend.

Just as Reginald Stewart started "on a dare," so Fortune Gallo irrepressible Italian, started the San Carlo opera company 25 years ago

Make Tour of Canada

It has been going ever since, the only company of its kind that exists without the support of endowment or outside financial assistance of any kind. "It has presented opera in nearly every city in the United States. This year it will make a complete tour of Canada—from Montreal an Vancouver, including more than a dozen Canadian cities.

It is not their first venture in Canada. Years ago they ventured into the prairies and people gathered for hundredsof miles around to listen to the most thrilling music man has ever created—opera.

Today, twenty-five years after the San Carlo opera company is a highly organized affair that tours the continent continuously for 44 weeks of the year. (The far-famed Metropolitan in New York is open only 14 weeks.) This year it makes its debut in Toronto, and Canada will hear its repertoire first.

If ever a man lived up to his name, it is Fortune Gallo. He came from Italy many years ago, lost all his money to card sharps aboard ship, and started in New York with less than nothing. Today he is a man of comparative wealth.

Possessing a genius for organization, a personality that could not be daunted, he became influential in the Italian colony of New York, went back to his first love, music, then rescued a stranded opera company from starvation, and set them up in San Francisco. The San Carlo was born.

Obviously, the company cannot present opera as it is presented in Covent Garden or the "Met". But it has the reputation of sending many singers to the Metropolitan, and does not begrudge that body its success.

Most of the singers are foreign born. Indeed it is said that every nation in Europe is represented. It gave to the world Queena Mario. Montreal's contribution to the world of opera.

INSIDE THE PADDOCK

BY ART MURRAY

THE NEW TRACK at Providence, Rhode Island is sure making history in their first meeting. They lead the whole of North America in points of attendance and wagering and as this was their first attempt it looks as if this will be the leading track on the American continent for many years to come. It proves the old saying that one has to spend money to make money. They offered large purses, in fact no purse during their entire meeting was less than one thousand dollars. As a result they had an over abundance of the best horses in training, and when the best horses perform it certainly attracts business both at the gate and the mutuel machines.

× × ×

To give one instance of their desire to please, we will go back to a few days before the meeting opened and they were rushing the track to completion. They had a press box erected at a cost of ten thousand dollars, and invited a few turf writers out to inspect it. They found fault with it, pointing out it was in a bad location, so without any argument the general manager ordered it torn down and erected under the supervision of the turf writers. This cost them an extra ten or eleven thousand from men but as the manager pointed out the press boys were the ones that would be using it and they were the ones to be satisfied. They will hold another meeting later in the Fall and believe you us Maryland won't be the mecca of Fall racing this year as it always was in the past.

× × ×

SARATOGA IS just about through with their August meeting which has been very successful but not to compare with the Rhode Island track. The McLaughlin stable from Oshawa were able to grab four purses at Saratoga which should just about pay their expenses. Harry Giddings has shipped Horometer, the King's Plate winner back to the farm at Oshawa he having developed a cracked hoof, something similar to the injury which has kept the famous Equipoise on the shelf practically all summer. He should be just as good as ever when our racing season opens up again next May.

× × ×

We hear that Allanah is working like an express train over Thorncliffe track these days. It will pay to keep her in mind when they open up one week from Saturday. Tabson is another that is burning up the oval these mornings and if you will check back the records you will find that for the last two years this one has always won a race at the Leaside Plant in the Fall and paid off in box car figures. This year will be no exception.

NEWARK TAKES TWIN TRIUMPH FROM SENATORS

Bears Tighten Grip on First Place in International With Decisive Wins.

STARS COP OPENER.

Rochester Red Wings Down Bisons 9-6 for Third Straight Victory.

(By The Associated Press)

Despite the loss of four of five games with Newark, Albany Senators appeared to-day to have virtually sewed up the fourth and last qualifying berth for the International League playoffs.

While the Senators were dropping both ends of a double-header with Newark, their chief rival, Buffalo, was bowing to Rochester Red Wings for the third consecutive time and the net result was to leave Buffalo 2½ games away from fourth place. Albany has only ten more games to play, all with the two tail-end clubs, Baltimore and Syracuse, while Buffalo's 12 remaining engagements take the Bisons against Montreal in four games at Montreal; against Toronto in four games at Toronto, and against Rochester in four games at home.

Takes Double From Albany

In stretching their lead over Rochester to 3½ games, Newark tossed Albany by 11-0 and 7-5 scores. Walter Brown pitched his second successive shutout in the opener and hung up his fifth victory. Home runs by Eddie Farrel, Roy Schalk, Dale Alexander and Vince Barton, the latter's 21st of the season, helped roll up the score as Brown limited the Senators to two singles. Poor support led to Dick Barrett's defeat in the seven-inning nightcap as he hooked up in a pitching duel with Frank Makosfy. Barrett gave up six hits against Makosky's five, but three Albany errors hurt. Joe Mowry's home run with one on in the last frame helped make the final score close.

Home runs by Ival Goodman and Johnny Mise featuring a 10-hit attack gave Rochester its victory over Buffalo by a 9-6 count. Jim Winford and Ray Harrell gave Buffalo only six hits but gave 10 passes.

Syracuse earned two decisions over Baltimore Orioles. The Chiefs won the first game, 9-3, with Tim McKeithan pitching effectively and captured the second, 9-8, after spotting the Orioles seven runs in the first two innings.

Michael Maleshevich, Michigan end, has changed his name to Mike Savage—Wolverines' 1934 opponents, who may regard the Big Ten title contenders somewhat lightly this season, please take note.

To Aid Ottawa

Ottawa is passing up no opportunity in their plans to win the Dominion football title this year. With an American coach, five United States line and backfield stars, they have now added another coach from south of the border in Lon Jourdet, line coach for the University of Pennsylvania who will assist Wally Masters during the last two weeks of September, just as the season opens.

C.G.E. GIRLS TIE LAKESHORE OUTFIT

Stubborn Electrics Stage Rallies to Overcome Visitors' Early Lead.

C.G.E. girls battled to a 13-all draw with the classy Cobourg team last night at the Ashburnham Bowl in an exhibition tilt that drew a large crowd, who saw the visitors take a commanding lead in the first three frames, only to have the Electrics come through with two nice rallies to tie it up and the game was called in the seventh owing to darkness.

R. Hoskins and W. Hoskins teamed up as the Cobourg battery with the latter and doing the hurling, and she pitched a smart game, fanning five and walking one. The opposition bunched seven bingles in the third and fourth for eight runs but aside from this frame the visiting hurler had the game under fair control. T. Morgan started in the seventh but the innings was not completed. Marg Snowden tossed them across for the locals, fanning four and walking two. Austen at short led the Cobourg batters with two triples. T. Morgan had a homer, while Young connected twice. Hodson poled out a homer and triple for C.G.E., Dot Millar had two triples, with M. Snowden and Gates adding one each. Dot Byers hit a homer also.

The teams:

Cobourg—Ovens, lf; Smith, 2b; Austin, ss; R. Hoskins, c; T. Morgan, 3b, p; W. Hoskins, p, 3b; D. Morgan, cf; Young, rf; Stinson, 1b.

LEFTY GOMEZ SCORES NINTH STRAIGHT WIN

Yanks Belt Out 8-2 Triumph Over Washington to Give Southpaw 23 Victories.

ONE UP ON DEAN.

Tigers Maintain Margin by Taking 6-1 Decision From Cleveland Indians.

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sports Writer

So long as they have the not-so-goofy Vernon Gomes on the job it seems certain the Yankees won't let themselves be counted out of the American League pennant race until the last possible moment.

On the records of games won and lost, Gomes is rated as the leading pitcher of both major leagues with 23 triumphs against three losses. His latest achievement was to record victory No. 23 yesterday with a five-hit pitching performance that carried the Yanks through to an 8-2 victory.

9th Win In Rain

In addition to its being his 23rd victory it was the ninth in a row in a streak which included one, two, three and four-hit hurling feats and a shutout triumph over Detroit's league leaders. The only way in which Gomez failed yesterday was that he couldn't make his club gain on the Tigers, who came from behind in their usual manner to pound out a 6-1 decision over Cleveland in the only other major league contest.

Behind Gomez the Yanks pounded out 12 hits off Monte Weaver and an easy victory as they got off to a flying start when they scored three times in the first inning on hits by Frank Crossetti and Lou Gehrig, coupled with two walks and two passed balls by Luke Sewell. The Senator catcher partly atoned for those mistakes when he clouted a homer in the third but the Yanks came right back to drive Weaver out of the box with another trio of runs.

Tigers Comeback

Detroit had a stiffer struggle for six innings as Monte Pearson gave only four hits and Earl Averill smacked his 22nd homer to put Cleveland ahead in the fourth. But from that point on the Tigers began to make it look easy. They bunched three timely blows with a sacrifice, an intentional pass and an infield out to take the lead at 2-1 in the seventh and added four more tallies, driving Pearson to cover, in the eighth. Bill Rogell was the leader, opening the first rally with a single and smashing a homer with one aboard in the second outburst.

Open Date In National

The other four American League clubs and the entire National League had an open date following the end of the east-west series. For thet senior circuit it prepared the way for to-day's opening of an important three-game series between the second-place Cubs and third-place Cardinals who are separated by only one game in their chase after New York Giants.

Hastings Quartet Cops First Honors

MADOC, Aug. 31 (Examiner Correspondence).—On Wednesday, the lawn bowling greens of the Madoc Club presented a lively scene when 16 teams lined up for a tournament of men's Scotch double. Hastings was represented by two teams, Tweed, two; Campbellford, one; Stirling, one; Havelock, two, and Madoc, eight.

A sharp downfall of rain accompanied by hail, stopped the play for a short time during the afternoon and necessitated late play in the evening by several of the teams.

The first prizes of blankets was won by Dr. Campbell's team of Hastings, with Matheson' team of Havelock winning second place.

The third place was tied for by Hellar's team and Watson's team, both of Madoc, the tie being played off after midnight, and won by Kellar and Pullman.

The fourth prize was awarded Scrutton's team, Madoc, and the hard luck prize went to L. Ashley's team, Madoc.

Refreshments were served by the ladies, and the hot tea and sandwiches were much enjoyed and did much to make the evening's sport enjoyable.

Last Year's Runners-Up Start Training

Sarnia's Imperials of football fame came close to winning a Dominion championship last year. This year the plan is to actually win it. So enthusiastic are they that they have already started training, and here is seen Coach Art Massucci (LEFT) talking things over with Alex. Hayes, last year's captain and star backfielder (CENTRE), and S. B. Scott, business manager. Maybe they're talking about the gate they'll get at the Dominion final to be played this year in the west.

Dinty's Inn Takes Millbrook Game

MILLBROOK, Aug. 31—Millbrook took another victory from Dinty's Inn, in the inter-county game of box lacrosse played at the Cosmos rink on Wednesday at 8.15 p.m., the visitors taking the small end of the count, 9-6.

The score was tied twice, at the end of both the first and second periods, and the players were on their toes all through the game. Scoring for Peterborough were Gardiner, who got past the Millbrook goalie twice in the first period and again in the fourth; Olaveson, who likewise had two to his credit; Creighton of the local squad through a freak shot put the ball into the home net almost at the game's opening and this was counted for the visitors.

For Millbrook honors went to Gray, Ingram, Edmunds, Donnelly, Nattress, and Creighton. B. B. Dawson was referee. Next game in the schedule at Millbrook on Friday, August 31, between Port Hope and Dinty's Inn. The line up on Wednesday was:

Dinty's Inn: Goal, Dundas; defence, Reynolds, Weir; centre, McGregor; wings, Olaveson, McGee; rover, Gardiner; subs, Creighton, Collins.

Millbrook: Goal, Larmer; defence, Creighton, Lebarr; centre, Nattress and Scott; wings, Gray, Ingram; rover, Freelove; subs, Raper, Brown, Donnelly, Edmunds.

CARDINAL HURLER WOULD HAVE TO WIN ALMOST EVERY FIXTURE LEFT IN SCHEDULE TO DO TRICK

Will be Only Pitcher in Last Decade to Cop Honors Without Championship Support.

BIG ALEX TOPPED 30.

Bagby, Grove, Mathewson and Johnson Other Moundsmen to Reach Circle.

If Dizzy Dean does not run into any more self-created interruptions in his tour of duty on the St. Louis Cardinal mound the leading pitcher of the National League may achieve his ambition of 30 victories in a season before the current campaign closes.

Kindly note the "may." Thirty wins for Dizzy is a possibility, not a probability. But one month more of the race remains and Dean will need to win almost every time out to turn the trick.

If Dean does do it he will have achieved a very special honor. Other pitchers have done it, but no moundsman has performed the deed in the last decade and a half without a supporting cast of strictly championship nine.

Grover Cleveland Alexander turned the trick for the Phils in 1917, winning 30 for the Quakers, though the New York Giants were league champs that year. Incidentally, Alexander was the last National Leaguer to become a 30-gamer.

Jim Bagby, in 1920 won 31 for the Clevelands and Lefty Grove equalled that number in 1931 for the Philadelphia Athletics — but both pitchers had pennant winning teams in support.

A generation ago pitchers who could win 30 or more games in not one but two or three consecutive seasons were almost common. Christy Mathewson passed the 30 mark in the seasons of 1903, 1904 and 1905. Walter Johnson topped 30 in 1912 and 1913 and fell just two games short in 1914. Alexander won 30 games or more in each of the seasons of 1915, 1916 and 1917.

FERGUS PROTESTS MIMICO VICTORY

Mounntaineers Win, But Thistles Object on Account of Darkness.

TORONTO, Aug. 31. — Mimico qualified to play Hamilton Tigers for the championship of the O.A.-L.A. Senior Group No. 1, unless Fergus wins the protest over the deciding game played last night at the suburban town. Mimico won on its merits last night, in a close-checking combat by a 6 to 4 score, but the Fergus Thistles lodged an official objection as the game was completed in semi-darkness. The Thistles submitted their paid protest to the O.A.L.A. Secretary, Gene Dopp, immediately after the game, and a special session of the Ontario lacrosse governors will be held to-night to settle the squabble. If the O.A.L.A. orders that the game must be replayed it will most likely be held in the same Mimico box, Saturday afternoon.

Saturday's Double To Affect Playoffs

Oshawa Dukes make their final appearance of the year here tomorrow when they play the Petes two games in Riverside Park. First one starts at 2.15, with a ten-minute interval between the first fixture and the second, the latter being a seven-inning contest. These games will affect the C.O.B.I. standing and in turn affect the place where the third playoff game will be staged. If the Petes finish on top, they get the first and third playoff games here. If not, Belleville gets the second and third on their diamond. Both tilts promise to be worth seeing with Calladine and Deyell likely to pitch for the Petes, and Knox, Ogden, Wills and Mathews all available for Oshawa.

The C.O.B.I. playoffs commence here Monday, Labor Day, at three in Riverside with Belleville tangling with the Petes. Chief Williams is almost sure to start the first playoff game, as the Nats will be trying hard to get the jump in their series. Russ Kitchen is expected to do the locals' flinging, with Abbie Rose in reserve. The biggest crowd of the season is expected for this playoff tilt on the holiday. Second playoff game is in Oshawa Wednesday evening.

Belleville Drys Win From Victorias 9-6

KINGSTON, Aug. 31 (CP)—Another Kingston team was eliminated here last night, when Victorias, champions of the Kingston Amateur Softball Association, lost their second straight game to Canada Dry team of Belleville in the O.A.S.A. Intermediate playdowns, by 9 to 6.

Costly errors, coupled with the timely hitting of the Belleville players, spelled defeat for Victorias. Gallery started on the mound and was relieved in the eighth by Goswell, who was hit hard in the remainder of the inning. A home run by G. Ethier, with two on base, and a circuit drive by McKee, were the batting features of the game.

Canada Dry had a two-run lead at the start, but from the third inning Victorias were three up until they blew in the sixth, seventh and eighth.

Gehrig One Point Back of P. Waner

While Lou Gehrig lifted his batting average three points yesterday and stopped just one short of tying Paul Waner for the Big Six lead, his American League rivals skidded into a three-way tie for fourth place in the sextet as the two who played both lost ground. Gehrig hit three times in four attempts. Heinie Manush lost two points, with no hits in four times up, and Charley Gehringer dropped two with one blow in five tries. This pair slipped into a tie with the idle Al Simmons for the third American League berth. All three National League entries were idle.

SPORTS DAY BY DAY

Baseball, Lacrosse, Soccer, Softball, Bowling, etc.

By C.J.P.

Once again, we'll remind ball fans of the senior double-header tomorrow in Riverside. Starts at 2.15, ten minutes between games, and second tilt goes seven frames. Oshawa Dukes and the Petes wind up the merry old C.O.B.I. schedule at this time, while Kingston play in Belleville. As they'll affect the loop standing, these games are fairly important—the big question being which team, the Petes or Nats, will get the third game of the playoffs on their home grounds. Can't say who will hurl here Saturday, but likely it'll be Calladine and Deyell, with Kitchen and Rose saved for Monday and the playoffs start at three o'clock. These tilts all rate good crowds.

• • • • • •

The Kingston scribe does a little expering as follows: "The C.O.B.I. playoffs get under way on Labor Day and they ought to be close all the way. With Williams pitching, the Nationals should have an edge, despite the prowess displayed this season by Calladine and Deyell of the Petes. The teams are about even in the matter of hitting, with Peterborough showing a little looser fielding throughout most of the season. With Mills behind the plate, the Nationals have a decided edge over the Petes in smart handling of pitchers and hitting in the pinches for Mills is so far ahead of Whatley there isn't much comparison.

• • • • • •

"The infield and outfield are fairly evenly matched with the exception of Foley, who holds an edge over all other outer-gardeners on the two teams. But Calladine and Deyell"—he seems to forget Russ Kitchen and Abbie Rose—"might decide right now to keep the ball away from the alley when pitching to Alex Weir. The veteran Belleville outfielder is just liable to bust up any game, and the playoffs may be his place." Well, regardless of whether or not the Limestone key-pounder is right, it should be a swelegant playoff serial.

• • • • • •

We have received a copy of the '34 playing rules of the Canadian Rugby Union. Quite a few minor changes are noted, and those interested are advised to get a rule book and check up. This is one sport where players and fans alike are often confused by plays that come up in a contest, and the only way we know of to overcome this confusion is to read over all the rules. Certainly, officials and players should know the regulations of their game.

• • • • • •

Down in Belleville, they're kind of squawking in fairly nosy manner because Cobourg's lacrosse team, which beat the Aajmaa outfit the first semi-final series game, had three players from Oshawa on its lineup. They claim they are going to ask the O.A.L.A. about this. We wonder if at the same time they'll bother asking the Ontario body whether or not it's okay for the Belleville team to use several players, such as Hendy, Blue, etc., on their lineup after these fellows had already played on an O.A.L.A. team—Campbellford—this year. We'd just sort of like to know about this for fun.

Asked to again mention the prizes listed for softball teams in the L.O.L. County tourney at the Oval Labor Day, we will shuffle merrily forth with the lowdown: Senior men's—catcher's mitt, ball and bat; intermediate men's—twelve prizes of a dollar's value each, given by Board and Huffman; gals'—twelve silver compacts, given by the Elsie Bennett Gift Shop, or is it Shoppe?; junior lads' (seventeen)—several good ones not stated yet. Then, all teams present receive half a hundred Rye's dance tickets. Ought to be quite a tourney.

Albions knocked over Cogs in two straight to advance into the Southend Softball League finals last eve. They licked 'em, 15-1, first number and encored it to the tune of 12-8 [illegible]ng. The A's now tagle with the winner of tonight's Nats-Or[illegible]n the finals, which start Tuesday and are best three out o[illegible] guys are having lots of fun all by themselves deep down southern most extremity of this thriving young metropolis—known far and wide for its manufacturing, etc. Yeah, we ought to be on the Chamber of Commerce.

• • • • • •

C.G.E. gals entertained Cobourg of the P.W.S.U.—possibly we should unravel—here in the Bowl last p.m. and tied 'em by some score or other. Being up tripping the light fantastic at a Lindsay street dawnce along about that time—and the rink fund should be well swelled with that crowd!—we didn't see the damsels' struggle. But we heard it was pretty fair, and that our gals earned the tie with a neat rally. Several of our teams might be good enough to join this Union next year. C.G.E. plays a double-header back in Cobourg Monday, first tilt at two and the other at five. Bellebore lasses are at the Bowl next Tuesday for an exhibition contest with Maple Leafs.

• • • • • •

Grab-bag: And still no word of our minor baseball playdowns . . . . Sixth Line plays at Keene tonight and Westclox go to Keene next Tuesday; schedule ends Wednesday with Omemee meeting C.G.E. here . . . . Spook Scriver is quite likely to hurl part or all of one game in Riverside tomorrow . . . . Orphans are in Oshawa this e'en, while Cogs go to Port Hope tomorrow . . . . Schoolboy Rowe has tossed away all his "luck" charms, and feels okay now that the strain of his unbroken victory string is over . . . . But Manager Mickey Cochrane is so jittery these days that several sanitarium scouts are looking him over . . . . Port Hope plays Dinty's Inn at Millbrook this fine evenin'; while Cobourg is in Belleville at approx. the same time.

Ontario Cricket

Cricket throughout Ontario are looking forward to the final match in the intercounty series, which takes place on the ground of Toronto Cricket Club, Armour Heights, on Labor Day, with play commencing at 11 a.m. Quite a number have signified their intention of journeying to Toronto to see this event. The finalists are teams representing Essex and Waterloo Counties.

In the preliminary rounds the former have played two matches, each of them having been won impressively. Against Kent they accumulated 300 to their opponents' 69, and declaring at 275 for 8 wickets, they defeated Middlesex by 184 runs. The Waterloo County team has played three matches, the first, against Halton, being won 63 to 47, the next, against Lincoln, 120 to 102, and in the semi-final 256 runs were scored, to which Peterborough replied with 83.

When Essex and Waterloo meet on Monday, it will be for the first time in the history of the sport. The first named county enjoys the prestige of qualifying, in company with Lincoln county, as joint holders of the R. C. Matthews Trophy for the initial year of custody. It has the advantage, also, of drawing players from a more congested area. Cricket, however, lends itself to great possibilities, and there is ample indication that the teams from Essex and Waterloo will prove well matched.

MONTREAL POLOISTS TAKE GRENFELL CUP

Toronto Team is Defeated by 10-2 in Inter-City Game.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31. — The Grenfell Cup emblematic of the polo championship of Montreal and Toronto, passed into new hands yesterday when a local four defeated a team from Toronto by 10-2 at Bois Franc field. The cup has been played for annually since 1920, and today's victory by Montreal broke the seven all tie in wins betwee nthe two cities. Toronto Polo Club were the cup holders.

Eastern Cricketers Win Out At Winnipeg

WINNIPEG, Aug. 31. (CP). — Successfully hurdling their initial opposition a stout band of touring cricketers from Eastern Canada to-day looked for new fields to conquer. They counted victory in a two-game match with Winnipeg St. George's cricket club, first of a series that will take them through to the Pacific coast.

By Captain J. A. K. Rutherford the visitors turned back a determined Western stand Thursday by the narrow margin of two runs. They compiled a total of 88 runs, just two more than the score turned in by their opponents. They won the first match by a margin of 199 runs.

Both sides wielded a courageous bat with the issue in doubt until the last over had been bowled. The Easterners impressed by their bowling strength and all-round ability at bat and in the field.

Power that lay in the bats wielded by Felstead and Turnbull carried the homesters away to an impressive start. From then on the Easterners took command and ran the side out shortly after the lunch interval.

K. H. Ross and J. Z. Seagram opened the Eastern innings. And between them they compiled 48 runs, A useful 12 by Carlton and Loney's 15 sweltered the count and left the winning margin to be filled in by Radcliffe, and Rutherford and Bell.

COGS OUSTED IN SEMI-FINALS

Albions to Meet Winners of Nats-Orioles Game in Final Series.

SOUTH-END LEAGUE.

Albions sent Cogs into the discard last night with a 12-8 defeat in Cogs' second straight loss in the Southend Softball League semi-final series. The Albions now meet the winner of to-night's Nats-Orioles' games Tuesday in the first of the five-game final series. Cogs played better ball yesterday and battled hard but the heavy-hitting Albions took advantage of errors to win.

Both sides played nip-and tuck the first four frames with the count tied at 6-all. Cogs gained two in the fifth when B. Leggitt tripled with two aboard, but the Albions came back strong with six on three bingles and four costly miscues. The game was called for darkness in the eighth. Cavanaugh twirled steady ball for the victors, giving nine hits, four walks and fanning seven. Todd, for the losers, was nicked for eight hits and four walks before getting the hook in the fifth. Ridley finished with fine relief throwing, allowing but one hit. Huggins of Cogs made a grand one-hand catch of Kearney's drive. The box score:

H. Freeman and J. D. Fitzpatrick, G. Gimblett and B. Chesler, will be the two pairs who will represent our club in The Globe's Scotch Doubles held in Toronto next Thursday.

—O—

To-night Will Be another Friday night and you all know what that means; there will not be many more this season, so you might as well come out and take advantage of these games. Remember, 7.30 p.m. is the time and the fee is two bits.

—O—

Now We Are going to try and do a little boosting for our own club: On Monday (the holiday) there will be all kinds of tournaments in this district and we know that some of our boys will be going away—we believe that these tournaments should be supported; we cannot expect them to came to ours if we don't patronize theirs, but we believe this support should be within reason, and should be in proportion to the support given our club. You know there is a limit to everything.

—O—

Now What we are trying to put across is the fact that for those who are not going away on Monday we are staging a mixed tournament of our own.

—O—

We Have the finest bowling outlay in Ontario; we have the largest bowling club in the province and it takes a lot of energy to keep things going—so, as we said before, for those who are not going away, some of the committee will be here and help put over this attraction on Monday.

—O—

Remember, The Draw is from the board; the time is 1.30 p.m.; real good prizes will be given; three twelve-ends will be played, and you get all this for 25c.

Vancouver Bomber Used Rabbit Punch

By BOB CAVAGNARO

Associated Press Sports Writer

FERNDALE, N.Y., Aug. 31 (A.P.)—The first bombshell in the forthcoming Barney Ross-Jimmy McLarnin welterweight title fight was hurled to-day by champion Barney himself. There was a suspicious odor of publicity about it all but Barney declared he was serious.

The 25-year-old holder of the lightweight and welterweight championships charged that McLarnin stung him several times during their clash last May with rabbit punches and announced he intended to take up the matter with the Boxing Commission when the fighters meet next Thursday afternoon for weighing-in ceremonies.

"He got me in close several times and brought his right hand down hard on the base of my skull," Ross said while he relaxed in his cottage, taking the day off.

"He didn't hit me solidly or else he would have paralyzed me. The rabbit punch is illegal and there's no reason why he should be permitted to get away with it.

ROWE IS RELIEVED WHEN STRAIN OVER

"Knew He Wasn't in Shape When Game Started," Says Schoolboy.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 31 (AP)—A dream of 17 straight wins and a new American League pitching record lies shattered at the feet of Lynwood (Schoolboy) Rowe, but the 22-year-old Detroit twirling ace says he's "not especially disappointed."

"I'm relieved," he said quietly in the Tiger' locker room. "At least the strain is over."

"I have no excuses," the youth added, "I just didn't have what it takes."

He knew when he started the game that he wasn't in form, he said.

Although Rowe offered no excuse for his part in the 13 to 5 loss before a crowd that set a Shibe Park record, Manager Mickey Cochrane found plenty of reason for what happened. He blamed "an army of well wishers" for making the youth's life "miserable."

"Rowe only averaged about two hours sleep a night in the last three nights," he said "His room phone would ring from early morning to well past midnight. Strangers invaded his room, intent on shaking his hand and asking him a lot of questions that only served to undermine his nerves.

"He had no chance to relax from the minute he arrived in Philadelphia until after the game was over.

"I guess 17 is unlucky for pitchers anyhow."

INJURIES WEAKEN ENGLISH ELEVENS

Crowded Early Program Takes Heavy Toll—Line-ups Uncertain.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—(C.P. Cable)—Although the soccer season is but a week old, the crowded match program has already taken heavy toll. Numerous players have been injured. Line-ups for Saturday's games are in many cases uncertain.

Newcastle United, who dropped from the First to the Second Division of the league this season, are not finding things too easy on the lower plane. Hardest hit of all the league teams in the matter of casualties so far, Newcastle has had nine men hurt in two games. The make-up of the team for the game against Brentford is still undecided.

Four players — Oakton, Horton, Craig and Barber—of the First Division Chelsea team, were injured in the game last evening against Sheffield Wednesday. They are in doubtful shape for the tussle with Leicester City at the week-end. Tottenham Hotspurs have their Welsh international, O'Callaghan, on the injured list. In the game with Huddersfield Saturday, L. Howe will take O'Callaghan's post of inside right.

MAKO BEATS HALL IN SINGLES UPSET

Conqueror of Lester Stoefen Loses at Rye, 6-4 and 7-5.

RYE, N.Y., Aug. 31 (AP)—Gene Mako, Los Angeles youngster who holds the United States Junior and Intercollegiate titles, blasted his way past J. Gilbert Hall, South Orange, N.J., veteran, to reach the semi-finals of the Eastern United States grass court tennis championships along with Frank Shields, Frankie Parker and George Lott.

Racing through the first five games without a break, Mayo went on to hand Hall a 6-4, 7-5 beating in the only major surprise of the day. Hall had created a sensation Wednesday when he put out the second seeded player, Lester Stoefen, and his defeat in straight sets came as a startling upset.

The other three semi-finalists advanced through quarter-final rounds with even less difficulty. Shields, seeded No. 1, won the first seven games in succession as he eliminated Clifford Sutter, 6-0, 6-4. Parker was just as completely in control of the situation as he ousted Jack Tidball, of Los Angeles 6-1, 6-3. Lott pushed his way into the last four at the expense of Berkeley Bell, of New York, 6-1, 6-3.

Soccer Notes

On Saturday, Sept. 1st the C.G.E will have Trenton Airport Rangers here as visitors. Game is called for 5 p.m. sharp. The Rangers beat the local boys in Trenton to the tune of 4 goals to 2 in the first game.

The Airmen have a smart team being undefeated on their home ground this season and are expected to be the team which will play the winners of this district for the Central Ontario championship.

They are sending their strongest eleven and the C.G.E. will be at full strength. This should be a real good game and as this is the first outside team to visit the city this season a good turnout of the fans is expected.

The boys will arrive at the C.G.E plant about 3.30 p.m. and will have supper after the game. The Rangers lineup will be: Wall Brown, Brawshaw, James, Daly, Tennant, Walsh, Goldie, Kelly, Watson, subs Hanis and Hood.

SILVER SLIPPERS By Temple Bailey

READ THIS FIRST:

Joan Dudley, vacationing with her wealthy aunt, Adelaide Delafield, is engaged to Drew Hallam, who is twice her age. At Granitehead, where they are stopping with Drew's sister, Nancy, is a bookshop owned by Giles Armiger, below which is a shoemaker's shop run by his wartime friend, Stephen Scripps. Drew grows jealous after Joan meets Giles and they become interested in each other. Meantime Drew is paying considerable attention to Rose Carter, an old sweetheart. Giles goes to Portsmouth for some old books and Joan decides to leave Granitehead after her aunt has reprimanded her for her interest in Armiger. When Joan goes to Giles' shop to leave her address, Scripps lies and tells her Giles is away because his WIFE is ill, fearing he may lose Armiger's companionship because of his love for Joan. Stunned, Joan returns to the Maine woods and the home of a friend, Penelope Sears, but she is not happy. Her aunt writes she is sailing for Europe with Drew and Nancy. Unexpectedly Drew arrives and Joan feels she is happy again. He urges Joan to write her aunt for forgiveness for leaving her and when she refuses he proposes they be married secretly the next day. Joan half agrees, then refuses after much consideration and Hallam leaves. Back in Granitehead Giles is puzzled over Joan's sudden departure and no word from her. (NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER 28

It was a stormy night, with the rain streaming down the windows and the wind blowing great guns. But within the lighthouse everything was snug and tight. Giles as he watched Dilly going back and forth between the kitchen and dining room, wholesome and sweet, and smiling at her good William as he sat by the fire with the baby in the crook of his arm, was aware of a lifting of his heart. He seemed stripped for the moment of some ghastly garment which in his own gloomy house confined his soul.

"It's so good to be here," he said to Dilly, and followed her to the kitchen and helped her bring in the steaming dishes. They sat down, and when William said grace in his steady voice, something in Giles answered it like a cry: "What I want is this . . . a wife . . . a child . . . love like this . . ."

After supper they went into the bright living room, and Dilly and Giles sang nursery rhymes for the baby—Oranges and Lemons—and I Had a Little Nut Tree—and What Have You Got for Dinner, Mrs. Bond? and There Was a Lady Loved a Swine, and Dame Get Up and Bake Your Pies . . .

Giles and Dilly had sung the songs as children together, and now as they kept time to the lilting tunes, Giles felt something of a youthful gayety of spirit, so that when they came to London Bridge he caught Dilly up and made her dance it with him.

They finished breathlessly. The baby was in ecstasies. William applauded. Giles, light-hearted, was a boy again.

"When it was time for him to go, he said, "I hate to leave. You've made such a gorgeous evening of it, Dilly."

"You made it yourself."

"No. No mere man can make an evening like this. A man is only the bricks and morter of a house. The woman is the hearthstone and the flame of the fire and the light of the lamp," he smiled at her, "and you're all that to your William and he knows it."

"And so do I," said happy Dilly.

"You must feel," Joan said, "as if your feet were flying."

Small John Briggs said, sturdily, "Feet can't fly."

"Mine can," Joan told him "like this," she made a little movement of lightness and grace, gliding upward with upstretched arms like a bird on the wing.

The children of the dancing class watched their teacher with adoring eyes. They thought her wonderful. This was their second lesson, and it was like something out of a book to come through the wind-swept woods to the big house, to find the great living room waiting in a sort of golden stillness, with its rugs up, its low lamps, its glowing logs, and with Miss Joan in a shining silken tunic and with shining sandals on her slender feet.

Today they all had tunics and sandals, 20 of them. For Joan was teaching every scholar from the little district school where Evelyn Briggs taught. Some of the children couldn't pay, but that made no difference. Penelope met their expenses.

"But you must not," Joan had protested.

"Why not? I always wanted to dance, and I never had the chance. And these children shall have their chance."

"You are sure you aren't doing it just for me?" Joan had insisted.

"And if I did, my dear? Wouldn't I do it for my—daughter?"

And Joan had said, shakily, "How am I ever going to make up for all your goodness?" and Penelope had answered, "By loving me."

It was three weeks since Drew Hallam had come and gone. Joan had heard nothing from him. And Penelope had been a tower of strength. Joan had told her the whole story, "I couldn't do it," she said, "and yet sometimes it seems as if I can't live without him."

She had sent back Adelaide's check, "I am done with it all," she told herself, and after that she set herself sturdily to finding some absorbing occupation, "It is the only thing that will save me, Penelope. I mustn't—think . . ."

It was through Evelyn Briggs, the mother of the two children who had danced in the wood that the suggestion came. "What had you thought of?" she had demanded, when Joan went to see her.

"I might have a dancing class," Joan said, "I can do things better with my feet than with my head."

So it was decided. And it was in planning for the class that Joan cemented her friendship with Evelyn Briggs, and found in it a deep and satisfying quality.

Evelyn was a widow. Her husband had been killed in the Argonne, and she lived now with her farmer-father and with an invalid mother. Her father was too old now for heavy tasks, and labor was high, so there were few crops harvested. Old John Leonard tended the garden, looked after the chickens, milked the cow, and helped with the housework. He was always cheerful and was a source of strength to Evelyn. Her meager income as a teacher had to be stretched to meet the expenses of the whole family, but she never thought of her father as a failure. She knew he might have been a successful man if it had not been for his invalid wife. He had sacrificed a career in the city for her sake.

On the afternoon of the dancing lesson, Evelyn and her father walked through the wood to Penelope's. They were to have a cup of tea, and see that the children got home safely.

Evelyn spoke of Joan. "She says very little about herself. But when she was here in the early summer she was supposed to be her aunt's heiress. And now she seems to be earning her living. And she is not happy . . ."

"How do you know?"

"She's so restless, father, and her eyes are sad."

"She is young. Happiness will come."

"It doesn't always come, daddy."

"It will come, if we look for it . . . but not perhaps in the way we want it."

She tucked her hand in his as she walked beside him. In all the years he had never failed her. She felt that if she ever lost faith in him she would lose faith in God.

When they came at last into the golden-lighted room, the children fluttered across the floor to meet them, "We're to have a Thanksgiving pageant . . . Miss Joan says . . . Miss Joan says . . . Miss Joan says . . ." they were all talking at once.

"Well," said Joan, standing in the center of the group, "It is like this . . . we are afraid we've been too much interested in turkey and stuffing 'n everything, and not enough in being thankful, and so we thought we might bring harvest gifts for the poor on Thanksgiving eve, and make a pageant of it. What do you think?"

Old John Leonard said, "I think it couldn't be better. You see food meant a lot to the Pilgrim fathers, because they knew what it was to go hungry. None of you have ever gone hungry; you have everything you want, and forget where you get it . . ."

Small John Briggs interposed, "I haven't everything I want."

None of the children had, it seemed. They flung back as it were at old John Leonard the words he had spoken. In a perfect babble of sound they proceeded to tell the things they lacked.

Joan stopped them. "You tell first what you want, John."

"Well," said young John, "I want money. If you have money you can buy everything."

Then Joan, standing there in her shining tunic and her golden slippers made a speech. "No," she said, "money won't buy everything. It won't buy self-respect. It won't buy happiness. It won't buy a mother like you have, John, nor a grandfather like yours. Why, there are boys and girls with money, and I wish you could see their fathers and mothers—they are never at home, and when the children come from school there's no one to meet them but servants. If you children were rich, and your parents like some I have seen, you wouldn't be going home to a cozy kitchen with your mother dishing up the dinner, and your father coming in to kiss you. You'd be wondering if your mother would let you see her a minute before she rushed off for a party, or whether your father would leave his guests long enough to come in and say good night. Rich children aren't always happy, John . . . and money won't buy . . . everything."

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Saturday, September 1

The astral influences intervening on the affairs of this day must be interpreted as of a very contradictory nature, with a dominant sign of progress, prosperity and friendship in high places, of a substantial co-operation and kindly influence, but with other contrary and combating omens. With great care, discretion and self-control as to irritable temper and petty animosities, with alertness as to fraud and deception, there is prospect of the better aspects predominating.

Those whose birthday it is stand on the threshold of a year calling for much discretion, self-restraint and wisdom in order to permit certain important and beneficial directions to bear influence against hostile and menacing ones. Particularly should rash and hasty words, speech and impulsive actions be avoided. Also alertness as to fraud, treachery, violence and petty enmities.

A child born on this day should be versatile, ambitious and adventurous, but may defeat its best interests and the prospects of high friendship by impetuosity and irritability.

Chicago's Teachers Start Spending Bee

Chicago's shopping districts took on the bustle of a Yuletide-boom when more than 17,000 city school teachers collected $26,000,000 in back pay from the board of education. Its months since they have seen a pay cheque. This shows how some of the Windy City's school marms took their windfall, top, trying on the latest styles in fall fur coats; below, telling the photographer all about it.

Stork Plans to Visit Detroit Zoo; Siberian Tiger Will Act as Hostess

DETROIT, Aug. 31.—A "blessed event" which will be watched by zoo men all over the world is expected in the Detroit Zoo this Fall.

A pair of Siberian tigers, rarest of the big beasts of [illegible] will be listening to the patter of baby feet within a few weeks, [illegible]ording to gossip around the cat house. Tom and Queenie, a de[illegible]d couple, are getting more attention from Superintendent The[illegible] Schroeder than any other two animals in the city's big collecti[illegible]

There are four Siberian tigers in the zoo. They [illegible]ung specimens, between two and three years old, all unre[illegible] to one another.

Larger Than Bengals

These tigers, considerably larger than Bengal t[illegible] come from certain regions in northern Asia and the political [illegible]lications in which Japan and Soviet Russia are involved add to [illegible]difficulty of collecting them. These tigers inhabit a country [illegible]re there is plenty of snow and cold in Winter and will be kep[illegible] doors at the zoo the year around.

The enclosure in which the four tigers are kep[illegible]es in it trees and grass and is surrounded by a moat, 15 feet [illegible]p, filled to a depth of four or five feet with water. In hot weather the tigers spend a great deal of time swimming or loafing in the water. The tigers are second only to chimpansees in public favor, although practically all they do is strike dramatic postures.

SEES NO SECURITY.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Aug. 31 (A.P.)—Fred A. Victor, New York State superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, declared in a speech last night that "there can be no security under the new deal" so long as the United States Government sanctions a legalized liquor industry.

"Security rests uponmoral foundations—but the liquor industry is legalized immorality, open and protected larceny and an evidence of abiding corruption," Victor declared. He addressed the Erie conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ.

GRANDCHILDREN OF ROOSEVELT ARE THREATENED

Clumsy Letter Demands $168,000 Hints Injury for President.

EX-NAVY MAN HELD.

Victim Arrested in New York "Y"—Traced by His 'Phone Number.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—(AP)— A clumsy letter threatening harm to President Roosevelt and his grandchildren has put Benjamin Franklin Varn, 33 years old, in jail on a charge of violating the Lindbergh law.

The letter was addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt at the White House. It said that unless she paid $168,000, "Bunnie" and "Sistie" Dall, children of the president's daughter, Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall, and the baby of Elliott Roosevelt would be kidnapped, and that injury would be inflicted on the president.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt never saw the letter, but United States Secret Service men did, and they started an investigation that led to Varn's arrest last night.

The letter writer included in the kidnap note a telephone number where he could be reached. It was that of the William Sloane House Branch of the Y.M.C.A. in New York where Varn had been living and where he was arrested.

Varn, who was held for arraignment today, described himself as a former machinist in the Naval Aviation Corps and said he was a resident of Charleston, S.C. He was described as a member of a prominent Charleston family. He is unmarried.

Order of Zangara

The threatening letter was signed "By Order of Zangara." It was Guiseppe Zangara who shot at Mr. Roosevelt in Miami in February, 1933, but who hit Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago instead, causing his death.

The letter specified that the $168,000 be furnished in denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20 and $100 and said that Mrs. Roosevelt would be informed by telephone when and how to deliver it. It was understood the letter threatened that the president's grandchildren would be done bodily harm after they were kidnapped if the money were not paid.

It said also that if Mrs. Roosevelt failed to "string along" with the "gang" the President would be harmed.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Hyde Park expressed surprise when informed of the threatening letter and Varn's arrest. Marvin H. McIntyre, presidential secretary, said they felt no concern and urged that the prisoner be given careful attention.

MOTHER AND BABY DAUGHTER LEAVE ARCTIC FOR ONE YEAR

Mrs. E. Paisley Brings Two-Year-Old June "Outside" for Holiday.

LIVE AT CAMBRIDGE

EDMONTON, Aug. 31.—(CP)—The chill winds and low temperatures of the Arctic won't mean a thing this winter to Mrs. E. Paisley and her two-year-old daughter June who arrived in Edmonton recently to start a year's vacation from their home at Cambridge Bay on the southeast end of Victoria Island off the Beaufort Sea.

It took them nearly two months to reach Edmonton from their northern home. They walked 10 miles along the rocky coast of Victoria Island with Eskimos carrying their luggage before they reached water sufficiently open to allow them to use an open boat with a kicker engine. Then they travelled for two days to where the Niglik, trading ship of Captain Paisley, had been frozen in when caught in the ice last fall.

A storm was blowing as they sighted the vessel and they had to lay to until the winds abated. "We were out of food and had to sleep on the rock in the storm," said Mrs Paisley. "When we did board the ship we were held 10 days in the ice pack before we could get away to Coppermine to take the plane to Edmonton." They left their home on June 18, and arrived in Edmonton, Aug. 15.

Little June was born at Cambridge Bay in the Arctic circle on Feb. 23, 1933. Her father has charge of the Canalaska Trading company's Arctic post there and skippers the trading ship Niglik, nearing Wild Goose in Eskimo.

The nearest doctor and the nearest white woman to the Paisley's home are at Aklavik, 1,000 miles away. June plays with the Eskimo children and consequently speaks more of their language than she does English.

Mrs. Paisley came from England to Canada when she was 16 years old. She met Captain Paisley, then a non-commissioned officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Edmonton and married him in 1930 at Vancouver. He accepted the post of arctic manager for the trading company and with his bride sailed from San Francisco to their new home, a journey of four months.

"Coal is $180 a ton at home," said Mrs. Paisley, "and in winter we wear Eskimo clothes made of sealskin with the fur next to our bodies."

All lumber, building supplies and fuel must be brought 1,000 miles to Cambridge Bay from Alaska. Mail arrives once a year by the R.C.M.P. dog teams and the only other white people at Cambridge Bay besides the Paisleys are two R.C.M.P. constables and two traders.

All countries in the world with more than 100,000 telephones, except New Zealand, Japan, China and Russia, can be reached by telephone from the United States.

BANK PRESIDENT FOILS HOLD-UP

Captures Two Men, One of Whom Claims He Was Kidnapped.

USED AS SHIELD.

BYRON, Minn., Aug. 31 (AP)—Grabbing a shotgun that lay behind bullet-proof glass, a 44-year-old bank president yesterday ignored a bandit's pistol and frustrated a holdup of the State Bank of Byron by capturing two men.

Using as a shield a Rochester man who claimed he was kidnapped, the youthful gunman walked into the bank, pointed his gun at F. M. Williams, president, and said: "This is a hold-up; get your hands up in the air."

"Oh, no, this isn't," Williams retorted as he reached for the shotgun beside him. "Better get your hands into the air."

The gunman, who gave his name as Charles Leight, 26, unsuccessfully attempted to shatter the bullet-proof glas swith his pistol butt.

The human shield pleaded:

"Don't shoot. I'm innocent."

The gunman then surrendered.

The shield, Clarence Doty, 39, employee of the Curie Hospital in Rochester, said he was lunching in Mayor Park at Rochester when, at pistol point, he was told to get into his car and "drive on." Doty was jailed while authorities investigated his story.

Communists Worry Strikers

BID FOR POWER AMONG WORKERS IN STRIKE AREA

Will Fight Extremists to the Limit Strike Leader Declares.

"ZERO HOUR" TO-NIGHT.

Government Official Says Efforts Unceasing to Avoid Break.

800,000 Affected

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (A.P.)—The general textile strike was extended to-day to include 200,000 silk workers.

The inclusion of the silk workers in the general walkout, effective at 11.30 p.m. to-night, local time in all textile communities, makes the walkout complete in the textile industry.

Already, the strike had involved some 435,000 workers in the cotton textile and 100,000 more in the wool and worsted industries. Some of these are now unemployed.

Employers have contended, however, that no more than 15 per cent of the workers would be involved.

With the silk workers joining in the walkout, the total number of workers was estimated at strike headquarters at between 500,000 and 650,000.

The mills were estimated as: Cotton textile 1,281
Woollen and worsted 500
Silk and rayon 1,000

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—(AP)—Strike leaders, approaching the zero hour beyond which they say "not a wheel shall turn" in some 1,500 cotton, wool and worsted mills, declared war today on what they called a Communist bid for power among the workers.

From Francis J. Gorman, head of the strike committee, came word that Communist agitators are entering the conflict. He said they would be fought to the limit.

The hour for the strike is 11:30 o'clock tonight.

The real test of the Union's strength in the northeast will come Tuesday, the next working day. In the south—where many factories do not observe the labor day holiday—it will start 24 hours earlier.

The Union declare some 435,000 cotton operatives and 100,000 wool and worsted workers—some of them now unemployed—will be "on the strike lines." The employers say not more than 15 per cent will be involved.

There appeared no hope today of averting the vast walkout — and Union leaders were expected to throw more light today on the question whether the conflict would spread to the silk and rayon industry, with its 200,000 workers. The strike leaders have said that it would unless demands were met. However, Peter and Horn, chairman of the silk code authority, arranged to talk things over with Gorman. It was the refusal of Arthur Besse, chairman of the wool code authority, to have manufacturers meet the Union heads that preceded the strike call to the wool workers yesterday.

George A. Sloan, head of the cotton textile institute who previously had turned thumbs down on a "round table" with labor on grounds that the strike was an attempt at law-making by "force," talked again last night with the national labor relations board.

Still Seeking Settlement

Lloyd Garrison, chairman of the Board, issued this statement:

"The national Labor relations

2,000,000 People Affected By Textile Strike

When the strike, called for midnight, September 1, goes into effect, machinery of the type shown above will be stilled as some 450,000 cotton and textile workers strike for recognition of their union, shorter working week and assurance of fair wages. Instrumental in leading the strike is Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the strike committee, who is seen here at the final meeting of the workers before the strike was decided upon. It is estimated more than 2,000,000 people in the United States will be affected. Several shops closed before the scheduled time.

FIVE ARE KILLED AS AIR LINER FALLS IN STORM

Woman, Three Men Passengers and Pilot Victims in Missouri.

FIRE FOLLOWS CRASH.

OREGON, Mo., Sept. 1. (AP).—Five persons were killed last night in the crash of a tri-motor Rapid Air transport plane, bound from Kansas City to Omaha, on a road near here.

The plane carried a woman and three men as passengers and had one pilot aboard.

Rapid Air transport officials at Kansas City said the passengers were:

Mrs. Maude Schiffmacker, of Edwardsville, Kas.
Dallas Leutch, Omaha.
W. W. Truelson, Omaha.
Frank Mahan, Kansas City.

The pilot was C. M. Bontrager, Kansas City.

Mrs. Lewis Kurtz, near whose farm home the plane crashed, said it burst into flames upon striking a road embankment and it was impossible for any of the occupants to have escaped alive. The plane was fighting a rain storm at the time.

Seeking Forced Landing

The pilot, Don Bontrager, 34, with 12 years experience, apparently was seeking to make a forced landing and only by the narrowest of margins failed to reach a clover field.

"I heard the roar of a plane," Mrs. Lewis Kurtz, wife of a farmer, said.

"It was very low, just over the tree tops and just under the clouds. The rain was coming down in torrents. I screamed to my husband there was a plane in trouble. We ran to a west door. Just then there was a crash and flames burst out in every direction. We were horrified, thinking the plane had struck the John Hornecker home."

It missed that house by only 50 feet.

"I was awakened by the crash," Hornecker said.

"By the time I could get outdoors the plane was completely wrapped in flames. There was nothing we could do."

The plane left Kansas City on schedule at 6:35 p.m. but was ordered by radio to stop at St. Joseph because of storm conditions. It remained there from 7:05 p.m. until shortly after 10 o'clock. Soon after leaving there, it encountered the storm which had swept back into its path.

Silent Nights

LONDON, Aug. 31.—(C.P.-A.P.)— An "anti-honking" order to motorists during sleeping hours has proven so successful in London that the Ministry of Transport has decided to extend it to every city, town and "built-up" area in the country.

Thus England will become a vast silence zone between the hours of 11.30 p.m. and 7 a.m. so far as motor horns are concerned.

Goodbye Summer

Old Sol shone warmly today and by 1 o'clock the mercury had climbed to 70 degrees, but it was the faltering effort of a dying summer.

The calendar shows that the end of summer is close at hand. However, no reference to the calendar is necessary to give significant proof that the seasonal globe has taken another whirl and is fast slipping into the notch of autumn.

The slanting rays of the sun proclaims the fact that it is edging quickly toward the south. Flower and vegetable gardens are no longer the cheery places they were. The bloom is fading and already the hand of the Frost King has been laid upon them, although earlier this year than in the memory of the oldest citizens.

All around the city are other evidences that the gladsome summer season is over. Families have returned from the lakes where they have spent many slun-flooded days in boating, fishing and swimming.

Children are hearing glumly the chastening news that on Tuesday they must return to school. This means that all the summer freedom has gone for them. No longer can they idle and dream, but there will lessons to be learned.

Within a week or two the city's swimming beach will be closed and that will sound another deathknell to summer.

The dog catcher, another gentleman whose official position depends on the hot weather, will soon be ex-officio, and the canines again roam at will, heralding by their gambols the fact that the "dog days" are over.

In office, shop and factory men are again discussing the important topic of the winter's fuel supply. Discussions break out on merits of coal and wood. Coal and wood yard proprietors are preparing for the autumn pickup in their business.

Clothing stores for me and women are displaying the latest thing in fall hats, suits and coats. They report that sales are far ahead of this time last year, the chilly weather doubtless causing this surge in business.

Not so often now is the clack of the lawn mower heard. Grass has not been sprouting so rapidly and a few more times around the lawn and the efficient mowers may be stored away until late next May.

Tommy Hooper, George street confectioner, wore his suit coat yesterday. No better indicator of the change in seasons is needed than this fact. Mr. Hooper's coat speaks more empratically to local men about town than any announcement of the Weather Man.

Fishermen have a glint in their eyes these days. They know that summer is on the wane and with the chilly days come better fishing. "They'll be snapping soon," they announce with conviction.

Summer is going, but the finest months of the year are still ahead. The time when the countryside is set ablaze by the brilliant reds and yellows of autumn; when every lane becomes a symphony of color.

Floor Collapses In New Structure Lindsay Highway

Crowd Of Fifty Merry-Makers Are Plunged Screaming Into Cellar Of Building Only Just Completed On Old R. J. Tully Farm, By T. S. Kerr Of Toronto—Mrs. W. Northey Taken To Hospital With Broken Leg.

PETERBORO AND OMEMEE DOCTORS CALLED; BREAKING OF SUPPORT TIMBER IS BLAMED.

Collapse of a section of the floor at a barn dance on the old R. J. Tully farm in Smith township, on the Peterborough-Lindsay Highway, east of Fowler's Corners, flung about fifty persons into a heap on the ground floor in a drop of twelve feet injuring six last night.

The farm is owned by T. S. Kerr of Toronto, who has a summer home on Hopwood's Island, Chemong Lake, and George Wilson is the resident manager.

The injured were:

Mrs. Wesley Northey, fourth line of Smith, leg broken above the knee; removed to Nicholls Hospital.

Reta Leeson, Havelock, sprained wrist.

Arthur Darling, 17, son of Wm. Darling, Smith, ankle sprained.

The accident occurred shortly after 10.30 p.m. at the height of the dance which Mr. Kerr had arranged as a social event to celebrate the completion of the spacious barn to which a large extension was constructed this summer and was finished only this week.

235 People At Dance

The crowd, estimated at two hundred and twenty-five of the men and women and young folks of Smith and Emily townships, had enjoyed the earlier dance numbers beginning about nine o'clock. A numbered balloon dance for which prizes were given was then announced, and when the crowd surged forward to receive balloons a big supporting square timber, twelve by twelve inches, at the east end of the addition snapped and gave way, carrying with it the joists and opening a space in the floor at least twelve by fourteen feet.

The floor sagged downward suggesting the sides of the funnel Dancers who had been standing at the centre of this section dropped directly about twelve feet to the ground floor beneath, and others slid down the sloping sides on top of the people who were piled up beneath them. Some person slipped through the gap on a chair which was found broken on the rough field stones newly levelled for the pouring of cement which was planned for today.

Tangled In Darkness

Women screamed in pain and fright as they lay in the darkness of what might be described as the cellar. Some of those who were present said there was no flurry of panic as the tangle of men, women and young people quickly unscrambled themselves. A new window looking into an adjoining section of the main barn in which a lantern was showing light apparently indicated to those unfamiliar with the layout that exit was in that direction. It was completely broken from the sash, and evidently some persons must have gone through that way, although a large door leading to the field at the back of the barn was only ten feet off.

When Guests Were Gone

"The lights were out and gone were all the guests" when an Examiner reporter looked from the "balloon platform" down into the gaping hole into the dark cellar shortly after 1.30 o'clock this morn-

WIDTH OF ROAD REDUCED 10 FT.

30 MEN EMPLOYED.

A change in the proposed width of the new Provincial highway along Lansdowne Street, joining highways 28 and 7, resulted recently from a visit of inspection of Highway Department engineers, it was learned to-day by The Examiner from officials of the Law Construction Company, contractors for the road job.

It had been planned that the road from Highway 28 east to Park Street should be 40 feet wide so as to maintain an even width with that found necessary in the fill approach to the high hill on the western end. The road had been surveyed and stakes set, but this week the stakes were set back and the road from the east of the hill fill to Park Street will be 30 feet wide, the same width as other Provincial highways.

However, the fill on the hill is 40 ft. wide and at a curve it is 45 feet wide. This greater width, it was said, was necessary to maintain the permanence of the fill.

About 30 men are now employed on the job, which at the present time consists chiefly of cutting down the top of the hill and placing this material in the fill. The road will not be paved but will be surfaced with crushed stone.

Probe Baby's Beating In N.S. Lumber Camp

TRURO, N.S., Sept. 1.—(C.P.)—The case of "Buddy" Dowell, aged two, covered with bruises and welts so numerous that a coin can scarcely be placed between the marks, was before authorities to-day.

Having arranged for the child to board with a family the mother later found her baby had been taken to a lumber camp at Kempton. She brought the little boy back to her rooming house, where an examination revealed the evidences of brutality. Police began an investigation while an official of the Children's Aid Society and a nurse left for Kempton to ascertain the condition of another child said to be at the same lumber camp.

When visitors attempt to lift Buddy he shrieks in fear and holds his hands to his back. Asked where he was beaten, he points to his back and head. The mother placed him out to board owing to her employment all day in a local factory.

SHELDON SMOKE SUCCEEDS LATE JUDGE HUYCKE

Named in Ottawa List to Preside Over County Court of Peterborough.

OTTAWA APPOINTMENT.

Son of Franklin Smoke, K.C., M.P.—In Partnership With Father.

Sheldon L. Smoke of Paris, Ont., is to be judge of Peterborough County Court in succession to the late Judge E. C. S. Huycke, according to announcemnt from Ottawa this morning.

He is the only son of Franklin Smoke, K.C., M.P., and is junior partner in the well-known law firm of Smoke and Smoke of Paris.

While the appointee is not personally known to any of the members of the local Bar Association to whom The Examiner communicated news of the appointment, he is commonly regarded as a very prominent member of the Ontario legal fraternity.

R. R. Hall, K.C., stated, "I have not the pleasure of the acquaintance of Sheldon Smoke, but I have known his father and also his uncle for a number of years".

The latter Mr. Hall remarked was a member of the law firm of Watson, Smoke, Smith and Sinclair, who was recognized as one of the leading solicitors in the City of Toronto.

"Sheldon Smoke has certainly been brought up in an excellent school of legal training and I have no doubt, from my intimate knowledge of his antecedants that he will prove to be a most excellent, well qualified and fair-minded judge", Mr. Hall said.

The appointment was generally considered among the legal profession here as an excellent one, although it came somewhat in the nature of a surprise.

The Hon. William Finlayson, Minister of Lands and Forests in the old Henry administration had been mentioned in connection with the appointment.

MEANS MORE WORK.

FERNIE, B.C., Sept. 1 (C.P.).—The Federal Government's public works program will provide employment for artisans and also stimulate operations in factories supplying required commodities, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, said in an address here last night before 1,000 of his Kootenay East constituents.

Sudbury Youngsters Fast In Toils Of Gang Pay Weekly Protection To Boy Racketeers

SUDBURY, Ont., Sept. 1.—(CP)—Juvenile racketeers who levy "protection" on other children of the neighborhood were reported today to have formed a "gang" here in approved gangster fashion. Mothers of the boys brought the matter to the police.

The device used was a "club" with a membership fee of two cents, additional dues being assessed periodically. If the prospective member joined the club and paid his dues he was unmolested. Refusal to do so resulted in storm of sling shots or recently, BB shots, youngsters said. The BB guns were bought with the fees collected, they stated.

Until recently parents scoffed at complaints of their eight and 13 year old sons that they were being victimized by the group. But when one of the mothers complained to the mother of a lad alleged to be a leader of the organization, she said she was answered. "I wish you would tell the police, for I can do nothing with my boys myself."

Peeved Mamma Bear Gets Burned Muzzle As Treed Prospectors Toss Her Dynamite

LILLOOET, B.C., Sept 1 (C.P.).—Somewhere in the bush country surrounding this mining community a mother bear is nursing a sore muzzle and a determination to give all prospectors a wide berth, particularly ones with dynamite.

Charlie Scott and his son Tommy, prospectors, were walking along a ridge when they met the mother bear and two cubs. They made for the two nearest trees, while the cubs scrambled up a third.

Charlie had no gun but he did have some dynamite. Breaking off a two-inch piece he made a charge and threw it. The bear sniffed it curiously.

Bang—mother bear turned a backward somersault and went down the ridge in a cloud of gravel and dust.

The men descended and hurried off in the opposite direction. They don't know what happened to the cubs.

BAN UPON DOGS IN HUNTING DEER WILL BE LIFTED

Nixon Aims to Reintroduce Bill at Next Session of Legislature.

NOT EFFECTIVE THIS YEAR.

Use of Dogs Enables Hunter to Shoot Bucks Only Minister Believes.

TORONTO, Sept. 1.— Legislated in and out of the hunting picture during controversies extending over years, dogs once more will be eligible to participate in man's deer-hunting activities after the next session of the Ontario Legislature.

Provincial Secretary and Minister of Game and Fisheries, Harry Nixon, in previous sessions one of the main proponents of the restoration of dogs for deer hunting, will reintroduce a measure, and this time, it appears, it is destined to become law. The prohibition against dogs is to disappear.

Mr. Nixon, in announcing his intention in this regard, submitted the view that the prohibition of the use of dogs in deer-hunting is injurious to the deer population. The reason for it, he said, is that the buck is more canny than the doe, and will remain securely in hiding when mere man with his gun passes by. The doe, however, invariably becomes frightened and dashes into the open, where she is shot. With the dogs stalking the deer quarry, he said, the bucks and does are chased out into the open and the hunter can pick out the males for their shot.

Owing to the fact that the Legislature does not sit until late in winter or spring, the proposed new law will not be effective this hunting season. The earliest it can become operative is 1935.

SCORES PRETENCE IN ELDERLY FOLK

Dean Inge Says All That Matters is Life Should be Lived To Its Close.

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 1. (CP)— This is perhaps a world where everyone is wanted but no one is wanted very much, declared Very Rev. W. R. Inge, dean of St. Paul's It was probably the last occasion on which this famous ecclesiastic would preach at evensong in the Cathedral, although his farewell sermon on retiring from the Deanery will not be given till September.

"Our real reluctance to give up our task," continued the Dean, "is more because we wish to have the credit of it than because we fear the work will be undone when we are gone. Few men are vain enough to think themselves indispensable."

The Dean referred in his sermon to the relations between children and their elders. "There is no surer way of losing rule of the younger generation," he said, "than for elderly people to make a ridiculous pretence that they belong to it.

"We ought, I am sure, neither to fear death nor to wish for it. We ought to feel that death simply does not count. All that matters is that life should be well lived up to the time of its close. If we are not the creatures of today, but immortal spirits, what can it matter if we spend a few years more or less in this state of our probation? Childhood is not merely a preparation for manhood, and old age is not merely a preparation for death. The rich colors of autumn are as admirable and rightly fashioned as the delicate greens of spring."

ANGLICANS HOPE TO SELECT HEAD

Overseas Mission Bishoprices Also to be Filled—Chinese Want Own Nationality.

CONCLAVE SEPT. 12

By H. H. GORDON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

MONTREAL, Sept. 1, (CP). — Momentous questions affecting the life of the church at home and in its missionary dioceses abroad will come before the 13th session of the General Synod of the Church of England in Canada when it meets here Sept. 12.

Shadowed by the death of the venerable Primate, Most Rev. Clarendon L. Worrell, delegates to the assembly will again be faced with the necessity of selecting another head of the church. Archbisop Worrell was appointed to succeed Most Rev. S. P. Matheson of Winnipeg, at the last General Synod held in 1931. Dr. Matheson retired some years ago.

The question of the appointment of a successor to Rt. Rev. W. C. White as Bishop of Honan, China, will undoubtedly result in protracted discussion in view of the desire in the missionary diocese for the appointment of a native priest. In the diocese of mid-Japan the election of a Canadian to succeeed Rt. Rev. H. J. Hamilton is probable.

Great interest will be taken in the report of the Anglican National Commission regarding the implementation of recommendations passed at the last general synod. These recommendations followed a survey of church work in Canada conducted by Rt. Rev. D. T. Owen, Bishop of Toronto, Rev. Canon S. Gould, General Secretary of the Missionary Society of the church in Canada, and F. H. Gisborne, K.C., Chancellor of the Diocese of Ottawa, acting as field commissioners.

Canon Gould will also present the report of the Restoration Fund showing that approximately $850,000 has been subscribed of which nearly $550,000 has been paid in cash and invested.

Sessions will be held in Royal Victoria College and will be preceded by a service of Holy Communion in Christ Church Cathedral at which the synod sermon will be preached by Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York.

A service of witness will be held in The Forum on the night of Sept. 12 when the Earl of Bessborough, the Governor-General will read the lesson and Bishop Manning and Rt. Rev. L. R. Sherman, Bishop of Calgary, will be speakers. A choir of 1,000 voices will lead the singing. They will be accompanied by the band of the Canadian Grenadier Guards. Plans are being made to accommodate some 15,000 people.

Pending the selection of a Primate, the assembly meetings will be presided over by Most Rev. A. U. De Pencier, Archbishop of New Westminster and Metropolitan of the ecclesiastical province of British Columbia. There is a possibility the new Primate may not be chosen from the four metropolitans of the church. While this has been the custom in the past the view is held in many quarters that the church would be better served by a younger man. Under a new canon introduced at the general synod three years ago all diocesan bishops in Canada would be eligble for the honor but this did not meet with unanimous approval and the canon will come before the forthcoming synod again for ratification.

At the last synod a committee was appointed to deal with the matter of a fixed primatial see. In the report of the committee presented by Rt. Rev. J. C. Farthing, Bishop of Montreal, it is stated present economic conditions in the country and the appeals for the Restoration Fund make it inadvisable to take any action at the present time. "To carry out the scheme necessitates a considerable sum of money to endow the See, to provide an official residence for the Primate and the expenses of his office," the report states.

The General Synod will be called upon to settle the question of the future of the Council for Social Service. Since the death of Rev. Canon C. W. Vernon early this year the position of general secretary has been vacant. The Montreal synod suggests the work of the council be undertaken by the missionary society of the church for the time being in other quarters it is thought a successor to Canon Vernon should be appointed.

Former Rum Ship On Hazardous Journey Of Rescue Into Arctic

Here is the good ship Pius XI. which had been launched on the most hazardous journey of its hazardous career. Formerly a rum-ship in the North Atlantic, the Pius XI. will carry Father Emmanuel Duplain (inset left), 40-year-old Ottawa missionary, into the Arctic hinterlands from Churchill in search of Father Stephen Basin (right). Three years ago, Father Basin established a mission post at Pond's Inlet, Baffin Land. Seeking to carry the gospel to the natives, he left the post and set out to find them. He was last heard in 1933, but no word has been received for more than a year. The Pius XI. will deliver supplies to the missions in the Arctic and then seek the lost missionary who, unacquainted with the north, nevertheless courageously set out for the interior and Igloolik Island. Het set up here a parish larger than the whole of Great Britain, and the most northerly Christian mission in the world.

English Flier Lands In Ottawa

On July 20, John Grierson, aged 27, set out from Rochester, England, on an Arctic flight to Ottawa. Forty days later he arrived at his destination after ill-luck had persued him the greatest part of the way. Grierson followed the route Lindburgh used on his flight last year. It is the shortest route, in mileage from the continent to Canada. The layout shows Grierson being welcomed at Ottawa by Commander A. E. Godfrey (RIGHT) O. C. of the Ottawa air station. Below is Grierson's plane, Fox moth seaplane. This was Grierson's second attempt to fly the Arctic route.

Plans Completed For Farm School

FREDERICTON, N. B., Sept. 1— Plans for the 13th annual short course at the New Brunswick Agricultural School have been completed according to O. C Hicks, superintendent of soils and crops division of the New Brunswick Department of Agriculture, who will again act as principal this year. "The course," said Mr. Hicks, "is designed to train the student to apply the facts of agricultural science to common practice on the farm. It is of the most practical character, and is suited in every way to the boy who cannot be spared for a longer period from the farm."

The training will take place from November 2 to December 8 at the Dominion Experimental Station here, and classes will be held in both English and French. The prospectus calls for instruction in nine of the following subjects: Animal husbandry, veterinary science, dairying, bee-keeping, poultry raising, horticulture, field husbandry, economic entomology, plant entomology, and pathology. Classes in English composition and practical commercial law will also be given.

O. M. A. DEMANDS TAXATION OF ALL HYDRO PROPERTY

TORONTO, Aug. 31 (CP)—The Ontario Municipal Association's annual convention yesterday approved a resolution demanding taxation of all Ontario Hydro Electric Commission properties.

The resolution, presented by the Niagara Falls delegation, said the council of that city was opposed to assessment exemptions now allowed Hydro property, and that it favored they be assessed on a basis equal to that of privately-owned corporations.

Controller C. J. Tulley of Ottawa declared "Taxation is legalized robbery in the worst form" and that "Nothing should be taxed."

W. L. Wilkinson of Niagara Falls, however, maintained "Everything should be taxed, even churches. We are losing at least $225,000 a year through not getting any taxes from Hydro."

J. White of Niagara Falls said the city was being "strangled" by a network of high tension cables and that most of the power was going elsewhere.

Lower Power Saves Brockville $31,000

BROCKVILLE, Ont., Sept. 1 (C. P.)—Reductions in electric rates applicable to Brockville which will mean an estimated annual saving of $31,000 to light and power consumers have been authorized by the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, based upon the favorable financial position of the Public Utilities Commission, and will go into effect next month.

Without providing for any change in basic lighting rates, a second discount of 10 per cent in addition to the prompt payment discount of the same figure already in effect is to be applied during the next year, together with a three months' rebate of last year's consumption.

A new local discount of 25 per cent is authorized for power users, in addition to the 10 per cent prompt payment discount while a refund of $1,300 is made to the municipality out of surplus created on water works and street lighting service accounts.

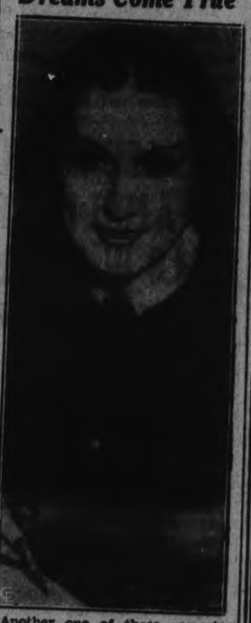
Dreams Come True



Another one of those amazing dreams-come-true stories of the films has come to a climax with Sunny Ingram as the heroine. For three years Miss Ingram has worked as hostess in the studio restaurant. And that might still have been her job had not Jesse Lasky, producer, and Irving Cummings, director, searched high and low without result for a girl to play the role of an undergraduate nurse in "The White Parade." Discussing the problem, Lasky and Cummings went to lunch one day. Suddenly, Cummings looked up from the table, gazed at Miss Ingram and said to Lasky, "There's the girl."

S.J.A.B. Volunteered Services In Fair Week

Forty persons received free first aid treatment from the St. John Ambulance Brigade detachment who performed voluntary duty at the Exhibition grounds during fair week, it is learned. Cases treated at the first aid tent ranged from broken ribs to the sick stomachs induced in the younger element possibly by over excitement and over indulgence in candy. One of the patients, who suffered a slight stroke, was removed to hospital.

Those who volunteered for Fair week duty, included Divisional Superintendent L. Tomkins; Ambulance Officer J. Barnes; Sergt. R.Blair; Hon. Sergt. W. Johnson; Corps. P. Smart and P. O'Toole, and Privates A. Barnes, R. Clyde, R. Howarth, G. Siddall, H. Maxwell, H. Whaley, H. Buckley, and Home Nurses, Mrs. P. Smart, Miss L. Watkins, Mrs. A. Barnes, Mrs. R. Blair, Miss J. Tomkins, Mrs. J. Barnes, Miss M. Hogan, Mrs. L. Tomkins and Mrs. W. Johnson.

LEAGUE EXPECTS SERIOUS SPLIT IN SAAR VALLEY

Believe Nazi Putsch in Region May Bring Intervention of French Troops.

CAMPAIGN WARMS UP.

(By Joseph E. Shartsey—A.P. Foreign Staff).

GENEVA, Sept. 1 (A.P.).—Many officials of the League of Nations, political guardian of the Saar Basin, fear that a Nazi putsch in the troublesome valley may bring about an intervention of French troops before or at the time of the plebiscite January 13, 1935.

But the League's governing commission for the Saar is striving to calm popular excitements and to keep the situation firmly in hand.

The Associated Press was informed that the governing commission, headed by Colonel Geoffrey G. Knox of Great Britain has authority to call for aid from French soldiers.

When French forces left the Saar in 1926 a Saar police force was set up. But the League commission approved the evacuation only on condition that, should events call for such drastic action, it might request France to send another expeditionary force. Officials said the League Council has never disapproved this arrangement. Knox consequently holds a trump card up his sleeve. If partisans get really rough in the last-minute campaign methods Knox has the bayonets of France on his side in any action he may deem appropriate.

It is understood that Baron Pompeo Aloisi, Italian delegate to the League of Nations, and chairman of the League Council Saar Committee, has conferred with other League statements on Knox's recent demand for 2,000 police recruits to be selected from neutral countries. As League authorities see it, there is nothing for the council to do but to concede to the demand.

The feeling is prevalent in League circles that the Saar will vote to join Germany, only the attitude of Catholic voters casting some slight doubt on the result.

THIRTEEN SHIPS CALL FOR GRAIN AT CHURCHILL

New Northern Port Expects to Handle Over 6,000,000 Bushels.

GREATEST SEASON.

By R. K. CARNEGIE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

CHURCHILL, Sept. 1 (CP)—This new port is headed for its greatest season since it was opened four years ago.

The first year two boats carried out grain. In 1932 and 1933, 10 boats went out each year. This season 13 have already been contracted. Six of these have sailed, one is in port and six are to come. Officials are hopeful the total will be 20 before the season ends in October.

The 13 tramps contracted so far will carry about 3,600,000 bushels of grain. If 20 visit the port it will mean about 5,600,000 bushels will be carried, and port officials estimate the operating expenses of the port could be met by handling 6,000,000 bushels.

The grain so far received at the elevator here has been the 1933 crop and has come direct from country elevators of Saskatchewan. It is cleared and graded here. The new grain is expected to start flowing this week-end. The amount handled depends, shipping men state, on the quantity of grain Canada is able to sell abroad during the six weeks the port is open. There is no difficulty getting all the ships required to take the grain away.

Low Rates.

Shipping men here dismiss as unsound the argument that because the imports through the port are small it is an uneconomical trade route. The rates out of Churchill, they say, are almost as low as they would be if the imports were ten times as great. Rates would still be offered on a basis of ballast one way.

Ships go light to every big port in the world, the shipping brokers say. If more ships got cargoes into Churchill, the ship owners would benefit, but not the shippers. At present from many parts of Northern Saskatchewan it is cheaper to ship through Churchill than through the Great Lakes.

One of the disappointments of the present season is that only 290 cattle have been shipping this way to the United Kingdom. The trouble is the boats coming here are not equipped to carry cattle, the only tramp ship so equipped is the Brandon. The boats carrying cattle out of Montreal are liner-cargo boats, operating on a regular schedule and therefore could not be shifted to the Churchill route.

Have You, The "Can't Afford It" Habit?

THE use of that phrase does not suggest the inability to buy so much as the desire to practice rigid economy ... to save ... to deny yourself needed and necessary commodities.

But Man, oh Man, and you, too, Madam, how better and more effectively can you practice economy and thrift than to buy when prices are at their lowest ebb in years? How more certainly can you insure economy than to replace worn or out-of-date furniture than when new is selling for one-third of what it sold for 15 years ago? Or to stock up on food products when they are 40% less than at any time since the war? Or clothing when $53 to-day will buy you what you paid $100 for in 1912?

What you really cannot afford to do is not buy because you cannot afford to miss to-day's low levels...prices that are an actual boon to reduced incomes...to the practice of sensible, far-sighted economy.

The Golden Text

Micah 6:8—"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

THE HUMAN SOUL

(BY DEAN O'SULLIVAN)

THE seventeenth century poet, Young, in his "Night Thoughts," thus speaks of man:

"How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful is man!
How passing wonder He who made him such;
Who centred in our make such strange extremes
From different natures marvellously mixed,
Connection exquisite of distant worlds,
Distinguished link in beings' endless chain,
Midway from nothing to the Deity!
Dim miniature of Greatness Absolute!"

"What a piece of work is man," said the Bard of Avon, "how noble in reason, how infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable, in action how like an angel, in apprehension how like a god!"

Much more concisely than either has the Psalmist described him: "Thou hast created him a little less than the angels, with honor and glory Thou hast crowned him, and set him over the works of Thy hand."

In this so-called enlightened age much time and labor and treasure is being spent upon education; yet few are acquiring wisdom for the reason that the proper study of mankind, which is man, is as regards the great majority of people, altogether neglected or pursued under false guidance. Next to the knowledge of God, as revealed to us by His Divine Son, the teachings of the Church, the words of Sacred Scripture and the works of creation, there is no subject so worthy of our attention as ourselves, our own personality, made up of a body and soul. It is my purpose to set before the readers of The Examiner in a series of papers a simple statement, a bird's-eye view, as it were, of what we know about our own human nature, which is the base upon which is erected the supernatural structure of grace, to enlarge upon the answers to these simple questions: "What is Man?" "In what is man made to God's likeness?" "In what is man's soul like to God?"

The two most important things in this world are God and my soul. The prayer of the great Augustine was, "O God that I may know Thee, that I may know myself." A great many sermons and addresses are wasted on a great many people because the hearers have the vaguest possible conception of the two fundamental things, God and the soul. Countless volumes have been written on this subject which has engrossed the attention of the greatest minds of all time from Plato, Aristotle and Augustine down to Thomas of Acquin, and on down to Locke, Spencer, Kant, Huxley, Darwin, Hamilton and a host of other moderns. Few, however, save students of philosophy, have dipped into these voluminous and technical treatises, while the subject is one of vital interest to every man and woman. For that reason I feel that, however inadequate my brief survey may be, it will be worth while if it helps them to realize a little more intelligently their dignity and to have a little more definite understanding of the nature of man created to the image and likeness of God.

"Holding a middle place 'twixt heaven and earth,

Man is a corporeal, vegetative, sentient, rational creature. Now let us analyze this rather formidable but very adequate definition. Corporeal: He has a body made up of inanimate elements. Vegetative: He nourishes himself, develops and propagates his kind, as do also the flowers and plants. Sentient: He feels, he sees, he hears like the animals. Rational: He reasons and wills like the angels. He is a little world in himself, a composite of the different grades of creation. Whether or not the ancient writer expressed the thought in our Lord's mind when, commenting upon the injunction to preach the Gospel to every creature, he asserted that this command was obeyed when the Gospel was preached to man, the fact remains that man presents a combination of all created things from the atom to the angel. Before considering the origin and nature of the human soul, which makes man what he is, we will examine first its operations, as from these we can arrive at a better knowledge of its nature.

We will pass over the subject of man as a corporeal, vegetative creature, for this matter belongs to the realm of hygiene and physiology. It is scarcely necessary to add anything to the mass of literature that has sprung up recently anent the subject of children's teeth, tonsils and adenoids, and the various germs that may injure their vegetative life.

Ascending a grade higher in the scale of the powers of the soul, we come to the external senses. Man possesses, in common with the brute creation, five external senses, viz., feeling, seeing, hearing, smelling and tasting. These may well be termed the warders of the brain as they carry to it, by means of nerve wires, information in regard to the material world by which we are surrounded. As their nature and mode of operation belong also to the realm of physiology, a passing reference to them will suffice.

Scientists tell us that there is a special brain area allotted to each of these senses and connected with the external organ by nerve fibres. Any injury to or defect in one of the organs of sense, or the nerves leading to or from it, or the portion of the brain which is the terminus of these nerves would cause the total or partial loss of the use of that sense. For example, an injury to the eye or the optic nerves or the sight area of the brain would result in total or partial blindness. All this is very interesting, but not being a physician, I will not pursue the subject further. I gleaned the above information from one of our Public School text books, from the reading of which the impression was left upon me that the brain was a large, central telegraph office with many departments, each of which was run independently, receiving information, storing it up and giving out orders. There was no suggestion of the presence of a boss over the whole establishment, of a dominant mind that weighed the evidence received through the various senses. No, the material grey matter was the whole works. Listen to this sentence: "The sound of the teacher's voice is carried through the air, enters the outer ear of the child, and if his hearing is perfect, the message is carried into the brain by the nerve-threads and the brain area, for hearing understands and stores up the teacher's instructions." Here we see the danger to our children from false guidance in the study of an apparently harmless subject.

Before passing from the consideration of the external senses, I might state that they are much more highly developed in animals than in man. The eagle has a more powerful eyesight than man, the horse a more subtle hearing, the ape a more delicate taste, the vulture a keener sense of smell, and the spider a finer sense of touch. The reason for this is that man has other and higher faculties, as we shall see later, which more than compensate for this deficiency. We notice this difference in men. If a person loses an arm, the other arm becomes more fully developed; if he is deprived of his sight, his sense of hearing becomes more subtle.

Next week I will discuss the internal faculties, namely, the imagination and sensuous memory.

YOUR PROBLEMS

Religious and Social Questions Answered
By DR. WYLIE CLARK

Is it not true that if we had another war everybody would have work?—H.E.W.

Yes, if the war were big enough to get all the nations in. But what a work it would be! For the enlisted men, to kill and take their chance of being killed. To hide in the trenches and tramp in the mud. To drop bombs from the air and shoot torpedoes from the sea. To scatter death and hurry destruction. To rend human bodies and blow up cities. To create ill-will and increase national debts. To waste human life and go back to savagery. We would be all at it, and all in the final consequences of the great catastrophe—the collapse of the nations.

Dr. Wylie Clark

Yes, we would all be working hard to bring about our own ruin.

What folly, to set us all to work to destroy ourselves!

In the next war the daily expenditure will be so great that in a few months' time the credit of the nations engaged in it will be gone, and their governments will be bankrupt.

No, the wages of another war could never be paid.

When Jesus said, "The poor ye have always with you," did He mean that there would always be poor in the world?—W.L.

This saying comes from the scene in Simon's house at Bethany when the woman poured an alabaster flask of expensive perfume over the head of Jesus. The disciples considered it a waste, thinking it should have been sold and the proceeds given to the poor. Jesus, knowing what they were thinking, said, "Why are you annoying the woman? It is a beautiful thing she has done to me. The poor you always have beside you, but you will not always have me. In pouring this perfume on my body she acted in view of my burial." He was speaking to the disciples and vindicating the act of the woman. He was not dealing with the future and announcing a condition which was to last forever.

Unfortunately it has lasted up to the present and is giving all the nations much worry, but it is something which may be met and overcome.

What is meant by the "Old Adam" within us?—B.W.

Adam's temptation had two sources, his desire to eat, the craving of appetite, and the desire to do as he pleased—freedom of action.

These sources of desire strangely stir us to-day and tempt us to break through the laws of nature and of God.

This is our inheritance from Adam or from our connection with the human race, and if there had been no "Old Adam" we would likely have developed the disease ourselves.

This "Old Adam" leaven is a strong and persistent influence. It certainly shows its controlling power in the way so many yield to its subtle and conquering force.

It requires much grace and careful self-watchfulness to overthrow and control this spirit, in order that we may be free to live and serve unbindered by past connections or old temptations.

How can I increase my Faith? —H.F.

Many people try to increase their faith by praying that God will give them the increase. It does not come that way. Faith grows by being used. I have a bushel of wheat. I may ask God to increase it, but unless I sow it, it remains just a bushel. However, if I commit it to the earth it will grow and increase. But it must be good earth. I must be wise enough to give the seed a fair chance.

Now Christ is the ground to which we commit our faith.

He is the good earth and our trust in Him is received and increased.

If we can learn to think about Christ and not about ourselves or our faith, we will soon discover that we are established in Christ and our faith has grown into assurance.

CATHEDRAL MUSINGS

MAN in his search for Truth has become so entangled in the maze of outer complexities that he will not allow himself to listen to and understand his inner simplicities. He seeks everywhere, hoping to find the answer without; the answer that should come to him from the silent voice within. For Truth which is God is both imminent and transcendent; both within and also without, imminent in His creation and yet transcending His creation, and it is useless to seek Him without oneself until He is sought and found within the secret tabernacle of the heart. For spirit can only speak to spirit and only through the God of our hearts may we be conscious of the God without us. For man in his outward manifestation is naught but a mere machine, a machine for the purpose of carrying out the directions of the inner man; but because the outer man has the right to choose and do as he pleases to a certain extent, he mistakes this for power and assumes that he, too, can create, and so he sets himself apart from all else, and says "I am!", whereas he "is not." It is in such a manner that the outer man separates himself from the inner man, and comes to know failure. He refuses to commune with and listen to the voice of the inner man, he even denies there is an inner man. How then immersed in externals can be know Truth when the only avenue to Truth which he possesses he closes by his own act?—Frater IX., Rosicrucian Order, San Jose, Cal.

ATTRACTIVENESS OF FAITH

MANY people who hold the Christian faith, and perhaps more who hesitate to accept it finally, are often haunted by a fear of self-deception. Whether by experience or anticipation they realize what a whole-hearted acceptance of Christianity has to offer. They see how immeasurably life on earth must be changed if they can be sure of God, if they can revere Christ's teaching as not merely beautiful but as divine, if they can feel happily certain about the persistence of life through death and reunion in some perfect setting with those they love.

Yet at any cost they wish to be honest, and so the very attractiveness of the Christian faith becomes, as it were, an argument against its truth. Just because they long to gain or retain belief, may not this keen desire be interfering with what should be a critical and dispassionate examination of the evidence? At the moment, whatever the difficulties of belief, the difficulties of rejecting both the historic and moral evidence for Christianity seem greater still. Yet they wonder if, in the common phrase, "the wish is father to the thought," if they are allowing themselves to be convinced because they want to be convinced.

Frequent, and even in a sense laudable as such misgivings are, they have no real justification, and the New Testament disposes of them effectively. Among the most striking characteristics of our Lord's public work was His refusal in any way to force His claims upon unwilling hearers—His refusal and, it might be added in all reverence, His inability. A man's wish to believe was proof that his spiritual faculties were alive and active, and apart from a use of these spiritual faculties the discussion of spiritual truth with him would be a waste of time.

The Things of the Spirit.

The things of the spirit, as St. Paul insisted, must be spiritually discerned; they are invisible, and talk about them seems "foolishness," to the man who through sin or conceit or carelessness has allowed his spiritual perception to become atrophied by disuse. It is the fact which invalidates the judgment of the evidence for Christianity made by those who, priding themselves on their impartial detachment, are in reality blind to spiritual truth, and consequently uninfluenced by the most convincing part of the Christian case.

On the other hand, a man's wish to believe, so far from discrediting his faith, is a sign of his competence to reach a just conclusion. He need not fear that he is merely accepting things as true because he would greatly like them to be true. But he may comfort himself by knowing that God would have been unable to reveal to him those objective spiritual truths which form the basis of Christianity unless he had wished to believe. No one can be convinced of the truth of religion against his will; that is not God's way. If we want immensely to believe, no matter how difficult we find belief at the moment, the certitude we crave will be ours in time—not because we shall then be deluding ourselves, but because, by the divine law, they who seek, and they alone, shall find.

Perhaps many of our failures are due to a lack of keen spiritual hunger. Too often there is an obvious contrast between our half-wishes, our cautiously restricted aspirations, and that passionate desire for God and His Kingdom which is found both in the Bible and in the lives of all the saints.

Like as the hart desireth the water-brooks,
So longeth my soul after Thee, O God, seems hardly a true picture of the average Christian community or individual to-day. And our Lord's benediction was not given to those who merely wish in a general way that righteousness would increase in themselves and in the world, but "blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness," was His word, "for they shall be filled." —London Times.

Begin the day with prayer if you would have the night sink over you with song.

Micah Champions the Oppressed

Scripture—Micah, chapters 2, 3, 4, 6, 7:1-6.

Copyright, 1934, by Central Press Association, Inc.

Micah was a prophet of God in the northern kingdom of Israel in the days when Isaiah was God's prophet to the southern kingdom of Judah, nearly seven and a half centuries before Christ. He was a fearless champion of the cause of the poor against their rich oppressors.

To those who were falsely teaching that God was hard to please even with the sacrifice of their own children to fiery idols Micah said God required only that they "do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with their God". He denounced the priests who "divine for money".

He rebuked the merchants for robbing the poor with their "scant measures". "The rich men are full of violence, and the inhabitants have spoken lies and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth". He said they were "plucking off their skin and the flesh from off their bones".

Micah prophesied where Christ should be born: "Thou Bethlehem, out of thee shall he come forth that is to be ruler in Israel." He told of Christ's kingdom of peace and of a day when men would turn "swords into plowshares".

A POPULAR APPOINTMENT.

The announcement that W. J. (Peeney) Mills, of Belleville, is to be appointed to the Ontario Athletic Commission in the re-organization of that body effected by the Hepburn Government has given a great deal of pleasure to sport-lovers in this part of the province.

There are several reasons why the appointment should meet with approval.

In the first place, Mr. Mills, who is at present manager and for many years has been catcher of the Belleville Central Ontario League baseball club, is deservedly popular; he is widely known as a hard but fair fighter on the field, a good fellow off the diamond and a "square shooter" at all times. His qualifications for the position to which he is being assigned will be recognised by everybody who has come into contact with the Belleville baseball star.

Then, outside altogether of Mr. Mills' popularity, his selection for the Ontario Athletic Commission will be joyfully received for two other reasons.

In the first place, it means that for the first time sport in this section of Ontario will be directly represented on the governing body, and in the second, baseball will also for the first time have a voice in the deliberations of the commission.

There has been a general opinion that the members who are being replaced laid too much stress upon the importance of track and field events, and that other sports did not receive the attention they deserved.

With Mr. Mills a commissioner both Central Ontario and baseball will be sure of a friend at court.

TIME TO END THE CONTROVERSY.

The public may have some difficulty in deciding who is primarily responsible for the dog fight between Mayor Stewart of Toronto and Premier Hepburn and his lieutenant, Attorney-General Roebuck, but it should have none in arriving at the conclusion that the unseemly controversy should be terminated as quickly as possible.

The Premier of this province and the mayor of Ontario's capital, the second largest city in the Dominion, occupy high positions in the public gift, and both of them should be able to see the desirability of filling their honorable offices with dignity.

There is nothing edifying in the present squabble or in Mayor Stewart's "sitting-on-a-volcano" interviews or in the Premier's advice to Toronto's chief magistrate to "put ice packs on his head" and to "go back to his undertaking."

That kind of thing might do for ward chairmen, but from premiers of provinces and mayors of great cities the public has a right to expect a higher plane of debate and conduct.

As to the present argument The Examiner feels that Mayor Stewart grossly exaggerates the seriousness of the Red menace, and that the Premier and his Attorney-General, on the other hand, are just as grievously minimizing the effect of Communistic influence.

While it is foolish to talk of the possibility of a revolution among people so fundamentally sensible as the mass of Canadians, there is an element in our population that is keen to create trouble and if given any leeway is bound to succeed in making a nuisance, if not a danger, of itself.

Let us hope that the heads of the provincial administration and of Toronto's municipal government will speedily realize the fact that people are tiring of their argument, which is essential political in its origin and in its complection.

SAFETY APPEALS FAIL.

Apparently appeals to the common sense and courtesy of the motoring section of the public are to a large extent futile as a means of reducing the accident toll.

Recently in Great Britain a "Safety-on-the-Highways Week" was organized and a vigorous publicity campaign carried on in the hope that there would be a general resolve on the part of the public that casualties on the highways should be effectively cut down.

The result of this worthy drive would have been laughable—if they had not been so tragic.

When the check-up was made it was found that during the Safety Week 126 persons were killed and 6,506 injured on British highways, the second highest casualty list in the history of the Old Country.

This sad record confirms The Examiner in its opinion that very little is accomplished in trying to sound a note of warning to car drivers; if the shocking headlines in the newspapers are impotent in causing greater care on the part of motorists, it seems hopeless to bring about a reform by means of persuasion and education.

On the contrary, we are inclined to agree thoroughly with the Ottawa Journal in its statement that the only way a certain type of driver can have it impressed upon him that he must drive carefully is through the medium of a stiff fine and in many cases the cancellation of his license.

As the Journal says, one year of a most vigilant watch for traffic offenders, with these offenders dealt with ruthlessly, might do more to solve the highways peril problem than all that has been written and talked about in the past ten years.

LABOR DAY.

One could wish on the eve of the day set apart in Canada for honoring the workers of the land that the skies were brighter for many of them, and yet perhaps the Canadian toiler will celebrate the day in a better position and with better morale than fellow-workers in other parts of the globe.

The Examiner, in a similar editorial one year ago, paid tribute to the steadfastness, courage and common sense demonstrated by Canadian labor in the face of discouraging, in some cases almost hopeless, conditions.

Now, twelve months later, the same eulogy can be voiced, for in the intervening year the workers of this country have on the whole showed a calmness and a courage that have been an example to all Canadians.

While there have been a few isolated exceptions, the mass of Canadian labor has turned a deaf ear toward Communist agitators, and has refused to lose its sense of proportion or its common sense at the bidding of men who have sought to use the economic situation as a means of tearing down Canadian institutions.

Canada may well pause on Monday to honor her toilers for their gameness, their level-headedness and their faith in the Dominion.

They have been sorely tried, but their morale has failed to crack in the crisis, and for the admirable qualities they have displayed they should be thanked at all times, but particularly on the day in each year that has been marked as labor's own day.

May the holiday be a happy one for all Canadians, and may the next twelve months bring better conditions for all Canadians who work—and for all who would like the opportunity to work.

LOSS OF EXPORT MARKETS CAUSE OF CATTLE PRICES.

Because a large proportion of most of our agricultural products is sold in Canada, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, believes that the remedy for distressed prices of those products is in our own hands.

There is some measure of truth in it, but there would be a much larger measure of truth in it had we never attempt ed to build export trade in those products in the past, were we giving them full tariff protection, and had we a rigorous system of state control of production. But none of these "ifs" apply.

Take cattle, which are at a cruelly low level of prices. The primary reason for this is that our livestock raisers once enjoyed the high large income and high profit of selling in the American market. That market was suddenly lost to them, leaving a surplus of livestock in Canada. Our production has never been adjusted to the excess and the impact on prices has been serious.

Mr. Stevens, as well as other ministers of trade and commerce, and different ministers of agriculture, have endeavored to open up the British market for our livestock in order to provide an outlet for a portion of the surplus. They have not been successful in any important degree nor have they been able to induce the Americans to change their minds on livestock tariffs. We are suffering from other nations' desires for economic self-sufficiency, but as we have pursued somewhat similar objectiv es ourselves we are hardly in a position to protest very loudly.

Packers of meat make their largest profits on rising markets. It would be natural for them to hail with delight rising livestock prices as they have hailed rising hog prices. If they are to be crucified for cheap beef they ought at least to be given credit for dear bacon. Actually they have little to do with either. The attempt to blame the packers for the low prices for livestock is particularly unfortunate because it diverts attention from the real causes of those low prices.—Financial Post.

SAFETY ON THE ROAD.

One Ab Jenkins, holder of fourteen international automobile records for speed, distance and endurance, claims the most remarkable record of all when he states he has driven in his lifetime 1,500,000 miles without an accident. This tremendous mileage works out at an average of about 150 miles per day from the dawn of the horseless carriage some thirty years ago. Not many drivers have equalled Mr. Jenkins' performance, but there are motorists in every community whose records are equally clear of mishaps after many years of driving.

Freedom from accidents is not in itself accidental, but rather the due reward of intelligent driving. The Chicago Daily News puts the case admirably:

"Personal efficiency behind the wheel of a mechanically well-conditioned car is the only dependable assurance against accident.

"Safe driving is not a matter of speed, but of alert competence. Inattention to the job, delayed response to the threatening sign or dangerous situation, muddled thinking at the moment when decisive action is vital, overconfidence that relaxes care—those are among factors that precipitate catastrophe, even when drivers are disposed to follow rules of the road. Driving is a full-time job while it lasts.

"The driver should not be a conversationalist, he should not have a wandering eye, he should not feel that he is free to drive with one hand, or let the car run while he lights a cigarette.

"Safety demands unremitting attention to the road, and to every sign or circumstance that may bear on traffic.

"Faith in skill sometimes tempts drivers to take liberties with their attention or wheel control. In that unguarded moment the unexpected may happen, and skill may prove futile because unready."

The pride of a driver should concern itself with his efficiency at the wheel, the mechanical condition of his car, as well as with its spotless polish. Efficiency, human and mechanical, is reflected beyond any argument in the accident records, and the driver who periodically goes home with smashed fenders or pays the other fellow's garage bills reveals himself very clearly as an incompetent motorist.—Ottawa Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

And now they are talking of introducing party politics into the Toronto municipal elections. That is not the path to efficient civic administration.

It looks as if Moosonee is to be handed back to the Indians. But what if they refuse to accept it?

Instead of considering taxing slot machines, the City Council might be better advised in discussing ways and means to banish them.

Twelve magistrates whose dismissal was announced a short time ago have been reinstated for two weeks and may get back permanently. This is surely a time of rapid changes.

Mon. will be Labor Day in this progressive village and the ball team will celebrate the same by going to work on the Bellevilles, from east of here.

Some of the folks from this place attended the auction sale of Govt. cars put on by M. Hepburn in Toronto, west of us, Tues. It was quite an affair all report, in spite of the fact that Geo. Henry's car was not bought by any I from these parts.

Figgers shows more folks attended the Agricultural Society's fall fair here last week than a year ago, but owing to a cold wave, etc., the attendance wasn't so hot at that. Better luck next year, lads, say we.

The Orphans softball team of this berg was taken to the cleaners here Mon. p.m. when P. Whiteley's laundry team from Oshawa, on No. 2 Highway, put our lads through a wet wash. Them 13, Us 2, was the final figgers of the dismal doings your scribe regrets to report.

The schools in these parts open Tues., which may go to explain the sad looks seen on the faces of the young fry the last few days. Hard luck, kids, say we, in passing.

Now that Fred Marshall, our game inspector, has been give his release, the game in these parts should be fitted out with bullet-proof vests and the fish provided with armor against spears, many opine.

Folks hereabouts is drinking faster these nights, the local beer parlors being closed up earlier'n formerly. Our expert sez they's still time to get a glow on without undue hurrying in spite of the new hours.

A pleasant visitor to the sanctum of this great family journal this week was Art Kennedy, who gets out the daily sheet in Stratford, west of here. He dropped in the other day and swapped a few yarns. Come again, soon, Art, say we; you're welcome anytime.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

By H. W. L. MAHOOD

CHARLOTTE REEVE CONOVER
Dayton, Ohio.

WALTER Winchell writes a column in "The Daily Mirror", an American publication. He tells of a letter which appeared in a Dayton, Ohio newspaper, and written by Charlotte Reeve Conover. In Ohio and other eastern states, this lady has won a reputation as a lecturer and writer. Read what she says:

"According to a writer in a recent issue of a magazine, Hitlerism is coming to America. We are going to get rid of the Jews. Also, we have a new kind of shirt for our national wardrobe—Silver Shirts—the object of which will be to exterminate the Jews and all his works from the body politic. All right. Let us keep up with the times. But let us do it scientifically. Let us make a thorough job of it.

"Let us not be satisfied with any half-way measures. Let us not only get rid of the Jew, but wipe from the pages of history all that he has done. If we don't do that he may continue to do some of the pernicious things that he has done in the past. Keeping always in mind that we do this because we, as Gentiles, Nordics and Protestants, and we alone, have no disagreeable characteristics; are always polite, high-principled, generous, unselfish and clean. We can afford to throw stones because we have no personal or racial faults. This being conceded, we must lay out our program and act with consistency.

"The next time we go to a concert and the program includes 'Midsummer Night's Dream', let us walk out. Mendelssohn was a Jew. And if the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra comes to town, buy no tickets. Stokowsky is a Jew and what do we want with Jewish conductors? That goes, too, for the late David Belasco in the theatre; for Oscar Hammerstein in opera; and for Jascha Heifets, Mischa Elam, Efrem Zimbalist and Fritz Kreisler, violinists. Come to think of it, our crusade is likely to decimate the orchestra far and wide, since the major part of the personnel is Jewish.

"Not only would music suffer, but medicine. The Rockefeller Institute for the advancement of sciences would have missed Dr. Solomon Flexner and his wonderful medical discoveries and the American Journal of Medicine its editor, Dr. Morris Fishbein; but no matter—they are all Jews and we must keep our institutions pure. Seligman in Harvard, Dr. Louis Levine in chemistry, and Dr. Joseph Jastrow in psychology must go, too.

"Charles Steinmetz, called the wizard of the electrical world, was a Jew. Too bad we cannot obliterate all he did. But let that pass. We can destroy the sculpture of Jo Davidson and Jacob Epstein. We can burn the books of George Brandes, Ludwig Lewisohn, Edna Ferber, Heinriche Heine, as was done in Berlin, because they were all Jews.

"If we saw and raved over Bernhardt in Phedre, we can forget about it. She was a Jewess. We can petition Congress to have the words of Emma Lazarus chiseled off the Statue of Liberty. What does a Jew know about liberty? Unfortunately we cannot take back the milk that Nathan Strauss distributed to hungry babies in New York; for they are all grown up, thanks to the generosity of a Jew. Nor can we undo the welfare work in the Public Health Association of the late Lee Frankel, of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, nor the fifty years of work of Lillian D. Wald of the Henry Street Settlement, who was the originator of the Federal Children's Bureau. But we can discourage the work of the Red Cross because the first meeting was held in the house of a Jew—Adolphus Solomon.

"We can turn the radio off when Eddie Cantor and Ed. Wynn come on the air, for they are both Jews.

"And, of course, if we are travelling and wish to send a message by radio from a moving train we will not do so because it was David Sarnoff who invented that instrument and he is a Jew. It was Dr. Louis Cohen, a Jew, who banished static from the radio; and Nicola Tesla, with Fritz Lewenstein, who invented the famous wireless switch wave. Believe me, it will be some job to relieve the world permanently of all the Jew has done, but we must keep at it. It may involve tearing down three bridges over the East River of New York—Manhattan, Queensboro and the Williamsburg—but in the interests of so great a cause it must be done, for it was a Jew who designed all three.

"We can't very well get rid of the stars in the heavens that Sir William Herschel and Goldschmidt discovered, because they seem to be up there to stay, but we can get up some propaganda against Justice Brandeis and Justice Cardozo and Judah P. Benjamin of the United States Supreme Court, and eleven other prominent judges throughout the country. We can burn Max Rosenthal's paintings and Louis Untermeyer's poems and Walter Lippman's politics and Octavus Roy Cohen's fun and Waldo Franks literary criticism. But Lambroso's and Max Nordau's study of crime will have to remain as the basis of our new criminology and F. Tannenbaum's revision of prisons.

"They have been so pestiferous these Jews. They have worked and studied and invested. They have been on hand with funds when it was a question of benefitting the human race; and that reminds me—it is mortifying, too, because we cannot very well get rid of the United States of America—that it was a Jew who first set foot on our shores, Louis Torres. He and four other Jews were members of the Columbus expedition; selected because in the world at that time no one knew so much about geography, astronomy and map-making as the Jews. They were the brains of the expedition and it was Jewish money which financed the expedition and not Isabella's pearls."

What's in The NAME

of Canadian Cities and Towns?

By FRANK H. WILLIAMS

BRACEBRIDGE, ONTARIO.

Settlement commenced at Bracebridge in the early sixties. It was first called North Falls. South of the town the main Muskoka river forks into two branches, the north and the south branch. Two communities had their start in the first days, one on each of the branches.

When mail deliveries started, A. P. Cockburn, M.P., asked the postal department to give the place an official name and the present name was chosen. A clerk in the postal branch at the time was reading Bracebridge Hall, by Washington Irving, and was so absorbed by the story that he suggested this name for the new community and it was adopted.

ALL OF US

(By Marshall Maslin.)

The Browse went up to the country to see his family and took along that Rebecca Scarlett's "The Monkey's Tail" . . . He did see his family, too, but they might reasonably have complained that he spent entirely too much time with his nose in that novel. . . . It's not a novel that anybody would call great, but it's a story that nearly anybody would find "absorbing". It absorbs you and you absorb it, and it's considerably more than a light novel. . . . Full of coincidences and unrealities, but sprinkled with delightful bits of wisdom, like raisins in the cake. . . . Sometimes it reminded the Browser of D. H. Lawrence. Not of his books exactly, but of his ideas, and the Browser will cheerfully bet a million that Rebecca Scarlett has read all of D. H. Lawrence. . . . Lawrence, you remember, was always telling us to live with our bodies and not with our minds, and that's what Sandra is always saying in "The Monkey's Tail", which is a very poor title. . . . Also, it reminded the Browser of Robert Nathan's "Autumn", which should be selling, still. In "Autumn" it's an old man who tells the young things how to live; in "The Monkey's Tail it's a wise old lady. . . . Mrs. Browser warned her husband by letter not to "rave" over this book because it doesn't deserve all that. Please note that he hasn't "raved", but he does recommend it for all except Puritans. . . . He read H. S. Hoff's "It Happened in PRK" in bed last night and is sleepy today. Just amusing trash, but amusing just the same. About a young Englishman in Serbia trying to sell tennis rackets and falling in love with another man's wife. Quite immoral, flippant, probably worthless, readable and prky. Not the most profitable book a publisher can put out, because after you read it you will give it away without a pang.

A sentence from Stark Young's Civil war novel, "So Red the Rose": "Yes, the greatest miracle of love is to cure coquetry." Ellen Glasgow says that book is superb and "there has never been a novel of the south in the Civil war that can compare with it". . . . The Browser will put in his word later. . . . At present he is reading Darwin Teilhet's "The Talking Sparrow Murders" (You pronounce his name "tel-het".) . . . Teilhet came into the Browser's office and said: "Do you ever read mysteries?" And the Browser said no, no, no, he did not except Dashiell Hammett, and Darwin said that's too bad because I've just written one . . . and I thought you might like to read it, but if you don't, of course, that's quite all right. . . . So the Browser's reading it—and it's good. . . . He's waiting now to see Teilhet and ask him how you write those things . . . how you pick your subject, how you leave out facts to enhance the mystery, and how you manage to keep suspicion bobbing back and forth from one character to another. . . . And if Teilhet can tell him, the Browser will explain in this column.

Max Miller's new book, "The Second House from the Corner," has been postponed so that the New Yorker could publish three of its chapters. . . . The Browser read the one on the "Invasion of the Attilas", who are that family that camped on the beach, and he shivered. . . . The August "Fortune" tells all about that New Yorker magazine and how Harold Ross keeps it going and making money without editing it "for the old Lady in Dubuque". (He thought that would be a good slogan, but he dropped it.) . . . "Letters of Gamaliel Bradford" contains this letter from Bradford to H. L. Mencken: "You make such a joyous and exuberant business of words. What is there behind them? I, too, have trifled with words all my life, have teased them, bullied them, and, above all things, have enjoyed them, but as I get past fifty I begin to suspect they have fooled me." . . . Sometimes the Browser has that feeling about writing matter and reading matter. Nelson Doubleday is buying, perhaps, the Literary Guild. . . . Dr. Louis Ferdinand Celine is going to Hollywood to see a friend, so perhaps he isn't allowing all of his royalties from "Journey to the End of Night" to coagulate in the bank. . . . Gloria Stuart is publishing a book of verses, "Worm Behind the Leaf". She's the movie lady who really did go to college. . . . Ellen M. LaMotte's "Backwash of the War" is being re-published after all these years. It had four printings in this country and was then suppressed at the request of the government because it wouldn't have stimulated recruiting. . . . And this is the end of

THE BROWSER.

OPPOSES SANITARIUM

The Editor of The Examiner,
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir:

In last night's Examiner a report appeared stating that the Health Officers declared the Isolation Hospital was well situated for a tuberculosis sanitarium. Dr. A. C. McKay is quoted as saying that the hospital was not suited or needed for isolation purposes, and Dr. Bell, Deputy Minister of Health, is reported as saying it is really a rotten lay-out for isolation. Further than that, Dr. Bell suggested a tent to take care of our children suffering from contagious diseases, and requiring to be isolated, and it was further suggested that these cases might be treated in their own homes.

This Isolation Hospital was built on the demands of the then Ontario Government, which insisted that there be isolation of patients suffering from contagious diseases. It was built on the complete approval of the Ontario Government Public Health authorities, and was built to take care of the increased requirements as Peterborough grew and deevloped. The City did not willingly go into the scheme, but was forced into it by the Ontario Government, and the reasons given were that houses could not be isolated and workmen prevented from going to work to their factories, and that some homes were not fitted to take care of contagious cases where other members of the family were likely to suffer by being in the same home with the person suffering from the contagious disease.

The "rotten lay-out" described by Dr. Bell, was made rotten by the Ontario Government Public Health authorities, if the situation is as he declared it.

Now the suggestion is, that the Isolation Hospital be made into a consumptive sanitarium, so that Peterborough will be a second Gravenhurst, and one of the best summer resorts in the Province will be known as a centre for tubercular patients. At the present time it is costing the City of Peterborough $10.50 per week for eight patients, or $84.00 a week, and these patients are treated by experts with the best methods of treatment, and the City is paying for it. Now it is proposed to turn over this hospital with a superintendent, nurses, fireman, and equipment, for the purpose of taking care of eight cases at $10.50 per week, and then allowing patients suffering contagious diseases to be treated in tents or shacks, with the weather frequently at 26 degrees below zero, while the ratepayers bear the cost of it, in addition to maintaining a tubercular sanitarium.

Putting it in another way, Peterborough will establish a centre for a tuberculosis sanitarium upon the recommendation made by the Deputy Minister of Health of the Ontario Government which insisted upon the Isolation Hospital being built at the cost of the people of Peterborough.

This scheme suddenly developed within a few weeks of Dr. Murray Fraser's appointment, and was just about what could be anticipated, yet a former edition of The Examiner reports that sewage is still being dumped into the Otonabee River, and the Medical Officer of Health says it is dangerous for children to swim at Little Lake. This is an offence, yet no word is mentioned to Dr. Bell when he came to Peterborough, that raw sewage is being dumped into the river to the extent that it is dangerous to the health of children swimming in Little Lake.

The City of Peterboorugh cannot afford the expense of increasing its taxes for a consumptive sanitarium which will cost many thousands of dollars a year, when instead it is paying $84.00 a week to take care of the consumptive patients in other sanitariums out of the City.

The Isolation Hospital cost us to erect $12,500.00, so it is not too much or too large for isolation purposes. It could hardly be built smaller and at the same time take care of what might be known as epidemics.

Yours truly,
C. N. GORDON.

SAY FOOD PRICES HIGHER

Dear Mr. Editor:

Permit me a small space in your paper. What I would like to know is: Why is the price of bread and meat and milk, etc., taken such a jump in price, and the working man's wages at such a low standard?

The men to-day are not earning enough to meet the rise on the most essential commodities of life, and especially after such a long period of unemployment. I think it is high time the wages were on the rise, too, to meet these prices.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,

A HOUSEWIFE.

In the trifling accidents of a boy's life, it is a wonderful help to have a good Dad as an understanding friend, for no boy is prepared for rough climbing unless he be shod with the shoes of Dad's experience.—Van Amburgh.

ON THIS DATE

A DAY IN CANADIAN HISTORY

By Red Williams

THE CRADLE OF CONFEDERATION.

On this date in 1864 Charlottetown became the cradle of the Canadian Confederation. It was not so intended. All that was planned was that representatives of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island should meet and confer as to the advisability of a Maritime union. It was not a new proposition, indeed it dated back to 1814, when, in a letter to Chief Justice Sewell at Quebec, the Duke of Kent proposed a union of the colonies by the sea as a preliminary to a general union of the British possessions in North America, his royal highness proposing Windsor or Annapolis Royal as the capital of the tripartite confederacy.

Nothing was done; the idea drifted for years; in 1858 it was discussed with the Colonial office in London, but without result. In 1864, however, the three legislatures almost simultaneously passed resolutions favoring a discussion of the idea and so it happened that on the first of September, 1864, Charles Tupper, Leonard Tilley and J. H. Pope headed delegations which met in the old Province building at Charlottetown.

The gathering had hardly got under way before it was announced that a delegation from the Province of Canada had arrived from Quebec and would like to be heard. They were admitted on the second day and thereafter the idea of Maritime union was submerged in the larger scheme of Confederation. Five days were devoted to a debate upon the Canadian proposals; an adjournment of the Maritime conference was made to Halifax, where on the 10th, 11th and 12th further conversations were exchanged. A further conference took place at Saint John on the 16th, and there it was decided to deter the Maritime conference until after the Quebec conference in October. The Maritime men did their share in the debates at Quebec and in the drawing up of the resolutions upon which the British North America act was founded, and then they made a trip west, visiting Montreal and Toronto. At the latter place the Maritime Union plan met its death, for the time being at any rate, the delegates deciding to "postpone the consideration of the question of a legislative union of the Maritime provinces."

Confederation followed. The Maritime union idea has been often revived in the ensuing half century; it is again a live topic, but it appears as distant as ever. Each province is jealous of its autonomy and the politicians prefer three fields of activity to one; the idea will remain an idea until the people speak!

SOAKING RAINS SHOWER WEST

Welcomed by Many Farmers —Others Dislike Delay in Threshing.

EASES GRAIN DELIVERY.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 1.—(CP)—Farmers of Western Canada today viewed overcast skies with mixed emotions. Some rejoiced in the hope heavy rains were fore-runners of essential soil moisture. Others regretted the delay and inevitable loss in harvesting operations.

Sweeping in from the west soaking rains called a halt to threshing operations throughout the prairie wheat belt. The downfall extended from the western foothills of Alberta to the Manitoba - Ontario boundary line.

The current crop situation was believed unique. In many districts threshing is more than half completed while in other areas farmers have only started cutting operations. Many points where delayed cutting was in progress reported slight damage by frost.

The precipitation led to a distinct falling off in grain delivery and was reflected in cautious trading on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange.

LONDON — Suffering from exposure, allegedly as a result of being kept almost two days in a riverbank hideaway by her estranged husband, Mrs. Joe French is ill and under a doctor's care at the Muncey Indian Reserve, while French is still held in the county jail here. Having lost her voice as a result of the cold, Mrs. French has been unable to give police full details of what occurred from the time her husband allegedly carried her off into the bush until the couple was located in their improvised camp.

MARKET PRICES IN WIDE RANGE

Butter at 20 to 25 Cents—Black Currants Offered.

ELDEBERRIES 25 CENTS.

Prices of dairy produce had a fairly wide range this morning at the farmers' market. Chickens sold all the way from 16 to 20 cents a pound, with 18 cents as a general quotation. Eggs were priced generally at 18 to 20 cents a dozen, with an upward range of 24 cents for choice samples. Butter sold at 20 to 25 cents a pound. Ducks and a couple of year-old turkeys were 20 cents a pound.

Cream had a sedate fixity at the regulation prices fixed by the Board: 30 for table brand and 40 cents a pint for whipping.

Crabapples were 25 cents a basket; wild grapes (very plentiful) were 20 and 25 cents; blue grapes and plums, from Niagara, were 40 cents a basket; elderberries were 20 cents.

Peaches in 6-quart baskets were 35 cents.

Honey was 15 cents a pound for the clear clover quality, potatoes were 90 cents a bag and green tomatoes 25 cents a basket. Ripe tomatoes sold at 20 and 25 cents in 6-quart baskets, but one man, advertising his produce as "free from frost," asked 45 cents.

Late beans were 5 cents a quart.

Green broccoli (guaranteed as a mixture of spinach, cabbage and cauliflower, with the good qualities of all three), was 5 cents a bunch, and so was dill in yellowish-green bunches, ready to flavor pickles.

Black currants were 20 cents a quart.

One vendor had East India gherkins, small, round and prickly, the inside, when sliced, looking like a green pomegranate. They were 10 cents a quart and 40 cents in the basket.

Corn was 2 dozen for a quarter, eggplants 10 and 15 cents each, little pigs $7 and $8 a pair. Green peppers were 3 for five cents and pimentos two for five.

Flowers were very plentiful, and of lovely quality. Gladioli could be bought for 15 to 25 cents a dozen, large bunches of fragrant mignonette were selling for a dime, zinnias were a nickel a bunch and 20 cents would buy a gorgeous bouquet of large mauve asters or spun gold helenium.

One woman in the basket section was displaying dainty handiwork, pink and white woollen bonnets for the baby, and embroidered bridge covers. Both were priced at 30 cents and were very beautifully worked.

Market Closing On All Exchanges

WALL STREET

NEW YORK, Sept. 1 (A.P.) — Business in the stock market dropped to its lowest level in years today as the majority of traders deserted the boardrooms for an extended Labor Day holiday. Prices, as a whole, were trendless, although there were scattered weak and firm spots. The close was irregular. Transfers approximated only 110,000 shares.

Shares of Dome, McIntyre and International Nickel finished virtually unchanged. Dominion government bonds were narrow and dull. The Canadian dollar was up ⅛ of a cent at 102 3-16 cents.

C. G. E. FLOWER SHOW EXCELS FORMER YEARS

Gladioli and Asters Feature Employees' Display of Beauty.

AT LEGION HALL.

Judging Completed, — Show Opens This Evening—Door Prizes.

Members of the Horticultural Society of the Canadian General Electric Social and Athletic Association have demonstrated in no uncertain manner just what can be done in the face of adverse conditions in the horticultural fields. Despite the handicap of an unusually poor growing season, one of the finest displays of flowers ever seen in this city is on view at the C. G. E. Flower Show in the Canadian Legion hall today.

Sixty-three exhibitors, all employees of the C. G. E., have contributed to the show. The array of six hundred exhibits has never been surpassed either in quality or variety. As a show drawing from such a restricted field it is indeed unique in Dominion horticultural circles. Of the eighty-five classes, all but one is contested.

The gladiolus section is possibly the most prominent. A beautiful profusion of specimens in almost every color and shade of the rainbow holds the central portion of the hall. A. E. Prest and Harold Darling are the two feature exhibitors in the multiple-spike classes while the individual spikes entered by Jack Pilling, William Wilkes and several others could be mentioned. The gladioli were judged in twenty-five classes.

The table of baskets, hand bouquets and table bouquets is certain to catch the eye of visitors to the hall this evening. N. E. Crowe's basket of mauve, purple and white asters is outstanding and a basket of pink stocks grown by the same exhibitors is of unusual quality. A particularly fine basket of single red asters mixed with baby's breath and a basket of blue and yellow gladioli also stand out at this table.

Asters A Feature

To mention one other of the many sections at the show which deserve mention, the exhibit in the aster classes themselves might be suggested as the feature of the display. Considering the difficulty of cultivating these delicate blooms successfully, the offering is truly exceptional. The blooms, in a diverse variety of shades, are remarkably full and healthy. Eighteen fine entries make the pansy section another of the features. Henry Turner, Harold Darling and William Wilkes are the prominent contributors.

Judging was carried out this morning by Harry Carter and Frank Wise. Mr. Carter made the gladioli awards while Mr. Wise supervised the cut flower and basket judging. The committee in charge includes T. McMillan, general chairman; H. Turner, vice chairman; H. Darling, secretary; A. E. Prest, chairman display committee; W. H. Young, chairman rules and awards committee; George East, C. Jay, J. Pilling, F. Dyer, R. Pilling, C. C. Mowry, A. Kirkcaldy, C. H. Hotston, F. J. Martin, J. Hamilton, R. Higgins, C. T. McDermott and D. M. Hill.

For a small admission charge, the public will be admitted to the show this evening, proceeds, beyond expenses, going to the Legion. A fine orchestra of thirty-five pieces will be in attendance. Ten door prizes are to be awarded.

Relief Funds Paid For Artist's Gibe At Roosevelt And Cabinet

HOPES OF PEACE WAVER IN CHACO

Officials Fear Bolivia Will Insist on Port on Paraguay River.

KEY TO WHOLE WAR.

By PAUL SANDERS
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 1. (AP). Hopes for early settlement of the long-flaming Chaco war wavered to-day.

Dispatches from Paraguay's capital, Asuncion, said despite the fact she had accepted a preliminary proposal for peace laid down by Argentina, Brazil and the United States, she did not think it would work.

Authoritative Asuncion quarters are represented as feeling Bolivia will continue to insist upon what Paraguay holds is impossible — a port on the Paraguay river.

There was no official announcement except the grim one that fighting is continuing.

Silence cloaked Bolivia's attitude on the peace proposal she is debating. Observers pointed out that should she sign an armistice now it would come with Paraguayan troops deep in the territory she claims as her own.

Innumerable details will have to be settled should Paraguay and Bolivia consent temporarily to silence their smoking guns. Diplomats of the three powers offering to intercede are in constant consultation in an effort to bring the war to a halt.

Bolivia claims more than 14,000 Paraguayans have been killed since April and that many of the enemy are now fleeing. Paraguay denies this and insists she has made impressive advances within the past week.

NAPHTHA BURNS ARTIST'S GIBE

Painting Ridiculed Roosevelt Family and "New Deal."

PENITENTIARY TERM.

TARRYTOWN, N.Y., Sept. 1.—The lampoon of the "new deal" under President Roosevelt, drawn by the mysterious "Jeremiah, II," was ruined yesterday by an unnaturalized Russian who tossed naptha, which burst into flames, on the painting.

"I did not like the idea of holding up the Roosevelt family to ridicule," said John Smiuske, who was sentenced to six months in Westcher penitentiary after his arrest for ruining the picture which hung in the Westchester Institute of Fine Arts.

Smiuske, who said he was 26 and lived in New York, said his only reason for attacking the painting, entitled "Nightmare of 1934," was to efface the portion which caricatured the President's wife.

Smiuske, police said, paid 25 cents admission to the exhibit and after walking about for a few minutes suddenly took the bottle of naptha liquid from his pocket and tossed it at the picture.

The liquid burst into flames as it struck the painting in three places. As spectators shouted, gallery attendants lifted the blazing picture from the wall and threw it, face downward, on the carpet floor, smothering the flames.

Attendants grabbed Smiuske, who later admitted he entered the United States illegally when he jumped ship in New York nine years ago, and held him until police arrived. He was sentenced on a charge of malicious mischief.

The identity of "Jeremiah, II" remains undisclosed. It was said it may be possible for him to repaint the damaged parts of the picture which depicts the President speaking into a series of microphones, holding the shaft of one in his right hand and a fishing line from which dangles a large fish with his left hand. There is a crown on his head.

At the left of the President, Mrs. Roosevelt is depicted, wearing an evening dress and paper crown, as a mass of papers drop from her left hand.

BID FOR POWER AMONG WORKERS

board during the day and evening has kept in touch with Mr. Sloan in the hope of arriving at some plan which the board could present to the Union for averting the strike, but the board was not successful.

"The board has no intention, however, of ceasing its efforts to bring about an early settlement of the issues."

Despite denunciation from a spokesman for business, the federal emergency relief administration gave no indication of changing its policy that strikers in distress get relief unless the Labor Department or the Labor Board brands a strike unjustified.

The divergent reports of the worker's solidarity were emphasized by dispatches from the field. In Macon, Ga., for instance, a cotton strike already was on, and workers blocked a freight train amid tumulet. Virginia manufactures said only mills at Denville would be affected. At Paterson, N.J., there was a movement for a strike among 30,000 silk workers today independently of the national organization.

BLACKPOOL TOPS SECOND.

Arsenal Makes Amends by Smashing Out 8-1 Victory Over Liverpool.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—(C. P. Cable)—Manchester City, the cupholders, went into a three-cornered tie for leadership of the first division of the English football league today with Sunderland Everton while arsenal, the champions, made amends for a tie last week by a smashing 8-1 victory over Liverpool at White Hart lane.

Manchester City had little trouble disposing of Sheffield Wednesday at home by a 4-1 score. Everton did the same with Preston North End, contenders from the second division who had won both their previous matches. Sunderland, away, beat the Wolves 2-1.

The only teams who had won two straight matches were defeated today, Birmingham, Preston and the Wednesday, none playing at home.

Blackpool emerged undisputed leader of the second division, winning their third straight at the expense of Hull City, who were beaten 2-1. Burnley and Swansea Town, who also had clean sheets up to today, were beaten at Notts county and Bradford City respectively. Newcastle United, playing in the second division for the first time this year, lost their third in a row, Brentford beating them on their own grounds 5-2.

SCIENTIST SWALLOWS CHAINS ALL IN THE DAY'S ROUTINE

Authority on Phonetics Tests Pronunciation With Own Throat

X-RAYS REACTIONS

London.—There is a distinguished scientist at University college, London, who swallows chains and threads pieces of metal through his nose. He regards this extraordinary procedure as a minor part of his daily experiments.

As a matter of normal routine he spends several hours a day gulping down finely linked silver, and after each swallow his throat, with the metal inside it, is photographed by X-ray apparatus.

He is Stephen Jones, a leading authority on phonetics. He is using the experiments to study many of the mysteries of pronunciation in the world's most difficult languages.

While he was talking recently he took a thin silver chain, about five inches in length, with a ball of silver attached to one end, and swallowed it without difficulty.

Tries Zulu Words

His speech remained unaffected, and he explained that the ball and part of the chain had become lodged in the chamber containing the vocal cords. The other part of the chain rested on the surface of the tongue, the end protruding from the mouth.

After swallowing the ball and chain Mr. Jones took another ball and chain of similar dimensions, and by means of violent inhalation drew it through his nose until the ball dropped down into the back of the throat.

He then pronounced some obscure Zulu words. At this stage the X-ray photographic apparatus is placed against the side of Mr. Jones' head and a photograph is taken as the words are being pronounced.

The movement of the chains which the words cause is shown clearly in the photograph, and in this way Mr. Jones obtains a perfect outline of the exact movement of the tongue and the movements inside the vocal chamber.

A class of students is helping Mr. Jones in his chain-swallowing experiments. "There is nothing unpleasant about the work," he said. "The students seem to enjoy the novelty of the swallowing. These methods have enabled us to evolve an entirely new technique for analyzing languages. We are able to satisfy ourselves as to the pronunciation of many of the exotic words to be found in the languages of South Africa."

'GO HOME AND BEHAVE' BEACH VISITORS TOLD

Huge Board Lists "Don'ts" as Residents Seek Quiet Sundays

Llangranog.—The most depressed looking holidaymakers in Wales turned disconsolately away from Llangranog beach recently.

Here, where they generally have some really good times, they were no longer welcome.

A huge notice-board, placed conspicuously at the approach to the tempting sands, told them, in both English and Welsh, to "Keep off the sands and go home and behave."

It asked the would-be whoopee makers to come back on a week-day because the "row" they made disturbed the congregations of three churches.

The big board said, among other things:

Don't play football on the beach.
Don't bathe.
Don't take out the speedboats.
Don't have picnics.
Don't laugh and shout.
Don't have noisy barking dogs running out and in the water.

In fact, the board wound up, "We would rather you did not come at all on Sundays."

All this happened because, a few Sundays ago, at least 500 people, with 200 cars, made Sunday a joy day and had hilarious fun on the sands.

They left sandwich papers strewn on the beach, and while villagers worshipped in the three churches, Church of England, Methodist, and Congregational, they could not concentrate on the sermons for the noise of the speedboats and the shouts and laughter.

"We don't want to keep people away," one resident stated, "and we don't want them to think we are bitter or hard in spirit, but we do want a quiet, worshipful Sunday. The beach was getting to be like Blackpool at holiday time."

TWO MEN DEPICTED IN SINGLE STATUE

Body Represents Louis XIV. With Head of British Sea Captain

Yarmouth, Isle of Wight.—In the quiet of the Church of St. James stands a statute with a curious history.

Its head is a likeness of Sir Robert Holmes, the 17th century naval commander, over whose tomb the statue stands. But the body represents that of Louis XIV. of France.

The entire statue was originally intended for Louis. But as it was being shipped to France the vessel containing it was captured by a British man-o'-war, commanded by Holmes.

The statue, complete except for the head, which was to be finished in the presence of Louis, was discovered. Also the sculptor, who happened to be on board.

Sir Holmes compelled the unfortunate man to finish the job on the spot. And it was to be Holmes' head, not that of anybody else.

After his death the statue was erected to his memory.

To her gardener, Ernest Harrowsmith, she left $5,000 and 3 cows, 43 rabbits (assorted), 8 cats, 46 canaries, 44 head of poultry, and a heap of tools and implements.

"I don't know what to do with them all," Mr. Harrowsmith said

Mrs. Drew loved horses so much that she used to buy all the old ones she saw and pension them off to roam on her estate.

CANADIAN LEADING SEARCH FOR GOLD

"Treasure Recovery" Firm Seeks Insurance on Prospective Wealth

London.—So sure of success are the organizers of the latest expedition to be fitted out to search for hidden treasure on the famous Cocos Islands, 500 miles off Panama, that they are seeking to take out insurance on their potential treasure trove up to th value of $125,000,000.

The expedition is being financed by a limited company—Treasure Recovery, Limited—and the treasure-seekers have sailed from England in a 600-ton twin-screw yacht, Queen of Scots, owned by A. J. Drexel, Jr.

The expedition is led by Col. G. E. Leckie, a Canadian explorer, and Commander F. A. Worsley, R.N.

Legends have been current for generations of untold treasure hidden or lost in Cocos Islands by pirates and Spaniards on their way from South America. Many expeditions have sought to find the hidden wealth but without success.

The expedition will seek the treasure with the latest scientific metal-divining instruments. A seaplane is also being taken to survey the island by air. This plane will be taken in a dismantled condition, the wings and body being packed and stowed on the deck of the yacht.

FINDS UTENSIL USEFUL

It's camping time on the Worthing Downs of England. City workers are discovering the beauties of nature in their daily rambles. In picture ABOVE the photographer caught one of the hikers unawares. EARTHQUAKE ROCKS SCOTTISH HIGHLANDS

Violent Shaking Alarms Citizens—Walls of Dornoch Castle Crack

Dornoch.—Mountains, towns and villages in a broad belt of the Scottish highlands, running obliquely almost from coast to coast, were shaken violently by a severe earth tremor.

It occurred at 3.11 a.m. and lasted about ten seconds. Beds were rocked and shaken, china, doors and window frames in thousands of houses clattered and rattled. In many cases people ran from their homes in alarm.

In the main, there was little damage, but at Dornoch Castle cracks have appeared in the walls and ceilings, and in the garden there are slight fissures.

Miss E. Mould, sister of Mrs. B. C. Sykes, the tenant of the castle, said that patches of ground all over the place had been disturbed as though pushed up from below.

"I felt the shock in the top of the turret," Miss Mould said. "The most curious point is that the south-eastern windows and doors of the castle did not rattle.

The earthquake was probably caused by a further movement of the Glen More or Great Glen Fault — a fracture of subterranean rocks. This is one of the biggest earthquake areas in Scotland and previous strong tremors occurred there in 1816, 1888, 1890 and 1901.

GROCERS' VANS CARRY GOLD LABELLED EGGS

Million Pounds Worth of Bullion Safely Delivered

London.—A million pounds' worth of gold and silver bars was taken through the east end of London recently in grocers' vans.

One van was plastered with labels, "New Laid Eggs 1d. Every Egg Tested." Another van was labelled "High-class Tea."

A convoy of vans collected the bullion from a ship at Tilbury Docks, but they travelled through London in pairs so as not to arouse suspicion.

Two men rode on the front of each van. A man, roughly dressed, sat on the tailboard. He was a detective, armed with a pistol.

That was the only protection for the loads of gold and silver.

The gold, which was going to the Bank of England, was packed in wooden cases. The silver, unpacked, and lying on the floor of the vans, was taken to the mint.

'PORTIA' ARGUES RIGHT TO MARRY, BUT LOSES

Court Allows Father Time to Make Inquiries—Fiance Listens

Brighton.—A pretty 18-year-old girl boldly exchanged arguments in a crowded court with a solicitor who, on behalf of her father, opposed her application to the magistrates for their consent to her marriage.

Her fiance sat silent in the witness box behind her while she made her appeal.

Muriel Jessica Leedham—she is a typist—asked the magistrates to allow her to marry Mandeville Vane Huggett.

Her father wanted an adjournment, his solicitor stating that he had been instructed only recently and there were many inquiries to be made. Muriel protested.

In a firm voice she told the magistrate's solicitor, and the court generally that her father had known for two months that she was going to make the application.

The solicitor gently pointed out that it might be necessary to bring witnesses from Maidstone and London.

Muriel protested again. "We are both in business, my young man and I, and it is very difficult for us to get off," she said.

The clerk reminded her that her father did not have the summons until August 6.

Muriel met this new opposition with a ready answer. "My father knew long ago," she said, "that I was going to come here. If he required any further information it was up to him to get it before."

But it was no good. Father had his way. The case was adjourned for a week.

GIRL, 14, RESCUES DROWNING MOTHER

Holds Struggling Woman Until Help From Shore Arrives

Deal.—"Oh, come and help me save my mummy!"

This cry from Joan Powell, aged 14, reached a crowd on Deal beach, but before any one could do anything, Joan had plunged from a bathing float and swam to the sinking woman. She saved her mother.

Joan, who now lives at Wembley, learned to swim when she was 10 years old at school in Echo. Her mother was having her first swim for 12 years.

"Joan called to me to swim out to her. When I was a few yards from her I lost my breath altogether," Mrs. Powell stated. "I just managed to gasp out that I was done. I heard Joan reply, 'Do you mean that mummy?' I do not remember any more."

Joan said: "When I saw mummy sink I plunged in, turned her over on her back, and tried to keep her up, shouting to the shore for help. But she struggled and kicked so much that it was all I could do to keep us both from sinking. At last two bathing attendants rowed out and brought us ashore."

BABY BOY CHEATS DEATH AFTER TERRIBLE BURNS

Survives Scalding, Measles and Diphtheria, Astonishing Doctors

ORDINARILY FATAL

London.—David Edwards ought to be dead, according to all known laws of medical science.

Instead, David, whose age is 22 months, has astonished half a dozen eminent medical men by surviving three calamities at the same time, any one of which might have killed a normal child.

Just over three months ago his mother filled a bath with hot water and turned away to get some cold water.

The little room of the home in Faulkner's-alley, Smithfield, was rather full, and David fell backwards into the bath of scalding water.

When his jersey was taken off most of his back went with it. David was nearly "skinned alive."

In St. Bartholomew's hospital they put him in an electrically heated cot, in the hope that new skin would be encouraged to grow quickly.

But the shock to his constitution was worse than the scalding. David contracted measles, and the doctors gave up hope the second time.

David then had diphtheria, and the doctors feared he would die at any moment.

His parents were called several times to see him "for the last time."

Five times his father gave blood for transfusion to the little patient, who was too weak to eat or drink.

For two months the battle went on, and David was in a coma most of the time.

Now he is a smiling, pink-cheeked child, happy in the thought that he and his mother are to go to the seaside.

"It was an amazing recovery—one of the most wonderful we have ever had," say the hospital staff.

INCREASE IN DOCTORS WORRIES PROFESSION

Urge Age of Registration Be Raised as Medical Schools Crowded

Bournemouth. — Anxiety lest the social and ethical standards of doctors should be greatly lowered by the growth in the number of young medical students was expressed at the British Medical Association's meeting here.

Dr. A. Gregory, of Manchester, moving resolution urging the raising of the age of registration of medical students to 18, said there was grave danger that the finest traditions of the profession were being impaired.

The capacity of medical schools was being taxed to the fullest extent, he said, and there was a danger that the quality of the training might seriously deteriorate as a result of overcrowding. The profession had reached saturation point, and the number of entrants should be limited.

In 1932 there were more than 56,000 names on the medical register—15,000 more than in 1912 and 19,000 more than in 1902.

MINISTER WARNS SON AGAINST HOLY ORDERS

Young Man to Enter Ministry Despite Father's Plea

Doddington.—In his will Rev. John L. S. Dampier Bennett warned his son not to take holy orders in the Church of England.

A few hours later the son, George Bennett, announced that nothing would influence his decision to enter the church, and that he was taking holy orders in December.

Rev. Dampier Bennett was vicar of Doddington. He wrote in his will:

"I warn my son against any inclination which as the descendant of many generations of parsons he is more than likely to inherit strongly . . . to take holy orders in the Church of England . . . unless he has the ability to endure the extremist poverty while maintaining that polite appearance of prosperity which Anglican saints expect. Possessing nothing while seeming to have all things is a fraud. It is the curse of the Church of England."

GERMANS SMUGGLING GEMS INTO BRITAIN

Hide Wealth in Shoes, Hats and Buttons—Hitler Bans Export

London.—Hundreds of thousands of pounds worth of precious stones and gold is being smuggled out of Germany to be stored in London banks and safe depositories or converted into sterling and invested in Great Britain.

During the last six weeks this secret exodus of capital has developed to enormous proportions.

Practically all the diamonds in Germany have been earmarked, so Germans are now raiding the diamond markets of Antwerp and Amsterdam, and the increased demand has already been felt by the diamond syndicates in London.

Owing to Hitler's ban on the export from Germany of currency and valuables the German who wishes to transfer his wealth to this country has to do it surreptitiously.

"The business has grown tremendously in recent weeks," one man engaged in the smuggling said. "The reason is that rich Germans believe that there will be a complete economic collapse followed by revolution in Germany before Christmas.

To get the diamonds past the German customs officials and frontier guards the stones are hidden in shoes with hollow heels and in false linings of hats, it is claimed.

"I have known of diamonds being concealed in the knot of the smuggler's tie and I know another man who never leaves Germany without a diamond worth several hundred pounds sewn into every cloth-covered button on his overcoat," he stated. "Gold is not so convenient, but large quantities of it are leaving Germany."

FARMERS FIGHT POLICE AFTER CATTLE SEIZED

Fatal Riot Attends Sale Resulting From Non-Payment of Debts

Cork.—Six farmers were shot, one dying from his wounds, and twenty-four were injured in a riot caused by a sale of cattle seized for non-payment of land annuities.

Hundreds of farmers gathered round the sale yard. It was guarded by 300 civic guards and a force of detectives. Groups of men attempting to enter the yard were driven off.

Then a lorry crowded with farmers drove straight at the locked gates. It crashed through and stopped.

The defenders opened fire with rifles and revolvers.

Several men fell. Others were pursued by guards and detectives.

A fresh cordon round the sale yard was formed, and again the lorry charged and scattered people in all directions.

The crowd outside, taking advantage of the disorganized state of the police, rushed the gates, and a scene of wild fighting followed as guards with drawn batons fought men who used sticks in their efforts to get into the yard. At the height of the fighting, further shots rang out.

Spectators, among whom were many women, made a wild dash for cover. Doorways were crowded with people seeking shelter. Outside the sale yard there were continuous baton charges and hand-to-hand fighting.

Finally troops arrived. The guards and detectives pursued the crowd a quarter of a mile through the city as far as Patrick St., the main shopping thoroughfare.

All through the city there were small battles between civic guards using their batons and groups of men armed with sticks.

The land annuities to which the farmers object are repayments of British government loans made many years ago for the purchase of land.

The annuities in recent years have been seized by the Free State government, which retains them for its own use instead of passing them on to the British government.

NOVELIST'S WIDOW WINS

Court's Judgment Given In Mrs. Arnold Bennett's Favor

London.—The dispute over the estate of Arnold Bennett, the novelist, ended in the chancery division in judgment in favor of the widow, Mrs. Marie Marguerite Bennett.

She had sued Miss Dorothy Cheston Bennett, of Onslow Gardens, S.W., Frank Swinnerton, of Cranleigh, Surrey, and Alastair N. Tayler, of Queen's gate, W., claiming declarations that various gifts to Miss Cheston Bennett were void.

FILM STAR AIDS GERMAN WHO HELPED HIM TO FAME

Tables Turned in 14 Years But Actor Does Not Forget

DRIVEN INTO EXILE

Paris.—On top of the world one day, down in the gutter the other, is often the lot of the European actor, who, like others, is tumbled from his own world in the wild political upheavals of his country.

Two striking cases are those of Gregory Ratoff, now famous as a film star, and Paul Graetz, once honored in Germany as one of its greatest actors.

The story begins in 1930 when Ratoff, an actor refugee from Russia after the revolution, came in contact with two great Germans, Paul Graetz and Max Reinhardt.

Virtually starving, Ratoff was given work in a Berlin music hall through the influence of Graetz. Mischa Spoliansky, a Russian composer, wrote the songs which Ratoff sang in his broken German.

The struggling Ratoff later found engagements with a Russian choir and Graetz lost sight of him for fourteen years.

"And then," to quote Graetz, now working in Paris, "men like myself, who in private and artistic life have preached peace, were forced to leave Germany. We have nothing to do with this new spirit which I hope cannot last very long—it is not the real spirit of Germany."

Graetz found himself in the same position as Ratoff fourteen years ago. He went to London to find his friend Max Reinhardt, with ideas of producing in America The Tales of Hoffman in which he had played in Germany.

Struggling in London as Ratoff had done in Berlin, Graetz obtained a part in the German version of an English film. And at the British International studios they met, positions reversed.

Ratoff has now given Graetz, who spoke no English when he arrived in London last September, a part in his picture. 13 Minutes, which is being made in Paris.

Graetz now speaks English and is playing a character part supporting Ratoff in the film which he wrote himself of circus life now being taken at the Cirque d'Hiver.

URGES PUNISHMENT FOR INFERIOR WRITERS

King Carol Would Discourage Writing of Bad Books

Prague.—King Carol of Roumania has just made an excursion into the strange sphere of literature.

The result was a proposal as astonishing as anything in his past career—the introduction of punishments for bad books.

The king was speaking at the opening of a new library when he put forward the plan, which he described as "a necessity."

"It is not enough," he said, "to distinguish good books by the award of literary prizes, unless there are at the same time heavy penalties for inferior works. Only in this way will it be possible to raise the standard of literary production."

PLAN RADIO STATION WITH 15 STUDIOS

Belgium to House All Activities in One Building

Brussels.—The plans having been completed and accepted, a start is soon to be made on the construction of a broadcasting house in Brussels, in which will be assembled all the various and at present scattered departments of the Belgian National Institute of Radio-diffusion.

There are to be altogether 15 studios, the largest of which will have accommodation for an audience of 950, while four will be specially equipped to act separately or in conjunction for the transmission of radio plays.

For the news bulletins, French and Flemish, two studios will be reserved, and another will serve for the audition of those wishing to become radio artists.

RAILWAY EXPANDS OFFICES

SPAIN BANS POLITICS IN MILITARY CIRCLES

Soldiers Not Allowed Newspapers — May Write to Press on Artistic Subjects

Madrid.—The Spanish minister of war has issued a decree designed to put an end to the interference of the military in politics.

By the decree the military are prohibited from belonging to any political party: those who were members of a political party already have been given one month's notice to resign their membership.

They are also prohibited from writing in the press except on purely artistic or scientific matters. The decree also provides that military departments and clubs shall cease to subscribe to any political or syndicalist newspapers, and that no newspapers shall be allowed into military barracks when it is a newspaper which stands for a particular political program.

This means that no Spanish daily newspaper at all will be allowed into the military barracks, for there is not a single daily paper in the land which does not support some political party.

The minister of war has stated that literary and other non-political magazines shall be allowed into the barracks. "The military must have no use for politics," he said.

The decree is to be read out to all the military garrisons throughout the land.

STORKS SUBDUE EAGLES

Attack "Lords of the Air" When Young Stolen

Angora.—A battle in the air between a colony of storks and a large flight of eagles was witnessed by a crowd of people.

According to one spectator the fight started when an eagle swooped down into the nest of a stork and carried off a young bird. This was the signal for an attack en masse by the whole colony which greatly outnumbered the eagles.

The fight raged fiercely for some time with dead birds dropping to the ground, but in the end the lords of the air had to give way in flight to the storks.

When the air was finally cleared and the storks had returned to their rookery, 20 eagles and 10 storks were picked up by peasants, it was stated.

STAIVSKY CHILDREN GUARDED BY NURSE

Devoted Servant Replaces Imprisoned Mother

Le Havre.—Hidden away in a little cottage on the outskirts of Le Havre, a devoted nurse is sacrificing a life's savings for the sake of two children who are not her own.

She is Camille le Francois, nurse of little Claud and Micheline Stavisky. Their father is dead, shot by his own hand. Their mother is in prison.

The magnificent palace in which they lived has been sold, and the vast fortune to which the children were heirs is no more.

For months Camille has sheltered her charges from the inquisitive world — without payment, without prospect of payment, for Mme. Stavisky is penniless.

GIRL IN SEVENTH YEAR GIVES BIRTH TO BABY

Doctors, After Two Years' Investigation, Confirm Mother's Age

New Delhi—One of the most remarkable cases of early motherhood, that of a girl who gave birth to a child at six and a half years of age, has just been virtually confirmed after two years of research.

Doubts has been expressed about the correct age of the girl when the baby was born in the Victoria Zenana hospital in June, 1932. Dr. Kean, the woman physician in charge of the case, convened a meeting of doctors and X-ray photographs and other data were filed of the case.

Now it has been confirmed that the girl was born on October 8, 1925, and was therefore six years and eight months old when her baby was born.

Leading doctors in India declare that although the girl was two months older than the 6½ years claimed, hers would be the earliest case of maternity on record.

In the united provinces of India there has been reported cases of 11 and 12-year-old girls becoming mothers, but in the extensive records kept by the government maternity hospital of Madras the earliest age of a mother was 13 years.

JAZZ BAND KEEPS PLAYING AS IT DESCENDS FROM AIR

Aviators Land Pigs, Dogs, Cats, Chickens, Also, Without a Hitch

TEST PARACHUTES

Moscow.—A ton of live pigs, dogs, cats and chickens, 200 plates of borscht (Russian soup) and a 10-piece jazz band, playing lustily, descended from the skies on Moscow, via parachutes, as the Soviet air force demonstrated over the capital the skill and daring of its fliers.

The occasion was national aviation day, celebrated in all principal cities of the U.S.S.R.

Tossing of livestock, dinners and jazz bands overboard was no mere nonsense. It was destined to show:

First, aeroplanes easily can replenish stores and provide even hot meals for isolated communities and military detachments.

Secondly, Soviet parachute jumpers are sufficiently confident in the air, even to play tunes as they descend from the heights.

The animals were possibly uncomfortable, but quite safe. They were tossed out of the aeroplanes in huge crates suspended by parachutes capable of supporting a ton. They fell 2,500 feet and were picked up by trucks after they floated to earth.

The soup came overboard in large vacuum containers that landed without breaking.

More than 100 men and women parachute jumpers shared in the demonstration. At one time 50 were in the air simultaneously.

HONOR GREAT EXPLORER

Victoria Falls—Perched almost at the edge of Devil's Cataract of Victoria Falls, Southern Rhodesia, where the roar can always be heard and the spray of the tumbling waters is ever visible, a statue of Dr. David Livingstone was unveiled by H. U. Moffat, former premier of Southern Rhodesia and himself a nephew of the famous explorer and missionary.

The memorial to the famous Scot and discoverer of the falls has been provided by the federation of the Caledonian Society of South Africa. Nearly seven years ago William Lowe, then chief of the federation, embarked upon a campaign to raise £50,000 necessary for the erection of the memorial. He got the money and commissioned the statue but died before it was completed.

GIVES LIFE IN SEARCH FOR RARE BUTTERFLY

Entomologist Succumbs to Chill Caught in Aysen Wilds

Santiago—Wm. MacQueen, wealthy Scottish entomologist, has died at Valparaiso at the age of 45.

He caught a chill when leading a scientific expedition in the wilds of the Aysen territory, skirting Chilean Patagonia, in an attempt to capture a new species of butterfly.

Mr. MacQueen spent £25,000 on this expedition, because he wished to reach the Aysen territory before a party of Americans, who also had the idea of being the first to discover this rare butterfly.

Italy Holding Control in Austria Pending Settlement of African Differences.

KEEPS LID ON TIGHT

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN
Central Press Canadian Writer

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—"If you could look into the heart of Starhemberg, you would see there....Starhemberg! If you could look into the heart of Fey, you would see there.. Emperor Otto. And if you looked into the heart of Chancellor Schuschnigg you would see the Pope!" That is the way Jerome Tharaud, formerly professor of French at the University of Vienna, now correspondent for a great Parisian daily and an acknowledged authority on Central European affairs, summed up the muddled situation in Vienna when we met here to compare notes on the Austrian situation.

The different aims of the three members of the triumvirate which rules Austria at present, convey at the same time the chaotic state of affairs. The crushing of the social-democratic party in February by Dollfuss and the half-hearted move against the Nazis in July have settled nothing.

Everybody knows that the three chiefs are openly plotting against each other. The role of Fey in the Nazi putsch is to say the least mysterious. He admitted before the investigating commission that he knew three hours before that the Nazis planned a coup. During the occupation of the chancellery, where he was imprisoned by the rebellious Nazis, he appeared six times on the balcony to parley, but he never mentioned the fact that he had seen Dollfuss mortally wounded. Starhemberg is against a restoration of the Hapsburgs, but he told us this afternoon at a press conference "I prefer Otto to Hitler!" and then left for Rome by aeroplane to confer with Mussolini.

Hapsburgs Mean War

Chancellor Schuschnigg has just come back from seeing Mussolini. The Empress Zita is in Italy. But Otto von Hapsburg is travelling in Sweden and behaving as if the plots intrigues and counterplots in Austria do not concern him. Yet France warns Mussolini to go easy with the restoration plans. That is France speaking on behalf of her Little Entente allies. A Hapsburg in Austria means war. Czechoslovakia, Jugloslavia and Poland will not permit it.

If you look carefully into the situation, you will find that Mussolini's policy is the obstacle to a permanent settlement of the Austrian situation. The mobilization of the 60,000 Italian troops on the Austrian border, generally taken as an energetic step, has simply had the effect of stabilising the anarchic situation in Central Europe. By that move Mussolini prevented an international settlement, a joint move by the great powers. Mussolini did not want a diplomatic settlement of the Austrian situation, because this would have involved participation of the Little Entente powers.

Situation Dangerous

Mussolini really mobilized against the Little Entente and against the pacification of Austria. Jugloslavia protests that Italy wants to be sole arbiter or referee in Austria and declares that it cannot permit this. The military occupation of Austria by Italy, nobody doubts this, means war. Since war is to be prevented at all costs, the Austrian situation remains as it is, muddled, unsettled, and highly dangerous.

Statesmen usually did not take into account that political observers see right through the moves they make. Whether Mussolini knew ahead of time that his rapid procative mobilization on the Austrian frontier would have this effect. I do not know, but the effect is this: Mussolini's step prevented joint action by Britain and France in Berlin, which was obviously responsible for the Nazi putsch in Vienna, and it prevented a diplomatic intervention on the part of the Little Entente for the permanent settlement of the Austrian question.

It is the easiest thing in the world to get either Fey or Starhemberg or even the chancellor to make some high-faluting statement on the situation, but these statements are purposely misleading. All speak of the necessity of maintaining Austrian independence. While they say it, they are running up and down to Rome, therewith proving that Austria is not independent, but that everything depends on the decision which the chief of a foreign state will take in the matter, in this instance Signor Mussolini.

Austria a Pawn

Strange and almost fantastic as this may sound, the fate of Vienna depends on what happens in the centre of the Sahara desert. Secret negotiations are going on at present between Rome and Paris over an extension of Italian influence in Lybia. Italy wants to get control of the borders of Lake Tachad, now held by France. France wants Italy's agreement to the eastern pacts, the so-called eastern Locarno. But Mussolini has often spoken against "pactomania." He is willing to come in though, but at a price. The price is a few hundred thousand square miles of desert in Africa. He keeps the muddle Austrian situation as a pawn. France and the Little Entente can settle the Austrian situation in a week's time, but Mussolini is holding out. If France gives in on the Sahara desert question, Mussolini will give in on Austria.

Why does Italy want full control of the Lybian wilderness? The region over which negotiations are going on is quite arid and from a commercial viewpoint useless. Strategically, though, of the first importance. Through that area pass the old caravan routes which connect the Upper Nile region with the cases of Erdi. Italy is busy encircling Abyssinia.

Mussolini has repeatedly stated that the future of Italy lies in Africa. France is his great opponent in Africa. The French know that they can have a peaceful situation in central Europe in short time, if they only let Mussolini have his way in Central Africa, but the French press is opposed to buying Mussolini's withdrawal from the Austrian business at too high a price.

Mussolini has just been checked in his expansionist policy in Yemen, where Italy financed and manouevred the raid of the Iman against King Ibn Saoud. Turkey has curtly repelled Italian advances. Abyssinia threatens again to notify the League of Nations about Italy's nibbling at her frontiers. Mussolin is hard pressed in Africa. But he has controlling hand in the Austrian situation.

Austria is the pawn in the colonial poker game in Africa between France and Italy. Austria will be calmed in a week's time and the danger of war greatly lessened if France lets Mussolini have his way in the Sahara desert. In Africa lies the key.

New Star

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. Sept. 1.—(AP) — There's a new movie actress in the Joe E. Brown family.

The comedian spent several hours trying to enact a scene with various members of the group of one-and-a-half year-old infants.

But the youngsters howled.

"Why don't you try your own youngster?" someone finally suggested.

Brown called his home and Katherine Brown, aged 1½, aped to location.

The first "shot" was successful.

BEATTY LEANS TO UNIFICATION

Advocates Private Operation for Combined Railway System as Best.

FOR EFFICIENCY, ECONOMY.

VANCOUVER, Sept. 1. (CP).—"I am very hopeful that unification for the purpose of administration of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railways will be brought about," President E. W. Beatty of the Canadian Pacific said in a statement here last night.

The statement was in the form of replies to questions which had been telegraphed to him as he approached Vancouver, prior to his arrival here.

"The extent of the burden on the country of the present situation and realization of its unnecessary character is gradually extending as well as relaization of the danger of drifting," the written reply added.

"I have advocated private operation for the combined system as offering the best opportunity for efficiency and economy in administration and freedom from political interference.

"Measure of co-operation between the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific are proceeding in accordance with the terms of the statute, and so far as I have observed they have been prosecuted with utmost good faith. Some economies have already been effected; some are under consideration and still others will follow the conclusion of work now in hand.

"Efficiency in public services can certainly be maintained even in the absence of competition, as has been proved in many services in Canada where railways are not in direct competition," the president's statement said. "In addition some measure of competition from water carriers, trucks and buses will always be present."

THE SHINING HARVEST MOON

Phenomenon Is Full Moon Falling Nearest Autumnal Equinox

A photograph of the harvest moon.

By RICHARD BAYLIS
Central Press Canadian Science Writer

The Autumn brings the harvest and with the harvest comes what has popularly been known as the Harvest Moon.

Farmers, of course, can tell you all about the Harvest Moon, that is, when it comes and how bright it shines. And even the city folk know about it, although perhaps their knowledge of it has been obtained through one of the once-popular songs about the shining Harvest Moon.

Most people retain the notion, although vague, that this moon is brighter than during the rest of the year, for some reason. Few know why.

The reason for the unusual brightness is simple enough. About the time of the autumnal equinox, the full moon is at that part of its orbit where it is moving north most rapidly.

From that time on, the moon rises on an average of three-quarters of an hour later each day. When the moon moves north, this amount is diminished and increased when the moon moves south.

The phenomenon attracts the most attention when the full moon is moving rapidly north, for at that time it rises about sunset for several evenings, and is available for light for all the hours of the night.

Simply, the Harvest Moon is the full moon that falls nearest to the autumnal equinox.

Sickness, Suffering and Death

By Ven. R. C. Blagrave, D.D.

Luke 4:40.—The story of man is set to an accompaniment of sickness and death. It has been so since the beginning. It has created a problem for religious minds since God came to be known as at once a God of power and of goodness, and many explanations have been forth coming; but there is only one in the least satisfactory, and that is not an explanation but a solution or rather a method of turning the edge of suffering to the highest ends; it is to face up to it as Christ did the suffering of the cross and in His spirit. The problem itself remains hidden in the inscrutable mystery of God.

We are always impressed with the fact that there is so little, if any, sickness among lower animals, with the exception of those that are domesticated or that directly or indirectly come under human influence. Death comes upon all creation, as indeed it must, so long as the habitation of life is a perishable body, constituted of a corruptible substance. And this is obviously the Divine will and purpose for the attainment of the higher seeds of life, "except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth by itself alone, but if it die it beareth much fruit." But death, we are told, in the sub-human level is painless and natural. They, the lower animals, having neither the fears nor the imagination we have, suffer only for the passing moment. Now the difference between humans and lower animals in respect of sickness can be accounted for in only one way, if we except the power of imagination on the human organism. (We are not now thinking of the large areas of struggle and strife and accident in the animal kingdom.) When man was endowed with the gift of mind and the capacity to look before and after and to determine his own course, he was set free from the natural restraints which in the lower kingdom saves life from evil choices. As a result of this freedom man finds himself living a life entirely other than the laws of nature would direct,—to which laws unenlightened instinct pays heed. He turns night into day. He spends the hours of labor, for the most part, housed with multitudes of others in ill-ventilated spaces. He rarely sees or feels the sunshine. He eats and drinks, if circumstance permit, according to his heightened and artificial tastes, and very often both intemperately and imprudently. And so into the web of his life there has entered, over centuries of time, the entail of untold transgressions against the laws of God and nature. The integrity of the Creator is manifest in the inviolability of His laws, and the consequences of unrighteous and unnatural living pass on from generation to generation. "And we are members one of another." To say that there should not be sickness under these conditions of abused freedom is to impugn the righteousness of the Most High.

It used to be thought that sickness was due to sin. We all know it can be, of course, but the idea that it must be was due to superstition or neurotic fears. According to the above, sickness is due to racial sins or transgressions, and in the sin of Adam we are all alike and others, touching only the conscience, influence the body only indirectly. "Neither did this man sin nor his parents that he was born blind," said our Lord; and St. Paul, "Since by man came death by man came also the resurrection of the dead." It does not mean that there was no sin in the man born blind, but that blindness had no connection with any particular sin. What our Lord did about it was to turn it to the glory of God. It is characteristic of our Lord's life and teaching that without explaining mysteries He turns all issues to the Father's glory. He made all things serve good. He did not argue that sickness was a delusion. On the contrary, He recognized it and in doing so affirmed it to be a fact. But He faced up to it in Himself, sympathized with the sufferer and turned its sting by overcoming it so that "when the evening was come, they brought unto Him all that were sick with divers diseases and He healed them all."

Our Lord then healed them all and we are told He gave His disciples a similar power of healing which was exercised by them, in many cases successfully. The practice of such healings fades out very rapidly after the Pentecostal period, but it still remained within the life and experience of the Christian fellowship through the centuries, and according to the exhortation of St. James is still practised,—"is any among you sick, let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." (James 5:14.)

To the real Christian believer the healing power of Jesus does not mean that all His followers possess His power—"Greater things than these shall ye do" may mean anything. Certainly the church never essayed to do greater things than her Master. He was the Son of God with power from on High. We are sons of God only by adoption in Him, and our best efforts fall far short of His perfection. This is illustrated in His own lifetime, on no less an occasion than at the Transfiguration when the disciples at the foot of the mount were unable to heal an epileptic child though with all faith and in His name they did their utmost (Matt. 17:14-20).

Jesus was in possession of a power which He felt within Himself having its source in God and which sent healing and strength, like a flood stream, through the soul and body of those to whom He addressed Himself. God, who can forgive sin, can also cut the entail of disease and give healing to those who ask it in faith, and we must all learn to pray more for ourselves and for one another, to exercise more faith, to trust God more implicitly and to cherish a more definite hope in the issue of His love and grace.

But above all things we must try to restore the normal order, conform our lives to His Divine will and live according to His righteous laws. In the meantime, let us also have enough faith to believe that where sickness, suffering and trial of mind or body must be borne, God can turn evil to good; and that we can, if we "grasp life's nettle" in the spirit of the Master ourselves, glorify God, that the Son of God may be glorified thereby.

Veteran Prizes Old Rusty Drum

WINDSOR, N. S., Sept. 1. — Money cannot buy the old bass drum located in Jack Munro's tailor shop after being "lost" for about 15 years.

It is the drum that Munro beat as he saw the famous 8th Highlanders of Nova Scotia bring glory to Canada at the memorable battles of Vimy Ridge and Passchendaele in the Great War. The strings are rusted now, but it still brings back the battle light to Jack's eyes as he strums snatches of tunes to which the kilted gallants marched to victory. Boldly emblazoned on the old drum, the blue, gold and red crest of the 8th still stands out.

Jack is seldom able to come down to his shop now and his wife looks after the customers. She unearthed the big drum in the back office, and it now is the most prized treasure in the Munro home. "All the money in Canada could not buy it," said Mrs. Munro.

Lakefield

The fire brigade was called out on Wednesday afternoon about 2.30 for a grass fire which menaced the home of Mrs. C. D. Crawford. The cedar hedge was reported as having taken fire, but while speedy action saved it, there was a close call. Grass fires in a dry season like this are to be dreaded.

Owing to the date of the Lakefield Fair conflicting with the regular meeting of the Women's Institute, the meeting of the Institute will be held on Wednesday, September 5. The program is health, with Mrs. E. S. Kelsey as convenor, with Mrs. O. E. Kingdon.

The Lakefield Fair will be the premier event of the second week in September, being held this year on September 11th and 12th, which is two weeks earlier than usual.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Aug. 31.—(CP)—Mrs. Keith Miller, whose flying exploits in America included the breaking of the women's transcontinental record between New York and Los Angeles, will pilot an aeroplane in the England-Australia race next October. The assistant pilot will be Mrs. Neil Ferguson.

Mrs. Miller was among the first women to fly over the route of the race from England to Australia.

Obituary

MRS. JOHN FALLIS

MILLBROOK, Sept. 1.—(Examiner Correspondence).—The death of Mary Whitfield, in her eighty-fifth year, which sad event removed one of the oldest residents of the community, occurred on Tuesday, following some years of ill health the past spring and summer especially having been a period of severe suffering.

Deceased was the eldest daughter of the late William Whitfield and Sarah Mulligan, pioneer settlers in Cavan, and was born and brought up at the family homestead north of the village, practically her entire life having been spent in the village and vicinity.

A faithful member of the former Methodist, and later of the United churches Mrs. Fallis was a sincere Christian, bearing her long illness with fortitude and patience, and with hope and faith undimmed by trial and suffering. Predeceased by her husband, John Fallis, who died sixteen years ago, the immediate surviving relatives include one step-son, Weston C., living at Millbrook; four sons, Austin, of Ballyduff; Fred W. on the homestead, Fallis Line; Howard, of Rochester; and Arthur, of Fallis Line; also one daughter, Mrs. Herbert Ball (Winnifred), also residing on the Fallis Line. One brother, Joshua Whitfield, of Millbrook, also survives, and previously deceased were two sisters, Mrs. Hamilton Kennedy, and Mrs. W. J. Gardiner; and one brother, John, who lived at Millbrook. There are fifteen grandchildren, and four great grandchildren.

In addition to being a faithful and greatly-loved mother to her own family, Mrs. Fallis filled the position of a mother also to her grandchild, Wilma Fallis, Reg. N., now of Toronto. The funeral on Thursday, at 2.30 p.m., from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. H. Ball, Fallis Line, was largely attended, Rev. Archer L. Sisoe, B.A., pastor of St. Andrew's United Church, having charge of the service.

The pall-bearers were six grandsons, Melville Ball, Kenneth Fallis, Arnold Fallis, Marshal Fallis, Lloyd and Eric Fallis. There were many beautiful floral tributes. Interment was beside her husband in Gardiner's cemetery.

Friends from many outside points, including Peterborough, Bethany, Toronto, Lifford, Rochester, and other places were present for the funeral.

RUSSIA GIVING UP COMMUNISM

Former U. S. Envoy Observes Trend to Western System.

MODIFIED SOCIALISM.

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Sept. 1. — Dr. Alfred J Pearson, scholar and former U. S. minister to Poland, who recently visited Russia, yesterday informed President Roosevelt that Russia is turning from communism towards socialism and re-shaping its government along lines similar to those of western countries.

Dr. Pearson said:

"There is no real communism in Russia at this time; there is a form of socialism.

"I should say they are succeeding in Russia to the degree that they are returning to bourgeoise life, to the ways of government, and the manner of living in the western world."

EXPERT ON RUSSIA

Dr. Pearson, dean of the College of Liberal Arts at Drake University in Iowa, made an extended visit to Russia in 1932, inspecting the collectivized farms, the newly developed manufacturing plants, and conditions in town and cities.

From 1924 to 1926, Dr. Pearson was minister to Poland, and for the subsequent four years he served as minister to Finland.

When he went to Russia this year Dr. Pearson said, the most striking change was the improvement in the economic standards of the people and the changes being made with government approval in the ways of living.

SAW FOR HIMSELF

He said he had a good opportunity to observe things in 1932 because he did not rely upon the official guides but went and saw things for himself. He added:

"Conditions were deplorable. People had very little to eat; they were practically on rations. I never saw such a sad-looking lot. The stores had virtually no consumers' goods—perhaps a little meat or bread—and even this scanty supply was quickly exhausted.

"This year the stores were well stocked. They had garments, groceries, meats and articles like butter. Of course prices were extremely high, but the stores were crowded. Goods were passing over the counter, and the people seemed to be more contented.

"I think the change is due to the fact that they are giving the individual an opportunity to keep or sell a larger quantity of what he produces. The morale is better."

SOUTH LAKE.

Miss Edna McIlmoyle entertained a number of young folks at a birthday party Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hubbel of South Lake. The evening was spent in games and music. Edna received a lovely lot of gifts, for which she thanked her friends. After a social time was spent, lunch was served.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Sleep returned home on Monday after spending some weeks visiting relatives in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hubbell are moving from South Lake to Norwood, having sold their farm to Mr. Gordon and Archie Hubbel of Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Miss Stella McIlmoyle spent the week-end visiting her sister, Miss Edna McIlmoyle of South Lake.

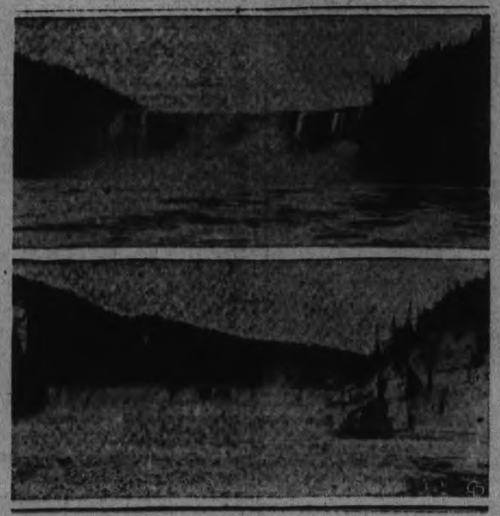
WATER FALLS IN FAR NORTH CONTAIN POTENTIAL POWER

Development Would Civilize Land Now Barren — Government Engineers Reveal Powerful Flow Within Reach of Cities—On Hay River, Alberta.



Falls on the Hay River, northern Alberta, from which could be delevoped immense power for industrial expansion of the north, according to government surveys. Above, Louise Falls; lower, Alexandria Falls.

By T. B. WINDROSS
(Central Press Canadian Writer)

EDMONTON, Sept. 1. — Recent developments in the mineral areas of the sub-Arctic and the prospect of still further discoveries of rich mineral deposits within the Arctic circle itself, have brought the question of natural resources in Canada's northern territories into the limelight of public notice. The exploitation of the last great undeveloped portion of the North American continent has taken on new interest.

There are sufficient resources of great potential value in the northland to make the regions beyond the tree line look attractive and amenable to development.

Rich Power Possibilities

In the sub-Arctic sections of the Northwest Territories resources such as the oil wells at Fort Norman, the deposits of copper ore along the Coppermine river, and remarkably rich radium pitchblende and other mineral deposits on the shores of Great Bear Lake, are illustrations of the increasing value of the northern hinterland to the dominion. The country once regarded as a wilderness without use or economic value, except for exploitation of the fur trade, is now regarded as a rich possession and an inheritance to the Canadian people of growing wealth and importance.

One important factor in the future development of the sub-Arctic is its abundant resources of potential hydro-electric power.

The northland is cut up into lakes and rivers, many of the latter rapid and turbulent, splendid streams for the production of electric energy to carry on mining operations or solve the transportation problems confronting settlers of the north.

On at least three of the big northern rivers there are falls and rapids that rival in potential power some of the streams and falls now harnessed to electric generators.

Deep Falls Revealed

One of these streams is the Hay river, which flows rapidly from its source near the British Columbia border, for three hundred and fifty miles across Alberta and the Northwest Territories, emptying into Great Slave lake at its southern extremity.

Almost four hundred feet wide, the stream plunges over a limestone edge in a sheer drop of 106 feet at its upper falls, known as Alexandra Falls. There is a head of 140 feet of water at the brink of the falls. There is an ordinary minimum flow of 400 cubic feet per second and a maxmum flow of 1,500 feet per second. The river drains a basin of 19,200 square miles in area and its potential power production, without storage, is 20,000 horsepower, The minimum power production being 5,100 horsepower, according to engineers of the dominion hydrometric bureau.

Second Site

One mile farther down the river again tumbles over a limestone ledge in what is known as Louise Falls. These falls are not as impressive as Alexandra Falls, but they have an added volume of potential hydro-electric power going to waste for want of development.

The river narrows at Louise Falls; the head of water tumbling over the ledge is 52 feeet and the drop 42 feet, with an ordinary minimum flow of 400 cubic feet to the second and a maximum flow of 1,800 feet per second. The possible hydro-electric power development of these falls is given by hydrometric engineers as 3,500 horsepower, with a minimum of 1,900 horsepower.

TANNERS BEAT CLERKS 8 TO 7

Victory Gives Hidemen Right to Meet Elgin for Hastings Honors.

CLOSE STRUGGLE.

HASTINGS, Sept. 1. (Examiner oCrrespondence).—In a nip and tuck battle on Friday night the Tanners nosed the Clerks out by an 8 to 7 score. The win gives the Tanners two straight and the right to meet Elgin in the finals of the local softball league.

The Tanners jumped into the lead in the first inning on a base on balls, a single and Hahn's triple, coming in a minute later on an overthrow, to give them three runs; they added another pair in the second on two bad errors on the part of Clerks. An error played a big part in the two runs they garnered in the sixth. Hahn, ace twirler of the Tanners, was not as effective in the second win as he was on Monday night. He was nicked for nine safeties, issued two walks and fanned a pair.

Outside of the first two innings, Whitred for the Clerks, held the hard hitting Tannery crew to four hits in the last five inings.

"Doc" Doug. Hay, manager of the Clerks informed The Examiner after the game that he would enter a protest on a decision of Umpire L. B. Scriver on Beavis at the plate. The ball was deflected off the catcher towards the crowd and Beavis attempted to score from third but catcher "Curly" Scriver had recovered the ball and got it on him and the 'Ump' promptly called him out. The Clerks claim it was a blocked ball.

The umpires in these games receive nothing for their services and as this is the first year of softball in Hastings there is bound to be infraction of the rules, and running around with a rule book in the hip pocket is not going to make the umpires' free gratis job any easier or improve the game.

The line-ups:

FLOOR COLLAPSES IN NEW STRUCTURE

ing. Flags were still hanging from the high rafters, and the piano used by Moncrieffs' orchestra stood in the shadow of a corner about fifteen feet away.

This platform was actually at the edge of the floor of the main part of the barn which was completed last year, and the floor of the new annex dropped several feet to a lower level. It was an ideal arrangement for a dance. The floor was of smooth lumber, presenting a space of 36 by 48 feet. Incidentally the dimensions of the main barn are 86 by 40 feet.

Hospitable Arrangements

Mr. Kerr had spared no pains to make the evening an enjoyable one for his neighbors. The barn was gaily decorated and brightly lighted, and on the platform the balloons in all colors of blue, pink, yellow, red, had been blown up and left in a big box on the platform for distribution. They were numbered, and prizes were to be given to the holders of the lucky numbers. But the balloons were not used. They were still in the big open compartment early this morning, just as they had been when the crowd rushed toward the platform at the southeast corner of the new annex, and the floor sank suddenly beneath them as the big timber beam supporting cracked under the weight, turning in the flash of a moment the pleasure of the dance into consternation and swift fear.

The possibilities of more serious injury were apparent as the wide open space in the floor was viewed early this morning. Had the piano been at that corner it would have rolled down the funnel-side of the opening causing even more serious injuries, and probably worse, than those which were suffered

Some Dresses Ruined

Many others than those listed above were hurt in the fall and jumble of bodies. Some of the girls' dresses were torn and ruined. One man's trousers caught on a jagged piece of the floor, and he hung head down until he was released from the dangerous position.

Mrs. Wesley Northey was carried out of the building on a door, and with the others who were painfully injured was taken to Mr. Wilson's residence. Dr. G. Raymore Scott of Peterborough and Dr. George N. Earle of Omemee were called. They attended to the immediate needs of the injured and in the meantime Mrs. Northey was taken to Peterborough in an ambulance.

Glasses worn by Miss Reta Darling were broken in the hurling of bodies to the cellar, and the shattered glass cut her face Miss Leeson of Havelock had formerly lived in that part of Smith township and was visiting friends in the neighborhood.

Mr. Kerr and Mr. Wilson did everything possible for the relief and comfort of the injured.

KNOWS WHERE BIG TUNA FISH HIDES

Record Season Along Nova Scotia's South Fishing Banks.

WHITE POINT BEACH, N. S., September 1. — (C.P.) — Captain Joe Penney, experienced guide who knows the habitat of monster tuna and who "jigs" the barbs for tourists coming from afar to experience the thrill of catching the biggest fish in the world, is about to put away his gear for the season, reflecting that "it wasn't such a bad catch, after all."

Thomas Howell, Chicago financier, has sailed away in his big yacht Thalia after Captain Joe led him to a 966-pounder off Mersey Point. It was the biggest horse mackerel ever caught with line and hook.

The guide doesn't pose for cameramen when he brings back the monsters. He has not the time for one thing, he says, for once ashore he must get ready to take out another tourist party awaiting his services. And, anyway, Captain Penny figures hooking tuna is all in the days work,and he would rather stand in the background unhonored and unsung.

He has not as yet figured out what tonnage of fish he has hauled out of Liverpool Bay this summer, but it runs well up into hundreds of tons. The skipper and his father, Captain William Penney, have conducted one or two successful parties to the fishing grounds nearly every day and have treated them to the thrills of a lifetime. Thomas Howell played one of the fish for three days, and it towed his small launch for 200 miles before the game fighter surrendered and was pulled on board.

Other sportsmen have had battles just as exciting but not quite as long lived.

A few days after Howell caught his mammoth fish, the Captain took out a party of eager hunters who landed three giants nearly breaking the record. They weighed 933, 27 and 492 pounds. The biggest was only 23 pounds under Howells catch

Included in the party were: H. A. Anderson of Florida, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Cadis of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. George Sazon of Short Hills, N.J.

Then all summer long fishermen who earn their livelihood from the sea have been harpooning big schools of these monster fish. Up the shore at Hubbards Cove, Richard Coolen, and his brothers allied with him in the fishery, have established a pound. Their order to assistants who net the giants is "bring em back alive." Here they keep them hemmed in and when prices on the Boston market start rising they haul them up and prepare for the kill.

Weddings

OLVER—BRAY
The wedding was solemnized quietly by the Rev. J. E. J. Millyard, on Thursday afternoon, at the parsonage of George street United Church, of Lawrence Wesley Olver of Smith township and Louise Bray of East Emily.

After a short honeymoon trip, Mr. and Mrs. Olver will live in Smith township.

SHAW—NORTHEY
A lovely wedding took place at two o'clock this afternoon, at Murray Street Baptist Church, when Zelda Elizabeth Northey, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aldus Northey, of Anson street, was united in marriage to Mr. Fred Shaw of Peterborough, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shaw of Brantford.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. H. Sutcliffe.

Baskets of pink and white gladioli and ferns and palms decorated the pulpit platform and baptistry. The guest pews were marked off with white satin ribbon.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a beautiful gown of white French Jacquard lace, with a slight train Flaring from the knees was a froth of white net and the jacquette of lace had a Queen Anne collar and long sleeves.

A veil of white embroidered silk tulle was arranged in coronet fashion, with a bandeau of orange blossoms that widened to a wreath at the back of the head.

Satin slippers of white satin and faille, with pale flesh hose and white kid gloves, were worn.

The bride's only ornament was a pearl necklace and she carried a bouquet of golden Talisman roses, showered with lily of the valley and narrow white satin ribbons.

The bridesmaid, Miss Irene Grills of Belleville, wore a dainty frock of pale blue taffeta. Double frills edged the skirt and made tiny epaulettes over the shoulders. A sash of pink velvet matched a pink velvet turban, pink faille slippers and pink lace mittens. Miss Grills carried a bouquet of pink Ophelia roses.

The best man was Mr. Robert Hartley of Peterborough, formerly of Brantford. Ushers were Mr. Fred Ash and Mr. Walker Jones.

Mr. Arthur Collison, L.A.B., A.D.C.M., played the Wedding March and also played "I Love You Truly," during the signing of the register.

After the ceremony, dainty buffet refreshments were served at the home of ths bride's parents. Forty guests were present and catering was in charge of Messrs. Hooper and Sons. The bride's table was done with a lace cloth, vases of pink and white gladioli and asters, and pink candles in silver holders Directly above the cake, suspended from the chandelier, was a large white bell bordered deeply with pink flowers.

Later, Mr. Shaw and his bride left by motor for a honeymoon trip through New York State to Lake Placid and back by way of the Adirondacks, the State of Vermont and the Province of Quebec. They will live in Peterborough.

The bride travelled in a swagger suit of navy silk crepe, with blouse of navy and white taffeta, blue hat and blue accessories.

ROUTLY—SUTHERLAND
The Salvation Army Temple was the scene at two o'clock this afternoon of an interesting wedding ceremony, witnessed by many of the friends of the contracting parties, both of whom are prominent in the work of the local Corps.

Attired in the natty navy blue uniforms of the Army, Songster Secretary Gladys May Sutherland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Sutherland of 544 Bethune street, became the bride of Bandmaster Robert Gerald Routly, eldest son of Mrs. Ida M. Routly and the late Robert Routly.

The ceremony was solemnized by Adjutant Neil Warrender.

Color in the floral decorations was provided by a quantity of beautiful gladioli, arranged on the pulpit platform, and the dainty corsage bouquets of red roses worn by the bride and her attendant, Songster Jean Cox.

The bridegroom was attended by his brother, Assistant Band Secretary Ronald Routly.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and her entry was signalized by music played by the Temple Band, which also played the "Gladsome Melody" during the signing of the register, and a bright march at the conclusion.

According to the tradition Army ceremony for weddings, the service was opened and closed with solemn prayers, Bible readings and song. During the signing of the register, the Songster Brigade rendered the benediction, "Lord Bless Thee and Keep Thee."

Mrs. S. J. Richardson presided at the organ.

Afterwards, a reception attended by only the immediate relatives, was held at the home of the bride's parents. Later, Mr. Routly and his bride left for a motor honeymoon trip, the latter wearing a rose beige ensemble, with three-quarter length coat, brown hat and accessories.

On their return, they will live on Douglas avenue.

FRANCE IS PINNING HER HOPES ON SAAR REMAINING NEUTRAL

Fears Union With Germany Will Stir Nazi Ambitions Too Deeply.

MAY MEAN NEW WAR

(By Melvin K. Whiteleather, Associated Press Staff Writer.)

PARIS, Sept. 1. — (A.P.) — The unofficial Press Saar Committee fears that a union of the Saar and Germany will stir Nazi ambitions so deeply that another European war might be the consequence.

Acquisition of the valley by Germany might be followed by efforts to regain Alsace and Lorraine, the French committee is saying as it draws its campaign to a close.

Saar residents are being advised to vote to remain virtually an independent state governed by the League of Nations. The French, openly, at least, manifest no desire to own the Saar, but they want it to remain as it is—a buffer between it and its old enemy.

Under the slogan "Let the Saar decide for itself in a free election," the committee has issued an appeal to all eligible voters, those who were residents of the Valley, June 28, 1919, to register for the plebiscite.

Keeping Out.

Meanwhile the government, officials say, "is keeping its hands off" the plebiscite except to maintain a watch to "see that the voting is honest and that the real sentiments of the people are expressed."

The French Saar committee is a private organization which maintains modest headquarters in the business section of Paris

Officials say the committee represents the only French effort to influence the plebiscite. Premier Doumergue is honorary president of the committee, and prominent Frenchmen are members of the Board of Directors. Committeemen say most of the members are residents of the Saar.

Despite 1 years of economic control over the Saar, in the course of which hundreds of millions of Francs have been invested, the French concede the Saar will not vote to join France politically.

"Our best propaganda under these circumstances," a foreign spokesman said, "is to keep quiet. Saar leanings are Germanic in culture and language, and we have no intention of trying to convince them otherwise. There is no propaganda budget, and no speeches or pamphlets are pouring into the Saar from France."

STAMP CORNER
By M. A. BESSEY

NEW CANADA STAMP.

Today we illustrate the new two-cent stamp of Canada, issued to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Province of New Brunswick.

The first day of issue was August 16th. which coincided with celebrations being held in New Brunswick in commemoration of the anniversary.

The design portrays the original seal of the Province of New Brunswick, and the color is a brownish red.

The philatelic agency of the postoffice department at Ottawa will doubtless have to suffer much scathing condemnation from stamp collectors, due to the fact that they were unable to send out notices far enough in advance of the first date of issue of this new stamp to allow all interested collectors to make arrangements for securing their first-day covers.

The department is really not to blame in this respect. They would have been only too glad to send out notices well in advance of the first day of issue had the circumstances permitted.

As we understand the situation, pressure was brought to bear from outside quarters, to have the stamp issued in August, instead of this fall, for which time we believe it was originally scheduled. Further, the whole design of the stamp was changed from that which was planned in the first place.

From this it may be understood that the postoffice department really did not have any opportunity to notify collectors of the first day of issue. They were given such short notice that they were lucky, indeed, to have the stamp ready by August 16th. To further add to their troubles some mechanical difficulties arose at the last minute, which necessitated the destruction of all stamps printed up to that time, and it was necessary to have men at work twenty-four hours a day during the two or three days previous to August 16th in order to have sufficient stamps ready for the first day sales at St. John, New Brunswick.

To the best of our knowledge these new stamps were on sale on August 16th at only St. John, New Brunswick, and Ottawa, Ont. The quantity of first-day covers at either city was very small, due to the limited publicity the stamps had been given previous to their release.

The new Irish stamp illustrated above was issued on July 27th to commemorate the G.A.A. Jubilee. The illustration portrays the figure of a player of the national game of hurley. The stamps will be on sale until the end of this year.

A new airmail design has just reached us from Italy, the color being gray-black. The design appears somewhat futuristic, and we wonder if the further new issues of Italy and her colonies are going to eventually emulate the philatelic 'status of Russia, whose stamps are today on the black books of many collectors.

Undoubtedly Italy has many historical occasions whose anniversaries may quite legitimately be commemorated by the appearance of a new issue of postage stamps. But, if Italy continues to include among such commemorative issues stamps which have a face value approximating two to five dollars or more, she is bound to lose a great many of her philatelic adherents, without whose assistance the majority of these new issues would prove a financial loss.

APPLE EXPORT UNDER CONTROL

Board of Growers Will Prevent Over-Supply—Shortage on British Market.

LICENSES NEEDED

OTTAWA, Sept. 1. (C.P.) — Export of fresh apples and pears has been placed under a control board of growers, it was announced yesterday by Minister of Agriculture, Robert Weir. The Board will regulate the flow and quality of fruits to foreign markets under authority of the new Marketing Act.

The following were appointed to the board: L. F. Burrows, Ottawa, who will be the chairman; Manning Ells, Port Williams, N.S. V. B. Leonard, Clarence, N. S., P. W. Hodgetts, Toronto, and O. W. Hembling, Oyama, B.C. Its office will be in Ottawa.

The powers of the Export Board will include regulation of the movement of apples and pears to any country, and it may prohibit shipment of any quantity, size or quality of fruit. All fruit growers may be registered by the Board and all exporters will be required to obtain a license. Export licenses may be obtained from the Board at its agencies at Kentville, N.S., Toronto and Keowna, B.C.

Under the plan, as approved by the Federal Cabinet the Board may cover its expenses by assessments against fruit exporters.

The Provinces of Nova Scotia, Ontario and British Columbia will be affected by the Export Board, being heavy purchasers of apples and pears. During the last two years, the average annual export total of apples and pears was 2,000,000 barrels.

It is anticipated that over-supplies and shortages of Canadian fruit on the United Kingdom market will be prevented and that better prices will be obtained, by the Export Board. It will also attempt to raise the general standard of Canadian fruit exported. The main purpose of the board will be to regulate the flow of fruit to the export demand.

NEW DISCOVERIES BY SPECTROSCOPE

Instrument Found Best for Analyzing Vitamine A.

(By Howard W. Blakeslee, (Associated Press Science Editor.)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., August 30.—(A.P.)—To the eye of the spectroscope it would take a pool of cod liver oil 300 feet deep to look the same as one paper-thin sheet of pure vitamin D., the stuff which made the oil famous.

This comment on the super-sensitivity of the spectroscope as an analytical instrument, was made to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology conference on Spectroscopy in a paper sent by Dr. R. A. Morton of the University of Liverpool.

The Englishman is an authority on methods of analyzing the potency of vitamins by the spectroscopic light. In his absence his paper was handled by Professor Wallace R. Brodie of Ohio State University.

For vitamin D it appears, the spectroscope should not be used except with the pure vitamin, named Calciferol, which is 40,000 times more potent than cod liver oil. This is because in the oil, or any substance containing Vitamin D, no matter how clear to the eye colors which register only in ultra-violet light mask the "lines" which reveal the potency of the vitamin. Only "biological tests," that is experiments on living animals, are safe for testing the strength of Vitamin D preparations. But for Vitamin A, the report said, the spectroscope is the best method of analysis.

Professor Brode commented that the evidence of the spectroscope gives reason to believe that there is more than one kind of Vitamin A. The spectroscope, he explained, indicates that there are probably several massive groupings of molecules, all very similar, each of them carrying the medicinal or physiological effects of Vitamin A.

The spectroscope, by its remarkable precision, shows the existence of these apparently different groups but they are so close together that there is at present no way of separating them to find out whether one group may be more potent than another.

FAMILY NOT YET EVICTED

Sheriff Stays Execution Over the Week-end—House Picketed.

UNEMPLOYED ON HAND.

The court order for the eviction of William McIlwain, his wife and family from 249 Princess street still remains to be executed.

Unable to find a landlord who will accept relief rent, the family advertised in The Examiner for assistance. They seek a house owner whose "Christian principles" will enable him to help them in their plight.

The eviction order was effective August 15, but execution has been delayed up to the present.

A number of the unemployed picketed the house throughout yesterday in anticipation of a visit from the Sheriff's officer. When The Examiner called late in the afternoon, two pickets remained, although it was stated there had been as many as twenty pickets earlier in the day.

The pickets stated they had no intention of interfering with the Sheriff in the execution of his duty, but expressed an aversion towards the eviction order being executed by the bailiff. They were on hand, they said, to watch the interests of the McIlwain family, and if any trouble should develop one of the pickets suggested, "we could get two hundred unemployed here inside of twenty minutes."

Sheriff F. J. A. Hall thought it unlikely that the eviction order would be executed until Tuesday morning. He was not desirous of putting the family out of the house, he stated, with Sunday and a holiday so close at hand. If the owner of the property or her agents insisted however, he said, he would be forced to execute the order forthwith.

If you buy out of town, and I buy out of town and all our neighbors buy out of town, what in thunder will become of our town? Ever think about it?

BLACK AND WHITE HAS PLACE IN FALL MODE

By LISBETH

Black and white is ushered into the autumn mode in all the late showings of frocks.

Miss Allen uses a ruffled collar of coral chiffon with the simple black crepe frock, left, showing the vogue for contrast, but deviating from the black and white union. A coral buckle at the waist gives a spot of matching coral on the dress.

Did you ever see a monogram walking? Of course you have, for they are more or less used on blouses, handbags, etc. That English beauty of the screen, Lillian Harvey, is displaying her monogram on the satin lining of her luxurious ermine wrap, center, the same being banded with silver fox and worn over a gown of white.

Just Between Us Women

A daily chat with Examiner neighbors conducted by Anne Wilcox

Peaches are on the market! They are splendid in quality but far from plentiful. The very cold winter played havoc with may trees and there will be no bountiful baskets of peaches at low prices. Indeed, the wholesalers suggest immediate purchase for winter use because the season will be short.

* * * * * * *

Peaches are so delicious and appetizing that they should be carried through the winter menus in every interesting form. Modern dietitians have added a fine peach jam to the canned and pickled methods of preserving the fruit.

* * * * * * *

Long ago, it was impossible to have peach jam or jelly because peaches are deficient in that jelly-making substance called pectin, and will not jell no matter how long they are boiled. By using refined, concentrated pure fruit pectin in accurately balanced recipes a perfect peach jam is easily made. The fruit is fully ripe, and is boiled such a short time that not one bit of its golden color or flavor is lost.

* * * * * * *

RIPE PEACH JAM

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit. 1 cup bottled fruit pectin. 7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar. METHOD: To prepare fruit, peel about 3 pounds fully ripe peaches. Pit and grind or chop very fine. If peaches lack flavor or tartness, add the juiceof 1 lemon. Measure sugar and prepared fruit, tightly packed, into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove kettle from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just 5 minutes to cool jam slightly to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin at once. Makes about 11 six-ounce jars.

Weddings

MONK—MILBY

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at two o'clock this afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Milby of Park street south, when their daughter, Christine Ferguson Milby, became the bride of Mr. Lionel A. Monk, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Monk of Braidwood avenue.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. A. T. Barr under an arch of evergreens banked with gladioli and other summer flowers.

The bride entered on the arm of her father to the strains of the wedding march, played by Mr. Charles Shaw, general manager A. Wander, Limited. She wore a lovely gown of white silk crepe, ankle-length, with lace yoke and short puff sleeves of lace.

A long veil of white embroidered tulle was caught with orange blossoms. White kid slippers, white silk hose and long white silk gloves were worn, and the bride carried a beautiful bouquet of white and pale pink carnations and the new Peter Pan roses of deep orange shade, with white heather sent from Scotland and gypsophila.

The bridesmaid, Miss Jean Mackness, was in pink organdie with white kid slippers and white hose and long white gloves. Her bouquet was of pink and white carnations and gypsophila.

Mr. Thomas Monk was groomsman for his brother.

After the ceremony, buffet refreshments were served from a table draped with a fine crocheted lace cloth, hand-made, centered by the bride's cake and decorated with pink candles and silver holders and vases of pink and white gladioli.

The bridal party was assisted in receiving by the parents of the bridegroom. Mrs. Milby was in georgette coin spot crepe in black and white, a grey hat and black shoes. Her corsage bouquet was of pink and white carnations and gypsophila. Mrs. Monk wore Lido blue crepe with matching hat and shoes, and corsage of red and white carnations.

Mr. Monk and his bride left on the afternoon train for a honeymoon trip to Toronto and points west. The bride travelled in a blue ensemble with navy hat, black shoes and white gloves and purse.

On their return, they will live on Park street south in their new home.

Beautiful new season fashions are engaging our attention and especially smart frocks that can be worn now as well as for fall.

Exceedingly attractive is today's model and a style which will lend itself to a number of delightful fabrics.

The original in black and white dull crepe, had orange buttons for a dash of contrast.

It's a very simple process to make this slender model. You'll be suprised at the short time it will take you, besides the saving in cost.

Style No. 3025 is designed for sizes 16, 18 years, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 39-inch material.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

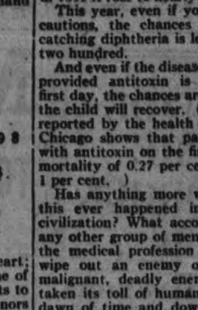
A GOOD SHIFT.

A 3-no Trumps response to an opening bid justifies showing a suit which no other response would make legitimate, knowing that game must be possible, either at one of the two suits shown or at no trumps. The shift affords partner the opportunity to choose between the three possible calls, as is nicely illustrated by the hand today.



Bidding went: South, 1-Heart; North, 2-No Trumps, showing one of two things, something like 3 hearts to a Q and better than average honors held in the hand, of poorer hearts and at least average honors; South, 3-Spades, which he knows partner will not support upon fewer than 4, including an honor; North, 4-Spades, ending the auction.

The hand was admirably played by South, obtaining maximum results. The opening lead was the 10 of clubs, which went to declarer's Ace. The 3 of trumps was led. West covered with the 8. Dummy's Ace won. The 6 fell at declarer's right. Dummy's 10 of hearts was led, finessed, and lost to West's Q.

The return lead was the natural one of the 5 of clubs, as it seemed as if East held the missing Q of clubs. The declarer won with that card. To guard against accidents, and counting upon the probability that the missing trumps were held 2-1, South led the K of spades, dropping all except the Q, without knowing which opponent held that top trump.

The Ace of hearts was led. Dummy ruffed a low heart. Dummy's K and J of clubs were led. Upon the last of those honors the declarer discarded his only diamond. Of course the holder of the top trump could have ruffed, but it would have done him no good, as South would have made the same number of tricks which he did anyway.

As West did not ruff, the declarer led a low diamond and ruffed with his 9. Dummy's last trump was employed to ruff next to last of declarer's hearts, dropping West's K of hearts. South ruffed another of dummy's diamonds, using his last trump for that purpose. That was the twelfth trick. South led his last heart, and West won the second defensive trick, by ruffing with his top trump.

As may readily be seen, neither hearts nor trumps would have been good calls. That 3-Spades, which few would dare bid on South's hand, worked wonders.

Be Beautiful

That famous "It" girl, Clara Bow, whose flaming, titian locks perfectly suit her vivacious temperament, refuses ever to sit under a hair dryer. When Clara has her short tresses shampooed, she just rubs her locks with a towel, and lets it go at that. Her hair is very thick and healthy, and she attributes its health in part to her refusal to submit it to hot air currents.

The health of the hair depends a great deal upon the condition of the papillæ and the oil sacs. And although the occasional use of a hot air current does not always harm the hair, this drying method is likely to have a detrimental effect on the hair if employed fortnightly or once a week regularly. Clara is perfectly conscious of this fact. And I only wish more of the would-be-pretties in this world were.

Blasts of hot air dry the scalp and call heavily upon the store of natural oil. And if your scalp does not exude sufficient oil to supply the normal quantity to your hair, a few hot air dryings may cause the appearance of dry, scaly dandruff on your scalp. Even if you have an excessively oily scalp, the hot air current can still prove harmful. For the blasts of hot air aren't going to make the oil glands function more normally.

Hair should always be permitted to dry naturally, if possible. This is especially simple when the hair, like Clara's is naturally curly. After such hair has been shampooed and thoroughly rinsed, all moisture should be removed with warm towels and the hair should then be tossed about with the hands until almost dry. Then, while still a bit damp, it should be combed and the natural wave pressed in.

When the hair requires careful setting and the use of a waving lotion, of course, it's a bit more difficult to let it dry naturally. In this case, all excess moisture should be removed with a warm towel, and the hair tossed about a bit with the hands. Then the waving lotion should be applied and the waves set. When the hair is fully waved, all excess lotion should be removed by pressing the ridges of the waves between the fingers with a dry linen towel. And then the hair should be allowed to dry naturally.

Freckles

Ruby: Lemon juice and diluted peroxide both make good freckle bleaches. Permit either bleach to dry on the skin, and then apply a bit of cold cream to counteract any drying effects.

Gaining Weight

John: The gaining weight course contained in my "New Figure" booklet is indeed for men as well as women. If you follow the instructions faithfully, you should be able to gain every bit of the poundage you desire.

Your Health

By DR LOGAN CLENDENING

If your child were entering school in September, 1890, the chances would have been about 1 to 10 that he or she would contract diphtheria before the year was over.

Once contracted in 1890 the chances would have been about even that the illness would have resulted in the child's death. From 1888 to 1894 the death rate in the Boston City hospital was only once below 40 per cent, and in 1892 it rose to nearly 50 per cent.

This year, even if you take no precautions, the chances of your child catching diphtheria is less than one in two hundred.

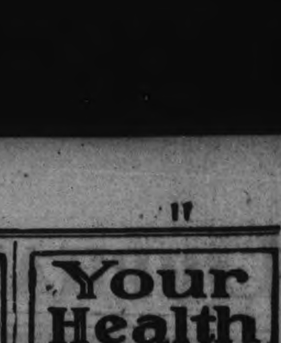
And even if the disease is contracted, provided antitoxin is given on the first day, the chances are 400 to 1 that the child will recover. (The mortality reported by the health department of Chicago shows that patients injected with antitoxin on the first day have a mortality of 0.27 per cent.—27-100 of 1 per cent.)

Has anything more wonderful than this ever happened in our modern civilization? What accomplishment of any other group of men equals this of the medical profession practically to wipe out an enemy of mankind—a malignant, deadly enemy which had taken its toll of human life since the dawn of time and down to less than fifty years ago was still as terrifying and powerful—nay, more terrifying and powerful than ever?

Nor was this any happenstance or accident—merely the ebb and flow that certain diseases have through the years. We know that such things happen. For instance, in the case of influenza, we know that the disease mysteriously disappears and will not be heard of for ten, twenty or even forty years: and then suddenly and quite as mysteriously as it went it will come again and engulf the entire population of the world.

But diphtheria was never like that. We know of it as long ago as the Babylonian Talmud, during the first century in the writing of Aretus, and continuously ever since in every country it appeared every year.

No, the conquest of it was deliberate.



1. Diphtheria death rate in New York City per hundred thousand of the population.

And its beginning is sharply in the year 1895, when antitoxin was generally introduced into practice.

In a typical city, Milwaukee, the mortality in 1890-1894 was 116 per 100,000 population. In 1931 it was 2 1-2 per same number of people, and, to show how sharp the point of the beginning of the fall was, in 1895 the significant year, one year after the mortality was 116, it was less than half of that—51.

But there is much more to the triumph. Even the incidence of the disease is cut. We said "if you take no precautions" the chances of your child's acquiring it are small. But you can and should take precautions. How will be described tomorrow.

FACTS AND FANCIES

End of Steak

So often the end of the sirloin or porterhouse steak is eventually thrown out because it is left so entirely alone at the time the steak is carved. If you will have your butcher put the end through the grinder and fit this into the steak where it was originally it will be eaten and enjoyed, particularly by the youngsters, or the oldsters whose teeth are not as good as once they were.

Butter for Sandwiches

The butter for sandwiches may be softened easily by thoroughly heating an earthen bowl and turning it over the dish of butter. It will soften the butter throughout and make it the right consistency for spreading.

Marvin Nelson Wins His Third Marathon Swim

INSIDE THE PADDOCK

BY ART MURRAY

GENERAL MANAGER Billy Woolatt inspected Thorncliffe the other day from one end of the plant to the other and pronounced everything in tip top shape for the opening one week from today. There are plenty of horses on the grounds and while there is not as much class as in previous years the racing should be keen and closely contested, as while there are no outstanding handicap performers all the cheaper ones are evenly matched.

× × ×

It seems a funny thing that all the Canadian tracks passed up this Saturday and Labor Day when they made their dates for the Fall season. These two days would have assured any racing association a profit on the meeting irrespective of what the other five days brought in. If Premier Hepburn appoints a racing commission these things will not be overlooked, and also the quality of horses will be improved. We hope that before another season rolls around this commission will be functioning in a big way.

× × ×

AFTER A FEW more weeks there will not be so many tracks operating and the horses will be more consolidated so to speak. During this past summer there has been as many as seventeen recognized tracks all running at the same time. It has the boys nearly dizzy trying to keep a line on their favorite plugs. After four weeks of racing in Toronto practically all the Canadian breds will go into winter quarters for a much needed rest. They sure earned their oats this summer due to the shortage of horses from across the line.

× × ×

It is just about time for the annual invasion of the western Canada stables as all their tracks close Labor Day and they all ship to Toronto for the Fall meetings and don't think they can't hold their own. In previous years such horses as Evelyn F. Duchess of York, George E. Miller, Yorkholme and others have come down here and swept the card. Their time may not look so good but that is due to the fact that the tracks out west are all half-milers and consequently no horse can run as fast on one of these as on a mile oval. Jockey McLaren will likely do the riding for these westerners as he comes from out around the Rockies.

TORONTO BOY RANKS THIRD AT THE FINISH

Bill Goll, Singing New Yorker, Romps Home for Second Money.

ONLY FIVE FINISHERS.

TORONTO, Sept. 1.—(CP)—Marvin Nelson, who came out of the corn country of Iowa, a lanky broad-shouldered youth, four years ago to win the world's professional swimming championship and $10,000 along with it, added another $5,000 or thereabouts to his bankroll today and looked for other fields to conquer.

Nelson's overwhelming victory in the 15-mile swim at the Canadian National Exhibition yesterday left no doubt as to his superiority over this continent's swimmers in any kind of water. The Fort Dodge giant, a lettle heavier around the waist now than when he won the first of his three victories in 1930, clambered upon the finishing barge as day-light was fading yesterday, seven hours and 46 minutes from the time he dived in with 90 other hopefuls.

Only Five Finish Race

Only four finished behind Nelson. The others found the 58-degree water too cold. Bill Goll, singing New Yorker, earned $1,500 second money when he plugged his way in wearily, 27 minutes behind Nelson, the equivalent of three-quarters of a mile in distance.

Third place and $700 in cash went to the only Torontonian to finish, Johnn Cairo, curly-haired Italian youth who proved the surprise of the race. His time was 8.45:15. Other finishers and prize winners were Dan Dembicki, East Windsor, Ont., and Bil Sadlo, Corons, N.Y., who finished fourth and fifth to $500 and $200. A sixth prize of $100 went begging.

Winner Sets Pace

Nelson set the pace from the eighth mile on when he took over the lead from Cairo after the latter had virtually swum Giani Gambi of Italy, Eli Radakovich, Duquesne, Pa., and George Young, formerly of Toronto, now of Philadelphia, all top-notchers, into defeat. The last three dropped out, Gambi after leading at two miles, Radakovich at 3½ miles and Young at six miles.

With relentless precision the huge Iowan increased his lead with every stroke in the last half of the grind and he had the 40,000 spectators—the smallest crowd since the first race seven years ago—marvelling at his ability and stamina.

Seemingly impervious to the icy water which compelled some of the competitors to quite during the first mile, Nelson plugged along never altering the 60-stroke-to-the-minute clip which he used from the outset.

Last Man In Water

It was quite dark when Goll stroked his way up to the finish line and the other three prize-winners finished in pitch darkness, only the bobbing lights of the police patrol boats giving an indication as to where they were. Some 50 persons were on hand when the last man, Sadlo, crossed the finish line.

Failure of such favorites as Young, George Blagden, Memphis, Tenn., lawyer who finished first in 1932, Gambi and a host of other lesser lights was attributed to water conditions. While the temperature registered between 56 and 60 on the surface it was at least another five degrees below the surface.

Young's Last Attempt

Young, who gained fame when he threshed his way to victory in the Catalina swim more than seven years ago and who was undoubtedly the main factor in the staging of marathon swims here, declared it was his last attempt as he recuperated on a cot in the hospital tent. His stock soared when the pre-race water temperature was announced as he was known to be at his best in cold water, but he was forced to give up after leading at the six-mile mark.

Other Canadians who gave creditable performances were Bud Platt, 218-pounder from Stratford who covered 6½ miles and was in eighth position when cramps attacked his legs; Toivo Sepalla, 19-year-old Port Arthur grocery clerk, taken out at seven miles due to the cold, and Stuart Campbell, 17-year-old Hamiltonia, who lasted for 6½ miles but suffered a cramp in his left leg.

Thrilling is a mild term to use for the forthcoming speedboat races to be held at Toronto for the world's championship in the 225-metre class. Five U.S. boats and four specially designed Canadian crafts will churn the waters of Lake Ontario at more than 50 miles per hour in search of the title now held by Al Schwarler of New York. A feminine driver, Mrs. Florence Burnham, will be among the most feared competitors. Among the Canadian will be Harry "Red" Foster and his Atom (TOP) and Little Miss Canada II., driven by Tom Wilson of Ingersoll and a mystery boat designed by Bert Hawker, designer of Harnsworth trophy racers. Red Foster is shown UPPER RIGHT and Bert Hawker LOWER RIGHT. The races will be run before thousands at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Williams-Kitchen Likely Open Series

Jack (Chief) Williams and Russ Kitchen are practically certain choice for the pitching tasks here Monday when the C.O.B.L. five-game playoff series opens between Belleville and Peterborough at three o'clock in Riverside Park. A. Belleville despatch states either Williams or Smith will start, with Casey in reserve. This really amounts to saying the Chief will start—and most likely finish, also. Knotty Lee is banking on Kitchen for the first game, and will keep Abbie Rose in reserve. The biggest crowd of the season is expected to take in this holiday fixture to cheer the Petes on to an opening series victory.

The team that takes the first win has a big advantage. It means they must then win only two of their remaining four games to take the title. It means, also, that if a fourth game is necessary, a winning hurler—the one who pitched the first game—is available then. And it means a great deal in its psychological effect on the rival players. This promises to be a colorful, close playoff series between rivals of years' standing, the Nats and Petes.

Women's Marathon Will Start To-Day

TORONTO, Sept. 1. (CP).—If the weatherman warms up the waters of Lake Ontario, mermaids of United States and Canada today will splash their way over a five-mile course at the Canadian National Exhibition for the women's professional marathon swimming crown.

Twenty-four of the continent's fastest women swimmers will fight for the $2,000 that goes to the victor at the end of the five miles. The swim will start at two o'clock.

Leah Riley of Keansburg, N.Y., who has competed in every swim at the exhibition and has been in the money several times, will compete again this year. Although she has just missed first place on three occasions, Mrs. Evelyn Armstrong of Detroit will be back again, determined to do better than second.

Ruth Downing, Toronto's popular swimmer, and Janet Shearer of Port Credit, Ont., have entered the race. Miss Shearer will start a strong favorite.

Red Wings Break Leafs' Six-Game Winning Streak After Fifteen-Inning Tight Duel

(By the Associated Press)

Rochester's Red Wings have earned a marathon victory over Toronto and pulled up to within 2½ games of Newark Bears, International League leaders.

With Pete Appleton anad Sheriff Fred Blake going the route in a great pitching duel, the Red Wings and Leafs battled through 15 innings last night before Paul Florence, Rochester catcher, nicked Blake for a home run over the right field fence to break up the ball game and give the Wings a 3-2 victory.

Appleton turned in his best pitched game of the year as he limited Toronto to five hits over the long route and struck out nine. Blake fanned 10 but was solved for as many hits.

The only other game of the day saw Buffalo Bisons turn back Montreal 8-5 and remain in the race for a play-off berth. The Bisons jumped on Chad Kimsey and drove him from the box with a four run rally in the second and pounded Lauri Myllykangas steadily for the next two innings to put the game away and draw to within two games of fourth place Albany. Fabian Kowalik was nicked for two runs in the first and then retired in the sixth when the Royals scored three times but Johnny Wilson held the Canadians safe the rest of the way. Ollie Carnegie contributed three hits to Buffalo's cause, including a home run.

All other clubs enjoyed an open date.

GIANTS KEEP WELL IN FRONT NATIONAL RACE

Dean Cops His 23rd Victory as Cards and Cubs Deadlocked on Second Rung.

TERRYMEN WIN OUT.

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, Jr. (Associated Press Sports Writer)

Chicago Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals, leading pursuers of New York Giants in the National League pennant chase, have begun a series of their own to decide the holder of second place in the standing, and the first indications are that the Giants may be the ones to profit by it.

The New York club was no worse off to-day than before although it had two rivals on even terms instead of just one second-place enemy. While the Cards were taking a 3-1 decision from Chicago behind the able Dizzy Dean yesterday, the Giants edged out a 2-1 victory over Brooklyn, increasing their lead to 5½ games.

That triumph, incidentally, put the Giants in a position where if they win half their remaining 28 games, the Cards or the Cubs will have to capture 20 out of 29 to tie them at the finish.

Two pitchers were the big factors in the day's decisions. Fred Fitzsimmons continued to be 'poison' to the Dodgers by beating them for the fifth time this season. He granted only five hits and a wild throw by Gus Mancusco played a big part in depriving him of a shutout. With Van Mungo hurling Brooklyn led up to the seventh. The Giants tied the count in that inning and won in the eighth when Joe Moore doubled and Sam Leslie's error let him come home.

Dizzy Dean was practically the whole show for St. Louis as he completely shattered a 'jinx' that had beset him for over a year. He hadn't beaten the Cubs since July 30, 1933, when he fanned 17 of them for a modern major league record, but he did a thorough job of it yesterday, giving only six hits, striking out six, and losing a shutout when Gabby Hartnett belted a homer in the fifth. The Cards had completed their scoring in the fourth and fifth, bunching their hits effectively off Guy Bush.

The Yankees picked up a half-game in the American League race trailing Detroit by 4½ games as they turned back Washington 3-1 while the Tigers and Cleveland took a day off from their series.

The game was a mound duel between Charley Ruffing and Jack Russell most of the way but it was decided as early as the second inning when Tony Lazzeri smashed a homer behind Ben Chapman's double. Ruffing allowed only three hits up to the eighth, then the Senators bunched three more for their only run.

Defeat Whitesox, 5-2

St. Louis Browns had to go 11 innings to defeat the White Sox 3-2 in the other American League game and increase their margin over the Senators to 2½ games in the fifth place struggle. After tying the count in the ninth, they nicked Les Tietje, who went the route for Chicago, for two hits and a walk in the 11th and counted the winning run on a long fly.

Half the clubs in each league enjoyed an idle day.

(By The Associated Press)

Al Bejma, Brown—His pinch double in ninth led to tying run against White Sox and 11-inning victory

Tony Lazzeri, Yankees.—Hit homer with one on, to give Yanks victory.

Dizzy Dean, Cardinals—Limited Cubs to six hits for 23rd victory.

Fred Fitzsimmons, Giants—Beat Dodgers for fifth time, holding them to five hits.

WAIFS BEATEN BY 27-7 COUNT ONE-SIDED TILT

Whitely Again Gives Great Performance on Mound in Latter Part of Struggle.

Peterborough's hopes of a niche in the 1934 O.A.S.A. hall of fame went glimmering last night when the Orphans tangled with the Oshawa New Cleaners in the Motor City and met a disastrous defeat, when they lost by the lopsided count of 27 to 7 in a game that was a nip-and-tuck struggle for five frames, then developed into a one-sided slug-fest, with the locals being held hitless by the hurling of Adair Whiteley. This was the second game of the series, Oshawa winning here, 13 to 2.

Oshawa sent Leo Lamoureux to the mound for the first four and one-third frames, and the Orphans took to his offerings with a will, pasting out eight lusty bingles, that included two homers, a triple and a double, to take a 7 to 2 lead over the opposition. Whiteley replaced Lamoureux in the fifth with one out and two on, and retired the side, fanning one. He pitched just ten balls in the sixth to whiff the three Orphan batters, added two in the seventh, two more in the eighth and two in the last. Not one of the batters to face him reached first, and only three hit the ball, all of those popping to the infield. The Oshawa team, who had only secured three safeties off Shine up to the last of the fourth, seemed to play a different brand of ball with Whitely on the rubber, and promptly nicked the Orphan hurler in the fifth for six hits and five runs. The first two Oshawa batters to face Shine in the sixth singled, and Hefferman went to the slab. He retired the side, allowing one triple, but four more counters crossed the plate. Five hitters in the seventh walloped clean hits into the outer garden from Heffernans' throws, and Shine returned to the mound after four runs had been tallied, with two on and one out. He was hit freely, while his team-mates added to the slaughter by making three misplays. A total of eleven runs was made in the eighth, and the Motor City squad boosted their count by five more in the ninth on four hits.

The only bright spots, from a local standpoint in the tussle, outside of the determined efforts of Frankie Shine to hold the opposition, were two beautiful running catches by Tommy Miller in centre field, and smart fielding by Weese and Board.

Doc Rowden led the Oshawa hit parade, clicking for two homers, a double and two singles in seven chances. Branton, in left, hit five singles in six trips, while Cornish, at second, had a triple and three singles in six. Whiteley hit a homer also. For the Orphans, Cadd was top batter, with a homer, triple and single in four Shine had a homer and single, and Hefferman poled out a triple.

UNITED STATES BOAT TO MEET ENDEAVOR ON SEPTEMBER 15TH

Millions of Dollars Has Been Spent in Challenge and Defense of Mug.

CLOSE TESTS FINISHED.

(By Tom Horgan)

NEWPORT, R.I., Sept. 1 (AP)—With Rainbow and her skipper, Harold S. Vanderbilt, to-day rested the defense of the America's Cup, a battered silver tankard emblematic of 83 years of United States sailing supremacy. On Sept. 15 Rainbow will meet Tom Sopwith's Endeavor, the fifteenth challenger from across the seas, in the first race of a best four-out-of-seven series.

It is a bottomless trophy, literally, and perhaps figuratively, when the many millions that have poured through it in challenge and defense are considered. Rainbow received the nomination after her one-second defeat of Yankee, sailed by Charles Francis Adams, former Navy Secretary, yesterday. It was the closest finish in the history of the famous trophy, so close that those aboard Yankee were not aware they were defeated until the Boston boat's tender came alongside with a towing line to take her back to her mooring "Who won?" asked Chandler Hovey, her managing owner. And when informed, there was a hushed conference of her afterguard.

The selection committee of the New York Yacht Club named Rainbow after she had scored three victories and suffered one defeat in engagements with Yankee in the final trials. Yankee had entered the finals with eight victories to three defeats in engagements with Rainbow. But in the selection of a defender, standings are not kept as in baseball games. The committee is under instructions to select the boat it believes strongest on the date of selection.

SPORTS DAY BY DAY

Baseball, Lacrosse Soccer Softball, Bowling etc.

By C.J.P.

Yesterday afternoon, we are standing on George Street near Simcoe playing one-in-ten with a guy when another bird comes along. Maybe we should explain this one-in-ten game. It is a summer sport and is about finished for the year now. Two or more can play it if they got a little dough. Just lay maybe two bits that of the next ten cars that go by, one will have a Yankee license plate. After ten go by you either win or lose, you toss to see who gets the choice, and the guy that wins picks either the affirmative or the negative—that is, he lays maybe two bits that there will be a U.S. gas buggy in the next ten, or he says there wont. The first guy, if he loses the toss, has to take the other side. On a nice afternoon, say in July, you can sometimes cop yourself a neat little stake, or you can lose one. But it's a pleasant outdoor sport and does not require much conditioning.

• • • • • • •

Anyway, this other bird ankles up to us with a proposition as follows: He would lay even potatoes with us that Belleville takes the first play off game here Monday, providing Williams pitches for the Nats. We says sure Williams will pitch and we want at least two to one—though, privately, we're satisfied at even money. Well, after much arguing back and forth, and quoting figures and one thing and another, this bird agrees to give us five to four. We takes him for two fish and promise if we win to go as high as a finif on the Petes in the third game, regardless of the hurlers. We figure this is a good day's business and calls off the one-in-ten game.

• • • • • • •

Now, while we look for Mister K. Lee's lads to romp hrough with a win in Riverside Monday, many folks aren't so sure by any means. They point to the fact that the Petes have little luck at home this summer, and they recall that the Chief is a great money twirler, which means he goes like a tenement ablaze when there is plenty at stake. The Nats will be at full strength for this tilt and we are look ing not only for a swell scrap, but for a flock of personal arguments—all of which spell glamor and color in a playoff ball game. Unless the weather goes screwy again, Riverside—scene of many a memorable struggle—should be a hot spot for some two thousand or more customers Monday. Next game is in Belleville Wednesday.

• • • • • • •

Looks like a mighty lively September in baseball for local fans. Our seniors will be in there for a couple of weeks or so, anyway, and maybe all month. Our intermediates are battling with Bowmanville in Port Hope today to stay in the running and we kind of like their chances. Then, we have our juvenile and bantam ball teams in the O.B.A.A. running, and they should be going for a week or two at least. We sort of figure on our juveniles lasting the month. Besides, there is considerable interest shown by the citizens of this fair burg over Detroit's chances at a World Series berth. Many will wire for ducats and journey over to Henryfordsville to see the Tigers in the Big Clash if they wind up on top of the American League heap. Yeah, a large month for the spalding gentry.

New Service Cleaners of Oshawa cleaned up on our Orphans properly in the second game of their O.A.S.A. series in the Motor City last eve. We suppose the right way to break bad news is to start off gradually preparing folks, so we'll say they licked our team by several runs. Well, to be more accurate 'twas by a pretty fair margin. In fact, it was by a doggone good margin—oh, well, then, it was by a 27-7 score! Yeah, they pulled a dirty trick on us—they toyed with the Waifs. The Oshawa team started Lamoreux — last year's imported puck star—on the mound, and our Mister Shine and mates went out to hand them a trimming. Orphans were leading, 7 to 2, going into the fifth. And then came Whitely.

• • • • • • •

That's all there is, there isn' t any more. We mean, nothing worth mentioning. Da Freem just simply mowed down our lads in pitiless style, fanning ten of the next fourteen that faced him and holding 'em hitless. Meantime, Oshawa went to work on Shine and Heffernan with the above-mentioned result. Just goes to show that, without this star senior twirler, the Cleaners wouldn't be any better, if as good. But Whitely was most decidely present. Tough luck, Orphans, but they were out of your class. No disgrace at all for Percy Harrison's gang, and no doubt this classy Oshawa team will mop up on all opposition this autumn.

Annual Central Ontario tennis championships for men's and ladies' open doubles will be held here Monday at the Peterborough and Kawartha Clubs. Starts about nine a.m. and the finals should be on by 5.30 or so. So far, entries have been received from Oshawa, Aurora and Peterborough, but half a dozen other towns will have representatives here Monday. Rollins and McGee of Tweed copped the men's title last season, with an Oshawa pair winning ladies' honors. The Cotton-Cowling pair and the Friend-G. Kirkwood team may do something for local netters. Followers of the racquet-wielders are invited to see some smart play.

Inside Sportin' Dope—By A. Wise Cracker

Mister Sporting Editor:

Well, Mac, it's us and the Belleville Nats for the Central loop title, and the 2 tie into each here Monday p.m. in the 1st game of the playoffs. The opening clash should oughta be a lulu, for both outfits will be out to take the initial tilt and get the jump on the other fellows. The Nats, of course, will have Mister Jack Williams, their Indian southpaw, all slicked up and ready for the 1st round, while the Petes is likely to oppose the redskin left-hander with Mister Russ Kitchen, although our Mister Lee ain't saying a word and this is only our guess.

As for the outcome the Petes should cop the serious because man for man they're a shade better than the Belleville crew, and they got more good heavers than the Nats. Mister Lee's boys has took 4 outa 7 from the railway lads on the season's play, and to make it more emphatic, they have took them the last 2 times out, so that they're going into the final dash with a edge over their opposition. It will be a fighting serious, however, neighbors, and you can't afford to miss that opening game Mon., because she's going to be a knock-'em-down-and-drag-'em-out clash from the 1st ball pitched.

Here last Sat. the Petes jumped to the front in the parade by a neat win over Belleville. In the early stages it looked like one of them typical Peterborough home games, for the Nats jumped on Mister Deyell for 4 runs, and when he went away from the scene in the 4th the enemy was in front 4 to 1. Then in come Mister Rose and stopped the invaders cold, and the Petes turn round, knock Mister Casey outa the picture and go on to win a 7 to 4 win. Mister Williams, who is being nursed for the playoffs, was merely a spectator, giving him lots of time to reflect on that 6 to 0 trimming the Petes give him a short time ago.

I gotta hand it to Mister Lee and his athaletes for coming through nicely and copping a place in the playoffs after a discouraging start. The Kingston Ponies come along for the opening game of the season and slapped the Petes down, and a little later, after Mister Spook Scriver had delivered a win in his 1st start, old John B. Appendicitis got hold of him and he was through for the season. Then our Mister Deyell sprained a ankle and was out for 3 weeks, and Mister Calladine had to darn near carry the whole pitching burden for a while. However, the boys stayed in there fighting, held their own while they was short-handed, and now has come roaring down the stretch to cop 1st place in the league race. Their showing at home has been on the whole dismal, but they been dynamite on the road and is finally win for them.

Well, Mac, better not miss the playoffs. They'll be honeys.

Sportifully yours,
A WISE CRACKER.

FEW YEARS LEFT IN OLD LEGS, SAYS SMILING IRISH McLARNIN

Scoffs at Idea He Will Retire From Ring, Win or Lose With Ross.

BOXING KIND TO HIM.

(By Bob Cavagnaro, Associated Press Sports Writer)

ORANGEBURG, N.Y., Sept. 1 (AP)—Some of the boys have been saying Jimmy McLarnin will play his swan song on an Irish harp when he meets Barney Ross in a 15-round bout for the welterweight championship next Thursday in Madison Square Garden bowl.

"Lyre!" retorted Jimmy to-day. "And you can make it either singular or plural."

Win, lose or draw it won't be Jimmy's last fight. He's been beaten before, but he's never lost two fights in a row.

Jimmy's cherubic countenance gradually is giving way to mature lines, but he hasn't lost any of his spryness and love for the ring

Few Years Left

"They can say I'm through or that I'll be all washed up after the fight with Barney; that's all right with me," he smiled. "Do you know that the Celtic race matures about 28 or 29 years of age? I'm only 26, so I have at least a couple of good years ahead of me.

"Why, I never felt so young in all my life. Boxing has been very kind to me and I'm not thinking of retiring. My eye is just as sharp and keen as it ever was. I haven't lost any of the power in my punch, and I'll have a lot more speed and endurance against Ross this time than I did last May."

Surprises Pop

With no weight stipulation bothering him such as in their fight in May when he agreed to tip the scales at no more than 145, McLarnin has surprised even Pop Foster, his fatherly manager, with his eagerness and enthusiasm in training.

He weighed 147 pounds—the welterweight limit—yesterday when he returned from a three-mile hike and said he expects to enter the ring slightly above 145.

"I'll feel more comfortable at that weight," he said. "I worried myself to such an extent the last time when I had to weigh 145 that I actually came in weighing 142. That weakened me so much that I believe it was directly responsible for my losing the title.

"Ross is a good fighter, make no mistake about that," Jimmy said. "But there are a couple of points in my favor even before the fight starts. I've never lost two fights in a row and a champion has never successfully defended his title in Madison Square Garden Bowl.

"How well I know that!"

Lawn Bowling By Herb Martin

MAYBE THE crowd was not as big as on former nights, but the boys seemed to be having a good time and thoroughly enjoying themselves last night.

THERE WILL not be many more Friday nights for bowling this summer. The winning rinks were skipped by E. Smith, W. Zeihr, E. Wall and A. Brown.

This is the first time that we ever remember there being no three-game winner on a Friday night. The prizes were awarded by two wins and plus score.

AND ONCE more we draw your attention to our mixed tourney on Monday afternoon and evening. It all begins at 1.30 p.m., so kindly be on time.

GOLF FACTS NOT THEORIES!

NUMBER 184

He came to me the other day complaining about his wood shots. He explained that he hooked, sliced or popped them up in the air.

I spent a half hour with him on the practice tee. He hit them straight by keeping his chin back but not with the customary ease.

I then asked him where he had been playing. It seems that he played several rounds over a course with hard fairways and no turf.

I now asked him if he tried to use his wood clubs off these fairways. He said he had and with very poor results.

I then told him he should have taken a number two or a three iron instead.

The wood club, even a spoon should be used only when the lie is very good.

ONTARIO CONSTRUCTION FIGURES ABOVE 1933

TORONTO, Aug. 31.—(C.P.)—Ontario construction figures for 1934 until July equal the total figure for 1933, stated Forsey Page, president of the Association of Architects of Ontario, in an interview here today. Building permits issued and totals presented by MacLean Building Permits, Ltd., were the basis of his report.

After a serious drop throughout the Dominion in 1932 and 1933, construction is definitely increasing towards the pre-depression levels, he said.

In Ontario the figures for this year are $42,324,900 until July. During the same period last year, the total was $17,682,000. For the Dominion, this year's mark to July is $72,107,200, comparing favorably with last year's $45,563,900.

CHAPTER 29

Joan stopped for breath, and just then Penelope came in and began to serve simple refreshments, and the children forgot for the moment the things that Joan had said to them. But when a little later they went rushing through the woods, and reached their homes and opened the doors and found their mothers in the bright warm kitchens and their fathers coming in to kiss them, they remembered.

And it was Old John Leonard who said to Joan, as they watched the children eat, "My dear, you have a great gift."

"Have I? What is it?"

"You know how to reach the hearts of children."

Joan's eyes filled with tears. She held out her hand to old John Leonard. But she had no words for him.

It was on the day after the dancing lesson that a man came to Penelope's front door. Joan had gone to Evelyn's, so Penelope answered the bell.

The man who stood outside, said: "Is this Mrs. Sears?"

"Yes."

"A friend has told me of your library of rare books. I'm afraid I am doing a most daring thing in asking to see it. Am I?"

She hesitated, "I don't mind your looking at them. But if you're thinking of buying it won't do any good. I got them from my grandfather, and I intend to keep them."

He had heard other people talk like that, yet in the end he had gone away with what he wanted. There were subtle methods of approach . . .

So he said, "My own books came from my grandfather. I know how you feel."

She opened the door. "Oh, well, it won't hurt to let you have a look at them . . ."

"I have a letter of introduction from a bookshop in Portland," he offered it, but she waved it away. "I don't need any letter," she said, "I can tell what a man is by the looks of him . . ."

They laughed, and she led the way to the living room. She showed him the high bookcases, "There they are," she said, "take your time . . . I'll have to ask you to excuse me. I'm baking a cake, and I'll have to watch my oven."

His smiling eyes met hers. "You are sure you can trust me?"

She laughed, "Why not?"

As she went towards the kitchen Giles wished that he might follow her. She reminded him in some respects of Dilly, there was the same wholesomeness, the same housewifely preoccupation. He felt that he would much rather watch her bake a cake than look at rare editions. He was tired of association with dead and gone authors. What he wanted was human companionship.

Yet when he turned at last to the shelves, and read the titles, he was aware of a sense of excitement. Such treasures! Things that his patrons wanted. Things that he could get his own price for. He wondered by what means he could get this pleasant person to listen. She was, apparently, rather prosperous. The thing to do was to take her breath away with the biggest amount possible. Values had been mounting of late. Perhaps no one had told her of the goodly sum that lay within easy reach of her hand.

When she came in, therefore, after a while, to see how he was getting on, he said, "I could make you a corking offer for these."

"I told you I wouldn't sell."

"I know . . ." Then without further argument he named a price.

He saw that she was impressed. But she said, only, "I'll think about it." He could not know, of course, that he had come at an opportune moment. With Joan as a part of her household, Penelope had begun to dream a bit. She had thought she and the child might travel—there was a not-too-expensive Mediterranean tour.

She went back to watch her cake, and to turn things over in her mind. And presently Giles came out to her. "There are two volumes of a first edition Great Expectations," he said, "there should be a third but I can't find it . . ."

"It is there somewhere. On the table under the lamp, I think," said Penelope vaguely, she was trying her cake with a broom straw. It was a lovely cake, puffy and brown. Giles forgot first editions for the moment while Penelope drew out the straw, decided the cake needed a few more minutes, opened the oven door, and hid the brown beauty in its cavernous depths.

Giles' eyes took in with appreciation the charm of the shadowy shining kitchen. A big kettle on the stove was bubbling and boiling. Old Muffet was stretched on the checkered linoleum which covered the floor, her gray fur flattered to silver by its blue and white. Her tail waved gently, and the kittens struck at it and leaped back, graceful as leaves dancing in the wind.

"How delightful this is," Giles said.

"Do you like it?"

"Yes. I sometimes think there was a real esthetic value in the fine old kitchens of our ancestors. You could put a whole efficiency apartment into one of them, and there was much more of real loveliness than in the cheap imitative effects of much of our time."

He lingered to talk about it, and went back reluctantly to his books. Penelope called after him that when the cake was done he was to have a slice of it and a cup of tea. "Which helps a lot," he told her.

He found lying on the table the thin purple volume which he sought. He found, too, a handkerchief tucked between the pages to hold the place . . .

The handkerchief was a wisp of a thing in pale yellow . . . as he lifted it his nostrils were assailed by a faint perfume . . . white roses!

His heart seemed to stop beating . . . Joan!

He looked about the room as if to find some further trace of her. He said aloud to the empty air, "Of course it can't be, it can't."

With the handkerchief in his hand, he sought the kitchen. "Mrs. Sears," he said, and held up the wisp of chiffon. "do you mind telling me whose this is?"

Penelope turned from the oven. "That? Oh, it's Joan's. Joan Dudley."

"Where is she?"

"In the village. Why?"

"Because . . . well, I'm Giles Armiger of Granitehead, and Miss Dudley and I were rather good friends. She used to come into my shop."

"Well, of all things," Penelope was on tiptoe with curiosity. She remembered that Joan had spoken of Giles. "What made you think it was her handkerchief?"

He laughed, "I recognized the perfume."

"Well, she'll be glad to see you."

"I'm not sure."

"Why not?"

"She went away without leaving any word, Mrs. Sears. It seems strange that just by chance I should find her."

"Nothing is by chance," said the orthodox Penelope, "there's a plan back of everything."

"I wish I was sure of it."

"When you are as old as I you'll know."

"Perhaps." Giles shelved theology for the subject in hand: "When do you think she'll be back?"

"Joan? Oh, in time for tea."

"And I'm to have it with you?"

"Of course."

"I don't believe it."

"Why not?"

"Because in real life things don't happen that way."

"They happen if they're going to happen . . ." Penelope was a Presbyterian.

He laughed, "Perhaps they do. Who knows?"

He returned to the living room, and to the books. But he couldn't get his mind on them. Joan was coming . . . Joan was coming . . . He went to the window and stood looking out. It overlooked the wood which was lighted at this moment by the sunset. Back of the trees the sky was glittering, hard, like burnished copper. The branches of the pine trees stood out against it in purple masses. The whole effect was unreal, artificial, but supremely beautiful. And the beauty was heightened and intensified as a girl's figure appeared at the end of the path which led to the house. She wore a coat and skirt of dull red wool, and a close hat of the same color was drawn over her hair. The light flickered over like a flame, so that she seemed to Giles' quickened imagination to glow and shine.

As she came on with quick step, he drew back from the window. He heard her voice in the kitchen, and Penelope's remark: "There's some one in the living room to see you."

"Who is it?"

"Go and see."

5 OTHERS FACE SAME CHARGE FOLLOWING RAID

Surgeons Are Alleged to Have Performed Face-lifting Operation.

WOMAN INVOLVED.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1 (AP) — Two Chicago physicians, named by Federal agents as the surgeons who performed face-lifting operations and tried to change the fingerprints of John Dillinger and Homer Van Meter, slain outlaws, were under arrest by Department of Justice agents to-day, with Louis Piquett, attorney, and four other persons.

All are accused of harboring and concealing the notorious gangsters.

The physicians held are Dr. Wilhelm Loeser and Dr. Harold Bernard Cassidy.

Piquett, a criminal defence attorney, was the man who planned the defence of Dillinger on the murder charge at Crown Point, Ind., before Dillinger talked his way out of jail with a wooden gun. At the time of the escape Piquett had said Dillinger "walked out' on him, too.

Those Held

The other held, all on charges of concealing the fugitives, are:

Arthur W. O'Leary, an employee in Piquett's law office.

William and Ella Pinerty, and Marie Comforti, woman friend of Van Meter, charged with harboring him in Calumet City, Ill.

The arrests last night were made under the personal direction of J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. Hoover left last night for Washington after the capture of the seven.

Dr. Cassidy was born at Port Washington, Wis., in 1902; attended Waller High School at Chicago, and was later a student at Crane Junior College here. He took his medical course at the University of Illinois, entering in 1922. He served his internesnip in Wisconsin General Hospital at Madison. He was married in 1932 and later divorced.

SCHOOL RESUMES ON TUESDAY MORN

Only Two Changes in Teaching Staffs at Collegiate.

The school bell will summon young Peterborough back to the class-room on Tuesday morning, when they will say good-bye to summer vacation for another year.

There are no changes on the public school teaching staffs. The same group of teachers will preside at re-commencement of school, according to Inspector A. Mowat, as those who officiated over the studies last term.

In the Collegiate Institute and Vocational, but two changes are noted. Donald Ross, a graduate of the Royal Military College and a specialist in mathematics and physics, will replace Mr. Sullivan as mathematics master in the vocational department. Mr. Sullivan resigned at the end of last term to accept an appointment with the International Nickel Company.

Miss Mary A. Moir, who resigned as teacher in the commercial department, is being replaced by a Mr. Shearer, specialist in commercial work.

250,000 Montrealers Greet French Group

MONTREAL, Sept. 1 (CP)—Assured of being treated during the remainder of their stay in Canada's metropolis with the hospitality for which the French-Canadian is noted, visiting French delegates to the Jacques Cartier celebrations prepared to-day to make the rounds of the city and attend further functions before moving on to Ottawa Sunday.

The visitors were cheered by one of the largest throngs of people to gather together in Montreal in several years last night when 250,000 Montrealers, representative of all races and nationalities, crowded Lafontaine Park and treated delegates to mass singing of French-Canadian folk songs, in which the visitors themselves joined.

With rockets exploding high in the heavens and lighting up the immense sea of faces, it was one of the most spectacular displays that Montreal has put on in many years.

DEBT ASSISTANCE READY FOR FARMERS ON PRAIRIE

OTTAWA, Sept. 1 (CP) — Debt adjustment legislation passed at the last session of Parliament became effective in the three Prairie Provinces to-day. Farmers of the Prairies who have been carrying on their backs a heavy load of debt will through it be in a position to make arrangements with their creditors without bankruptcy proceedings. Also, the legislation has been framed with a view to keeping farmers who take advantage of it on their farms. Adjustments made with their creditors will leave them in a position to continue work with some hope of achieving success in the future.

While the act has only been proclaimed effective in the Prairie Provinces, the expectation is that it will also be in force in Ontario and Quebec by the beginning of next month.

"Tiger Man" In Strange Accident

Closeups of Clyde Beatty, famous animal trainer, in action, illustrates the unique accident that befell him while thousands watched his performance with a cage of lions, tigers and leopards at Bay City, Mich. When animal charged him and he stuck up chair to protect himself, the gun he carries in the same hand was accidentally discharged and injured him.

BISONS AT PEACE IN NEW PICTURE

Canadian Picture Makers Producing "The Return of Buffalo.

By BOB McSTAY
Central Press Canadian Writer

Presumably the Canadian filmmakers have fallen under the Hollywood spell of all-star casts for the latest release in the "Canadian Cameo" series, uses hundreds of screen-players who might be termed the earliest Canadians. They are seen in "The Return of the Buffalo," a truly Canadian film-subject that should appease to some extent the complaints of many movie-goers in this country who bewail the lack of the Canadian scene on Canadian screens.

Once almost extinct in Canada, the buffalo is again the monarch of the plains, thanks to the efforts of the white man who almost wiped out this noble animal. The remorse of the penitent paleface has taken tangible form, however. Great tracts of land were set aside as sanctuary some years ago in Buffalo National park and today the slowly-growing herds enjoy security from greedy hunters who once killed the buffalo only for the choicest portions of the carcass.

"The Return of the Buffalo" tells the story of how the red man found the bison roaming the western plains in millions. But the Indian hunted the buffalo for food and clothing only, realising that the continued existence of the buffalo was his own guarantee against starvation. The film also shows how the buffalo supplied the Indian with meat, how the skins were used for clothing and winter-proof walls for tepees, how the Indian wove the buffalo hair into cloth, made the meat into pemmican, used the bones for carving ornaments and utensils and the skins for drum-heads. So highly did the red man value this zoological department store that one of the most religious rituals was the Buffalo Dance.

"The Return of the Buffalo," in which hundreds of these animals are seen at peace and in a thrilling roundup, was produced by Associated Screen News by special arrangement with the department of national parks of Canada and directed by Gordon Sparling, late of Paramount. The off-screen narrative is told by Corey Thomson and the special musical background arranged by Howard Fogg.

Canadian movie-goers may look forward this fall to another influx of the historical costume picture. The first will be the "Life of Don Juan," marking the return to the screen of Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. With him will be the six beautiful leading ladies who set a new standard for British pulchritude in the "Life of Henry VIII." Incidentally, the new Fairbanks picture was directed by Alexander Korda, who was responsible for the story of the much-married Tudor monarch.

Upon the completion of "The Iron Duke," George Arliss also commences work on "Cardinal Richelieu," the wily administrator of seventeenth century France, whose complete domination of Louis XIII. had much to do with state crises in New France as well as on the continent. Ronald Colman, another sterling British actor, is to commence work immediately on "Clive of India," portraying another national hero in British history who lived to found a British Dominion.

Another fascinating period in history, that of the turbulent Louis XVIII., will be the background for the "Count of Monte Cristo." This will mark the starring debut of Robert Donat, the handsome menace who set feminine hearts aflutter in the "Life of Henry VIII." In this Dumas classic of revenge for false imprisonment, Elissa Landi will play opposite the young Englishman.

16,000 GERMANS BEING TRAINED

Military Action Preparatory to Saar Plebiscite Alarms Commission.

CHECK UP ORDERED.

GENEVA, Sept. 1. — (A.P.) — Charges that 16,000 Germans residing in the Saar region are receiving military training in Germany preparatory to their despatch into the Saar on the occasion of the plebiscite next January were made by the League of Nations Saar Governing Commission to-day.

The Commission communicated with the home offices of the League, saying it had discovered documentary proof of these charges by a seizure of papers from the office of the Voluntary Labor Service of the German front organization in the Saar.

The Commission said it deemed the situation so grave that it had drafted an ordinance banning the voluntary labor organization from the Saar and compelling the youths enrolled to report to the police in order that they may be placed under surveillance.

Germany has 880,000 motorcycles.

MEDICAL PROFESSION LAUDS DOCTOR OF DIONNE TRIPLETS

Dr. Dafoe's Report in Journal of American Medical Association.

EXEMPLARY CONDUCT.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1 (AP)—Medical science recently had its first official story of the birth and infancy of quintuplets, a dramatic but simple account by the country doctor who was both obstetrician and parish priest to the five daughters of Mrs. Elzire Dionne on their birth morn last May 28.

Dr. Allan Dafoe of Callander, Ont., writes his report, unique in medical annals, for this week's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

'Unreal and dreamlike," Dr. Dafoe described the scene to which he was called at 4 a.m., still sleepy from another obstetric visit.

Things were scarcely ready for multiple arrivals in that home.

"I arrived," the physician related, "to find the home in confusion, no preparation made for confinement except a tea-kettle boiling on the stove. Two babies had already been born."

The father was absent, but two neighbor women were hustling up wrappings for the babies and building up the fire. Dr. Dafoe took charge of the last three arrivals, the smaller ones.

Birth Sequence Overlooked

As for the order of precedence, he said, Marie, Emelie, Cecile, Annette and Yvonne will have to agree among themselves, for in the exigency no one tagged the baby sisters as they were born and "the exact order of birth sequence is not known," Dr. Dafoe stated.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Medical Journal, commenting editorially, said the birth of the Dionne quintuplets was notable as apparently the first of its kind in the history of medicine. There had been perhaps 32 to 35 instances of quintuplets, but never previously have they reached the age of two months. The editor complimented Dr. Dafoe:

"Callander, Ontario, is far from being a metropolitan community. Its population is around 600 people and Dr. Dafoe is the only doctor there. Nevertheless, to him there came an extraordinary opportunity. With the traditions of medicine and an excellent sense of the ethical requirements of the situation, he met the occasion. His conduct of the case and his relations to the public in connection with it have been exemplary."

"As one gazes on the picture of the midwife and reads the record of the conditions under which those children were born and developed, one realizes to some extent also how futile is much of the super-scientific and pseudo-scientific discussion that has been published in recent years on the problems of maternal mortality and infant care. There are many lessons for scientific medicine in this incident."

Mothers Condition Precarious

After delivering the quintuplets he was called upon for heroic measures to save the mothers life.

"All of the babies," he related, "were crying fairly vigorously for their size. I didn't see how all of the babies could possibly live, so I baptised them separately. They were then wrapped in the only covering available, which proved to be remnant of cotton sheeting and old napkins, and then laid on the corner of the bed and covered with a heated blanket."

Then his attention was centered on Mrs. Dionne, the 25-year-old mother.

"She suddenly went into a condition of shock," said Dr. Dafoe. "The patient was cold, and the radial pulse had disappeared. Solutions of pituitary and ergot were given. In a short time the pulse picked up a little but was still fast and weak. Slight color appeared in her face."

Dr. Dafoe still feared she would not live.

"In spite of more pituitary and ergot, she presented the appearance of a dying woman. The husband was still missing, and it was my duty to get the priest as no one else was available with a car. Reluctantly leaving the midwife, I hurried away to bring the priest, a distance of 2½ miles.

"On returning I found the mothers condition improving. . . . Two hours later she was definitely out of danger."

Then the busy doctor had more time for the babies. Blankets were heated in the oven, wrapped around the babies and changed often. Someone brought a butcher's meat basket from a neighbors. Three hours later the infants took turns on a warm blanket having a rub-down with warm olive oil.

Aid From Big Cities

For 24 hours the quintuplets were fed nothing with a few drops of warm water from an eye dropper every two hours. Then "a few drops of 7-20 mixture with corn syrup, together with from one to two drops of rum." A meagre supply of mothers' milk was obtained around the neighborhood and added to the infants' beverage. When four days had passed an ample supply of mothers' milk began coming regularly from Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, of the Chicago Health Department, and full strength mothers' milk has been used regularly since, mostly from Toronto and Montreal.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE REVIEWS

MONTREAL PRODUCE.

Cheese was fractionally easier in price on the Montreal Produce and Dairy Market yesterday, other prices being unchanged from previous levels.

Ontario colored cheese was quoted at 10 to 10¼ cents a pound, off ¼ cent, and Quebec cheese brought 9⅜ to 9⅝ cents a pound against 9⅝ cents straight Thursday. Receipts totalled 5,212 boxes.

Fresh No. 1 butter, in cartots or less, was 19⅜ to 19½ cents a pound, unchanged. Small lots to retailers were priced at 20½c to 21c a pound for solids and 21½ to 22 cents for prints. Arrivals were 663 boxes.

Egg prices held at the week's advances, graded shipments in cartots or less being 24 cents a dozen for A-large, 22 cents for A-medium, 19 cents for B and 18 cents for C. Arrivals totalled 1,477 cases.

New Quebec potatoes remained at their former levels, being quoted at 45 to 50 cents per 80-pound bag of No. 1 grade.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

Despite private forecasts that 1934 will witness the most complete crop failure in United States agricultural history, grain prices drifted lower almost peacefully yesterday, except for several sharp fluctuations in wheat.

Trading was light. Wheat was off fractions to almost a cent at the close, and corn was down more than a cent a bushel.

The scheduled textile workers' strike, a sharp break in sterling and an advance in London gold price to a new high tended to restrict dealings here. The impending holiday and the fact that today is the first delivery day of September grain contracts also were restraining influences.

The crop predictions would have been sensational had it not been for the fact that they were looked upon as largely confirming the fears of most traders. In fact, some bullish interests were disappointed in the forecast for corn, which placed production in that grain at the smallest figure in 64 years excepting two seasons.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

Renewed bursts of hedging sales in the late dealings swept away earlier hard-won advances on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange Friday. Wheat futures prices closed ⅛c to ¼c higher; October at 81⅝c; December, 82⅜c, and May, 86⅝c to 86¾c.

Aided by unfavorable weather reports from all parts of the West and higher prices at Liverpool, values had shown strength for most of the session. Advances of as much as 1⅛c were marked up before the late influx of offerings wiped out the gains.

Generally, however, the market to-day was featureless. Moderate buying against export sales of Canadian wheat, supplemented by some buying from various sources, were sufficient to absorb most of the selling until near the close. Trading was slow throughout.

Country deliveries of wheat Thursday totalled 2,961,000 bushels, against 2,136,000 bushels on the same day last year. Demand for Durums in cash grains continued good, but interest in other grades of wheat was indifferent. Coarse grains futures were dull.

PROPAGANDA BY TORY MAYORS ROEBUCK AFFIRMS IN COMMENT ON STEWART-ROBSON WARNINGS

Defeated Conservative Candidate in Guelph Echoes Stewart Fears.

STRIKE SETTLED.

Conciliation Preferable to Armed Intervention in Labor Dispute.

TORONTO, Sept. 4. —(CP)—Attorney-General Arthur Roebuck of Ontario today issued a long statement in which he said, among other things, that he had been requested by five Ontario municipalities to authorize use of armed force to suppress labor trouble.

The Attorney - General's comment was a reply to a statement Saturday by Mayor R. B. Robson of Guelph that martial law would be necessary to deal with troubles unless the attitude of the government authorities were changed now.

Mr. Roebuck said it was time the public 'took cognisance of the attempt that is being made to foment strife in order to serve political purposes."

His statement added that Mayor Robson had charged that unless he changed his policy of conciliation in labor disputes to (of "armed intervention", martial law would have to be proclaimed.

He declared the mayor's statement "wild and dangerous."

Mr. Roebuck's statement follows: "It is time the public took cognisance of the attempt that is being made to foment strike in order to serve a political purpose.

"The latest move in the plot is a published statement by the political minded Mayor Robson of Guelph that unless I change my policy of conciliation in labor disputes to one of armed intervention martial law will have to be proclaimed. These are wild words and dangerous, but to properly understand what is afoot one should know that the authority is a defeated Conservative candidate in the recent by-election in South Wellington and that there has been a strike in a garment factory in Guelph.

"There was some horse-play indulged in by both sides to the dispute and large numbers of citizens attended to enjoy the unwonted excitement. This disturbance Guelph's own Mayor grossly exaggerates.

CHEAPER MONEY FOR COUNTIES

TAX HOTEL MEALS.

TORONTO, Sept. 4 (C.P.) — The Ontario Association of Municipalities to-day passed a resolution asking the Ontario Government to lend counties money at a rate of three per cent, "such money to be in the form of debentures payable to the Government in three to six years." The resolution made no mention of the amount of money desired.

President Marshall Rathwell of the association, whose home is in Lathen, Ont., suggested counties would be aided greatly if the administration would consent to such a plan. He said such loans could be applied to outstanding county bank accounts, now drawing five to six per cent, enabling them to reduce the burden of interest.

One resolution urged a tax on all hotels and restaurant meals worth more than 50 cents, proceeds of which would be applied to hospitalization of indigent patients.

SALVATION ARMY VOTES TO RETURN BOOTH REGIME

High Command Falls into Capable Hands of Evangeline Booth at 68.

FIRST WOMAN CHIEF.

Expected to Cling Closely to Lines Laid Down by Founder in 1867.

LONDON, Sept. 4 (CP)—The Salvation Army will go on with another Booth at the head lof its far-fung enterprises.

Evangeline Booth, 68, daughter of the founder of the organisation, was elected the Army's Commander-in-Chief here yesterday by the 47 delegates from 23 nations who constitute the High Council.

Her selection meant that the high command of the Army had reverted to the Booths after General William Bramwell Booth had been ousted from control for five years. In the interim General Edward J. Higgins, who resigned recently, ruled the Army.

It was predicted that the Army under its first woman commander will cling closely to the principles laid down by General William Booth, when he founded the religious and social service enterprise in 1867.

300,000 Under Banner

His doughter now become head of the organization's 300,000 workers. She is interested patricularly in the evangelical aspects of the Army's work, and in some quarters it was believed she will delegate many of the other executive responsibilities to a chief of staff, headed at present by Commissioner Henry Mapp. The Commander's salary will be about $2,350 a year, in addition to which she will receive a travel allowance and will be furnished a home.

"I didn't expect to be elected General when I left New York," she said.

She will return to the United States, but planned to come back to the world headquarters here.

Evangeline Booth has been leader of the Salvation Army in the United States. She took her post there after she had organized, at her father's behest, the work of the organization in Canada.

ONE MAN KILLED THREE MISSING IN SHIP BLAST

Terific Explosion Rocks San Diego Bay—Breaks Gasoline Lines.

FLAMES COVER WATER.

SAN DIEGO, Calif., Sept. 4 (C.P.) —One man was killed, three were believed to have drowned and two were injured seriously when a terrific blast wrecked a 33-foot fishing boat moored at the embarcadero here early to-day.

Force of the blast, which rocked a wide area, apparently broke the feed line from underground gasoline tanks at a service station, and the flaming fluid gushed out over the bay.

The dead man was identified by fishermen as Frank Princapalo. He is believed to have been aboard the fishing boat when it blew up. The blast hurled his body into the bay as heavy timbers of the craft were splintered.

Pasqual Crorras and his brother Charles, also aboard the craft, were burned and bruised.

Three other men, listed as members of the crew of the boat, The Francisco, were unaccounted for. Fire and police investigators expressed the belief they had drowned.

Many fishing boats were cut loose in the hope they would drift away from the wave of gasoline-fed flames that swept over the bay.

The cause of the blast was undetermined.

BAR MOONEY ATTENDING HIS MOTHER'S FUNERAL

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4. (AP) Tom Mooney will have the "freedom" of the prison during his period of mourning for the death of his mother, Mrs. Mary Mooney, but he will not be permitted to attend her funeral, Warden James B. Holohan of San Quentin said to-day.

The gray haired convict, convicted and serving a life sentence for the 1916 San Francisco Preparedness Day Bombing, will be restricted in his movements only, by the prison walls until his mother is buried, Warden Holohan said. He will be relieved of his routine duty of peeling vegetables.

Holohan said he had no authority to grant a request of Mooney's brother and sister, John and Anna, that he be allowed to leave the prison for the funeral.

Miners smoking and carrying matches caused 47 deaths in English coal mines in the last year.

TRIO ARRESTED AS HAVING PART IN KIDNAPPING

Abducted Man Captured on French Liner August 2 Was Released Monday.

$2,640 RANSOM ASKED.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP)—The kidnapping of a French seaman by an international gang of smugglers and his torture during a month of captivity were disclosed by Federal investigators to-day after 20 United States Government agents, armed with sub-machine guns, had arrested two men and a woman.

The seaman, William Rosen, identified one of the prisoners as the leader of the gang and the man in whose Brooklyn apartment he was held captive. He identified the man's wife as the woman who cooked for him during his imprisonment.

Narcotics Overboard

Investigators said Rosen, a seaman of the French liner Champlain, was abducted because he threw a package into the sea, believing it to contain potash. Instead, it held narcotics valued at 40,000 francs ($2,640).

The arrests were made in a raid early to-day on the apartment where Rosen said he was held captive. Those seized were identified as Salvatore Mancuso, 28; his wife, Nellie, 25; and Dominick Celferno, 31, also of Brooklyn. Rosen was unable to identify Celferno, agents said.

All were charged with kidnapping and conspiracy.

Rosen, 38, short and slightly built, appeared at police headquarters with his wrists bruised by the ropes with which he had been tied day and night and his forehead scarred by lighted cigarettes with which his captors had seared him. Kidnapped on August 2, he was released today.

Trapped on Dock

Rosen told the investigators he found the package concealed in a

TEXTILE UNIONS ACCLAIM STRIKE GREAT SUCCESS

Fist Fights Numerous at Macon, Ga., and Several Are Arrested.

SPREADS STEADILY.

(By the Associated Press)

The first big day of the United States general textile strike was hailed by Union leaders today as a "tremendous success" with employers declared that a poll of the industry in New England indicated the majority of workers were opposed to the strike.

In New England where the mills were closed yesterday because of the Labor Day holiday, mills employing an aggregate of 125,000 it was reported that at least 50,000 were idle.

In the great textile centers of the Carolinas a survey indicated that approximately 90,000 were idle and the same number working.

In the dozen or more other textile states affected by the strike indications were that at least half of the workers were idle.

Numerous Fights

The most disorder reported in the strike today was at Macon, Ga., where fist fights were numerous, there were several arrests and many threats of warrants. One automobile load of mill office workers was overturned when it encountered a picket line.

The full effect of the strike on the 650,000 workers actually at work when the strike was called remained to be determined.

A strike of 10,000 cotton goods garment workers in St. Louis and 5,000 more in Kansas City ordered by International Ladies' garment Workers' union was expected to begin momentarily.

In Paterson, N. J., Union leaders said they expected the Paterson Labor Relations Board to rule that they might call out 15,000 of the 30,000 silk workers in the Paterson area by nightfall.

YOUNG GUNMEN SLAIN IN TRAPS

Cafe Chef Kills One in Hold-up, Police Shoot Pal on Arrival Home.

THIRD HUNTED.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4 (A.P.)—The "jinx" that dogged the Dillinger gang brought an ironic finish to two youthful gunmen.

They walked into two traps yesterday, Howard Allen, 16, dying from shotgun wounds inflicted by a cafe employee, and Harry Walder, 18, cut down by police bullets.

Walder, police said, called himself Dillinger, while Allen adopted the sobriquet of "Baby Face." A third youth was being sought.

In Walder's lodging house police said they found two sub-machine guns, several sawed off shotguns, automatic pistols and revolvers, and 400 rounds of ammunition.

Early yesterday when the three invaded a northside restaurant, armed with a sawed off shotgun and pistols, they were lured by the owner to the rear, where the chef, Alex. Speros, waited with a shotgun. Suddenly he blasted a full charge into Allen's chest.

Allen's companions dragged him to their car, and at a hospital they terrorized an intern and clerk, forcing them to carry Allen inside.

Police awaited Walder's arrival at his rooming house late last night. Walder fired, but a stream of lead dropped him, mortally wounding him.

Police Capt. Thomas Duffy said the two escaped six months ago from St. Charles Reformatory and were members of a gang which committed nearly 100 robberies recently.

WORKS PROGRAM TOUCHED

Welfare Minister Silent on Retention of the Residence Clause.

TORONTO, Sept. 4.— (C. P.)—Relief officers from Ontario cities met Hon. David Croll Ontario Minister of Welfare at the Parliament Buildings today and conferred for more than four hours on problems connected with the administration of relief. The meeting was closed to the press but afterwards, Hon. Mr. Croll announced the various items considered.

The gathering discussed the residence clause whereby transients looked after by a municipality which they have just moved for the first three months at the expense of the region from which they came. Mr. Croll wouldn't say whether this clause would be retained in the act.

Uniformity in commodity orders was touched on and the gathering entered at length into a discussion of relief officers responsibility to the central authority.

Possibility of purchasing Alberta coal was considered. Method of distributing relief and a works program were other points talked about in the lengthy session.

Winter relief, which Mr. Croll characterized as "a very acute problem which will have to be discussed by the government" was probed thoroughly.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—(AP) — Apprehension over possible violence was felt today as the United States textile strike was put to its first big test.

National Guardsmen are on duty in some sections of South Carolina, ordered out by Governor Blackwood at the request of the sheriff of Greenville County.

There was no bloodshed on the first day of the walkout order could not be determined because many of the mills were closed yesterday for Labor day. Today is the first full working day in all textile centers since the call to strike was sounded.

There were varying estimates as to the effectiveness of the strike as gauged by the operation of mills in the south yesterday. Incomplete surveys of the situation in the south showed 60,000 workers idle and 75,000 at work.

This was challenged by Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the United Textile Workers Strike Committee, who said he had received reports indicating that 100,000 operatives had responded to the strike order in sections where the Labor Day holiday was not generally observed.

Majority Not in Sympathy

On the other hand, George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, said reports from cotton mills in the south showed 114,000 employees were working and 30,000 were idle. Sloan asserted the "preponderant majority" of southern workers were not in sympathy with the strike.

Gorman said he was "more than pleased" with the result of the first day's activities and repeated his prediction that the walkout would be 50 per cent effective to-day and 85 to 90 per cent by Friday.

Interest turned largely to-day to New England's 250,000 workers who were idle yesterday because of the holiday. Union officials asserted the workers in the New England region would not report at the mills to-day, but many mill owners said they would.

A number of mills, including the Amoskeag plant at Manchester, N.H., decided not to reopen to-day, thus postponing a test of the strike in some quarters.

Strike Goes On

In various textile centers labor leaders urged the workers to stand firm in their purpose, and Thomas F. McMahon, president of the Union Textile Workers, declared in an address at Providence, R.I., that the union will carry through with the strike "in spite of hell and high water."

Plans were being completed in virtually all textile centers for the formation of picketing lines.

Unsuccessful thus far in all efforts to settle the dispute over higher wages, shorter hours and union recognition, the National Labor Relations Board was ready to renew activities if it saw an opening.

30-Day Joke

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 4.—(AP)—"Sure, I stole the pie, all right, but the joke's on me," Otto Kerberger told the court. "I thought it was a mince pie, and it turned out to be blackberry, and I can't eat berry pie—say, I ought to go to jail for lifting a pie I couldn't eat."

"A man with sour crust ought to have his with," commented the court, adding "You certainly minced things up.". And so to jail, for 30 days, went Kerberger.

Mr. Cressman was born in Waterloo County and was educated at Kitchener, formerly Berlin, Collegiate. He married Miss Clara Henderson.

COUNTERFEITERS BUSY AT BORDER

Mounties Work With Detroit Officials Seeking Source of Bills.

CIRCULATED IN WINDOR.

WINDSOR, Sept. 4 (C.P.). — Royal Canadian Mounted Police are working in conjunction with Detroit police and Federal authorities of the United States to uncover the source of counterfeit $10 bills.

The bills made their appearance here over the week-end, and though police were able to trace origin of four of them back to three original owners they were unable to learn through what channel they entered Canada.

Secret service operatives were shown the money and said it was similar to that circulating in some sections of the States.

A banker, in examining the money, pointed out silk threads were missing from the bogus texture. He also said the counterfeit money was not as stiff as genuine currency and the color was slightly faded. The counterfeit, he said, undoubtedly was copied photostatically.

Police authorities told of questioning the three men through whose hands the money had passed, but said no arrests had been made.

BEGGING RACKET COMES TO LIGHT

Prisoner Admits He and 6 Others Got $3 a Day to Pose as Blind.

RECEIPTS RUN UP TO $8.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—(A.P.)—A begging racket in which the leader hired seven men at $3 a day to pose as blind men and beg for coins on carefully planned subway routes was disclosed yesterday.

"This is some racket," said Magistrate Benjamin E. Greenspan as he held Joseph Stantini, 39, of Yonkers, N.Y., without bail for further investigation.

Stnatini, when his faked blindness was exposed, related in court that he and six other men worked for a man he knew only as "John" who met them at a certain corner every morning, gave them their instructions for the day, manipualted their eyelids so they appeared permanently closed and drove them to their destiantions in an automobile.

Stanini said he had taken in $8 to-day in five hours.

To Edit Examiner Supplement

Leslie McFarlane, who will edit the Northland Edition to be published in the near future as a supplement to the regular edition of this newspaper, is well equipped to interpret Northern Ontario to Southern Ontario newspaper readers, not only by reason of his knowledge of the country but by reason of his ability as a writer.

Mr. McFarlane has lived in the North for 25 years. As a newspaper reporter and editor in Cobalt, Sudbury, North Bay and other Northern towns he had a wide acquaintance with many phases of New Ontario life

It is some years since he forsook the journalistic wars to carve out a successful career as an author. At the age of 31 he had published the amazing total of 27 books, besides scores of short stories, novelettes and articles that have been printed in Canadian, English and American magazines.

He writes under half a dozen pennames. Books for boys and girls comprise a considerable part of his output, but his mystery novels, "Streets of Shadow," and "The Murder Tree," have been brought out by publishers in New, York, London and Paris. He contributed fiction extensively to the magazines.

This summer he decided to enjoy a short rest from fiction-writing but when he was asked to edit the Northern Edition for our readers he readily accepted, glad of the opportunity to tell the story of the Northland that has adopted him as its own. Haileybury, where he lives with his wife and three children, has been Mr. McFarlane's home since 1910.

TWO BOYS DIE AS HOME BURNS

Another is in Hospital in Serious Condition From Smoke Fumes.

PROBE UNDER WAY.

ST. SEVERIN, Que., Sept. 4.—(CP).—Investigation of the fire which caused the death of two boys and sent another to hospital in a serious condition when they were trapped in the upper room of their burning house, was started to-day.

The four boys, sons of Wilfrid Lehoux, a farmer of the district, were sleeping in a small wooden house used only in summer while seven daughters slept in the big house. Awakened in the middle of of the night by the small of smoke, one of the boys dashed to the window and smashed it open. Then, returning, he helped his brothers to the ground.

Celestin, aged eight, was already dead when his brother went to arouse him, and Rosairie, 16, was in an unconscious condition. Rosaire died in hospital later. Jean-Baptiste, 11, was rushed to hospital suffering from the smoke, and fear was held for his life. Doctors succeeded in reviving him, however, and he was reported out of danger to-day. Cause of the fire was not known.

BRITAIN AIMS TO AMEND HER DIVORCE LAWS

Too Many "Arranged" Cases With Professional Women Co-respondents.

HALT BLACKMAIL.

LONDON, Sept 4.—A highly organized divorce business, employing a large number of professional women co-respondents, purports to have many branches throughout Great Britain.

There is only one ground for divorce in this country, but the authorities are now charging that too many of the divorces are "arranged."

A thorough overhauling of the present procedure of the Divorce Court is contemplated, with a view to tightening the legal loopholes which at present permit of the "arranged" divorces.

More searching inquiries will be made in future into suspicious cases, and an attempt will be made to abolish the type of case in which "unknown women" figure.

Many of the smaller hotels throughout the country are said to work with the divorce agents. Entries are made on the hotel register, rooms taken—although not always occupied — and the manufactured evidence is made available when necessary.

Another promulgated reform aims to do away with what one judge described as the "naked blackmail" of the guilty partner by a husband or wife who has obtained the decree nisi.

The "blackmail" is the practice of the innocent party refusing to apply to have a decree nisi made absolute, unless the guilty one agrees to increase the maintenance allowance already approved by the court, or makes substantial cash payment.

It is expected that the law will be amended so that after a certain set time every decree nisi will automatically become absolute, unless the King's Proctor, whose office is responsible for checking up on all divorce actions, intervenes.

DYNAMITE CACHE ALARMS POLICE

Fear 9 Tons of Stolen Blasting Powder is Hidden in Hollywood.

4 SUSPECTS HELD.

LOS ANGELES, Sept 4 (AP) — Police reserves were called out last night and early to-day to search for nine tons of stolen dynamite and blasting powder, enough to shake the entire metropolitan district, and believed by officers to be cached in the Hollywood or fashionable Wilshire districts.

Stolen nearly four months ago from the Hercules Powder Company magazine near Newhall, the explosives have been a source of concern for police and sheriff's officers.

Police have in custody two men and two women suspected of being implicated in the theft and learned, they said, the explosives had been moved but three days ago from an orange grove near Van Nuys, placed aboard a truck and hidden in the Holywood or Wilshire districts.

The officers expressed belief the dynamite had had time to become crystallised and might be detonated by a jar or concussion.

NEW ORGANIZATION OF EX-SERVICE MEN

H. Wilford is Acting President; S. Whatley Secretary.

Peterborough Ex-servicemen's Social and Welfare Association is the name of a new organization now in course of formation here, and which is to meet again tomorrow evening in the Armouries.

Colonel D. J. Lawrie is named as honorary president, with H. Wilford as president pro tem and Sidney Whatley as acting secretary.

The idea which resulted in the decision to organize was germinated at the Canadian Corps Reunion, following which a number of local ex-servicemen got together and requested such an association, according to Mr. Whatley.

"We are recognizing the Canadian Legion as the parents institution," the acting secretary stressed, "and are fully aware that the Legion has performed valuable services for ex-servicemen that cannot be measured in words."

Officers of the new Association emphasized their sincere desire to give their loyal support and cooperation to the Legion, and stated they wished to acknowledge the splendid work done in the past by the pension committee of that organization.

Aims and objects of the new Association as outlined in the constitution, are briefly "to unite fraternally all who have served under the British flag, into a body of retired soldier and sailor veterans of a non-sectarian character, for the purpose of good fellowship, mutual improvement and assistance, and patriotic endeavour and service to Canada and the empire."

"To increase the public influence of veterans by organization; by parades and by giving as an entity expressions of opinion upon public problems affecting the rights of veterans."

Members of the Association are required to take the oath of allegiance to "God and the King."

Trappist Monastery Additions Gutted

OKA, Que., Sept. 4 (C.P.). — Monks in the beautiful Trappist Monastery here to-day set about laying plans for re-erecting the outbuildings of their monastery almost before the smoke from the fire which destroyed them had cleared away.

The outbuildings, built eight years ago after fire had destroyed the previous buildings, were razed by flames of unknown origin early this morning with an estimated loss of $40,000, partly covered by insurance. The monastery proper, a beautiful edifice erected completely by the monks themselves, was untouched by the flames.

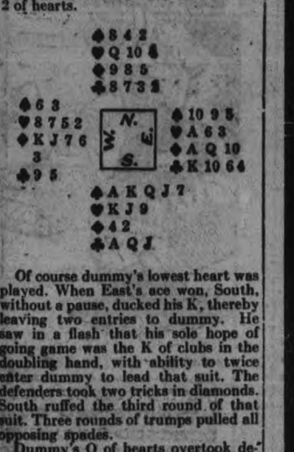
A CLEAR HEAD AND QUICK EYES.

As I have to remark repeatedly: The fate of at least half the contracts is determined by the opening lead and declarer's handling thereof. This is true of both hands given here. The first of these hands was shown yesterday. West overcalled South's opening bid of 1-spade, with 2-diamonds. East supported, then doubled South's contract of 2-spades. The opening lead was the 2 of hearts.



Of course dummy's lowest heart was played. When East's ace won, South, without a pause, ducked his K, thereby leaving two entries to dummy. He saw in a flash that his sole hope of going game was the K of clubs in the doubling hand, with ability to twice enter dummy to lead that suit. The defenders took two tricks in diamonds. South ruffed the third round of that suit. Three rounds of trumps pulled all opposing spades.

Dummy's Q of hearts overtook declarer's J, to lead a club through East. When the finesse won, dummy's 10 of hearts, overtook declarer's 9, for another winning club finesse. The doubled contract was fulfilled, first because West led a heart instead of leading his own suit. Game was won secondarily because South had the wit to duck his K on the opening lead.

The South hand of the next diagram was played by Mr. J. J. Cohen, Winnipeg, in a clear-headed way which gave the kibitzers a free lesson in fool-proof tactics, instead of risking a finesse which would have defeated the contract had it gone wrong.

North—
♠A 5 2 ♥A 9 7 3
♦A Q J 5 ♣6 2
South—
♠J 4 ♥8 5
♦4 ♣A K Q J 10 7 4 2

South jumped his partner's opening bid of 1-diamond, to 5-clubs. North properly went 6-clubs. When the contract was doubled, North re-doubled, vulnerable, on his 3 aces and 2 certain diamond tricks.

The opening lead was the 6 of spades. The instant dummy was tabled, South saw 8 trump tricks, with 1 trick in each major suit and 2 sure playing tricks in diamonds—a certain small slam, without having to take a finesse.

Dummy's ace of spades won the first trick. Trumps were cleaned from opposing hands. A diamond was led. The ace won. Upon the return lead of the Q South discarded his last spade. Dummy's ace of hearts and the J of diamonds took care of the declarer's 2 side cards, insuring the small slam. Had East held the missing K of diamonds, South could have ruffed and made his small slam as well.

Your Health

By DR LOGAN CLENDENING

We repeat, quoting from the article yesterday—Even if you take no precautions, the chances of your child catching diphtheria are less than a hundredth of what they would have been in 1890.

For the very good reason that there is less diphtheria to catch. And that is due to the fact that other parents have taken precautions to prevent the disease in their children.

What are these precautions? The use of an immunizing substance—diphtheria toxoid—which will create a condition in the child's body by which it will immediately throw off diphtheria if exposed.

To understand this we must go back a little way. The germ which causes diphtheria, the diphtheria bacillus, can be grown on bouillon broth in a glass flask. The broth is very much like ordinary beef tea, or bouillon soup. The bacillus usually grows in a sort of scum on the surface of the broth. In the clear broth below there forms as a product of the growth of the bacilli, a poison, the toxin of diphtheria. The culture can be passed through a filter, which strains the bacilli off, leaving the pure toxin.

Much the same conditions obtain in the body affected by diphtheria. The germs grow in a membrane in the throat and produce this same toxin, which, absorbed in the blood stream, is the agent which does the damage.

It is this toxin also—not the germs themselves—which is injected into horses to obtain anti-toxin. Diphtheria is one of the few diseases in which the immunity is absolutely anti-toxic—in which recovery takes place by means of the formation of an anti-dote by the body cells.

Several years ago a method was perfected by which it is possible to tell whether a person is susceptible to diphtheria or not. It consists in scratching a small amount of toxin into the skin. If the person will catch diphtheria when exposed a red spot appears (in 24 to 48 hours) at the site of inoculation of the toxin. This is called the Schick test.

If this test shows that the person is susceptible it is possible to immunize him so he will not catch diphtheria if exposed.

This was done at first with a toxin-antitoxin mixture—a combination of the two so as to neutralize the toxin. This had to be given in three doses and, human nature being what it is, and people getting tired of taking shots, it sometimes was ineffective.

Now we use a preparation called toxoid. It is toxin which has been chilled so as to reduce its toxicity. This can be given in one (sometimes two) doses.

All children as soon as they get to be one year old should have this preventive treatment.

We can look forward to the day when every child will be so treated and diphtheria will be as rare as smallpox.

The proof of its effectiveness can be seen in the drop in the number of cases of diphtheria. In New York where the largest number of treatments have been given, the number of cases of diphtheria reported in 1919 was 14,014. In 1923—four years after the wholesale immunization of school children was begun—the number was 8,050—nearly cut in half.

Just Between Us Women

A daily chat with Examiner neighbors conducted by Anne Wilcox

"These summers are so upside down that I never know exactly when each fruit is at its season" said one excellent and famous Canadian housewife. She had assumed that she would have her plum jams and jellies all made and stored away by the middle of August. But Canadian plums were just coming on the market that week and fruit dealers say that they will only be here a week or so—a short season.

* * * * * * *

But that does not worry Canadian housewives who use modern recipes. They know that the short boil method of jam and jelly making gives almost twices as many jars of finest flavored food as the old long cooking recipes yielded.

* * * * * * *

The minute or half-minute boil required in modern jam making does not darken the fruit nor let the flavor escape in steam. And any fully ripe, fresh plums will make delicious jams by these pectin recipes.

* * * * * * *

RIPE PLUM JAM

4 cups (2 lbs.) crushed fruit, 7½ cups (3¼ lbs. sugar, ½ cup water, ½ cup fruit pectin. To prepare fruit, pit about 2½ pounds fully ripe fruit. Do not peel. Cut into small pieces and crush thoroughly. Measure fruit, solidly packed, and water into a large kettle. Stir until mixture boils, cover, and simmer 15 minutes. Add sugar, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Skim; pour quickly and paraffin at once. Makes 11 six-ounce jars.

* * * * * * *

RIPE PLUM JELLY

4 cups (2 lbs.) juice, 7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar, ½ cup bottle fruit pectin. To prepare juice, crush thoroughly 4 pounds fully ripe fruit. Do not peel or pit. Add 1 cup of water. Bring to a boil, cover, and simmer 10 minutes. Place in jelly cloth or bag; squeeze out juice.

* * * * * * *

Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard ½ minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin at once. Makes 11 six-ounce jars.

CHECKING RELIEF LISTS.

The checking up of relief lists that is being carried on in Ontario centres at the present time is a somewhat unpleasant but decidedly necessary operation.

While the vast majority of those citizens who have had to seek assistance from the public funds were genuinely in need and have at all times played the game, it is the case that a certain number of impostors everywhere take advantage of the situation and secure relief under false pretences.

As the burden of looking after those who are really in need of help is in itself a most onerous one, the desirability of weeding out the fraudulent recipients of relief from the lists is readily apparent—hence the present investigation.

Previous to this check-up several Canadian municipalities initiated an inquiry on their own account and were successful in detecting many cases that should never have been placed on the lists; in other words, the investigation resulted in a material saving because the spurious cases were promptly deleted.

It is expected that similar benefits will accrue from the check-up now being carried on throughout the province, and when the new lists are prepared they will contain the names of those who really require assistance.

It is a business-like step that should be carried out systematically and vigorously.

DRUNKEN DRIVERS.

Doubtless moved by the fact that freer sale of beer is increasing the number of drunken drivers, various Ontario magistrates have been issuing a warning to such offenders that motorists who attempt to operate motor cars after they have been indulging too freely may expect a warm reception in their court.

Up in Chatham Magistrate Arnold has announced that the jail sentence upon every person convicted of driving while drunk will be stepped up from one week to two, while Magistrate E. J. Butler of Belleville threatens to cancel the driving permits of all offenders under this section of the Act.

The Belleville cadi has already given proof that he was not indulging in idle talk, inasmuch as he has cancelled for one year the driving permit of a motorist who, while drunk, was found sitting in—not actually driving—his automobile.

The Examiner believes that this taking away the privilege of operating motor cars from persons who have shown that they are unfit to be entrusted with such responsibility is the simplest and most effective method of dealing with drunken drivers.

Those who have not the will-power or the common sense to abstain from intoxicants when they know they are to be called upon to drive most certainly should be kept off the highway in the interest of public safety.

They have lost the right to have a driver's license and it should be taken away from them.

CONSUMERS MAY PICKET.

Labor has long demanded and held the right to picket premises in the case of a strike, but a Supreme Court justice in New York City has decided that striking workers have no exclusive claim upon this right.

Consumers in New York who have been endeavoring to force down bakery prices have been marching up and down in front of several bake shops in the Bronx, informing passersby of what they claimed to be the unfair prices charged by the firms in question.

Not regarding this innovation as in any way an aid to business, the bakers concerned hustled before a judge seeking a court order that would restrain these troublesome consumers from interfering with business by their demonstration.

To their dismay the Supreme Court justice by whom the application was heard ruled that their request must fail.

The right to protest peacefully, he observed, "is one to be cherished and not to be proscribed in any well ordered society."

And so the consumers may go on with their program, and the bakers will have to endure it with as much a show of resignation as they can muster up under the circumstances.

It is thought that this is the first picketing case in the history of the United States that was not concerned with labor demands to be decided in court.

AN AUTUMN EXPANSION.

The optimistic note sounded in the monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada dealing with business conditions in the Dominion is distinctly encouraging.

Despite claims to the contrary by some politicians and others, the bank's economist declares that there is strength and stability in the trend toward recovery, and mentions higher prices for wheat, heavy production of newsprint, record exports of lumber to Great Britain, new records of electrical energy generated, and other factors that suggest that an autumn expansion of more than seasonal proportions may be anticipated.

According to the report, business activity in Canada during the second and third quarters has maintained a level well above that achieved in 1933.

Figures shown by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reveal that the physical volume of business at the end of the first half of 1934 was within 4 per cent. of the average volume attained in 1926, the year which initiated the last great wave of prosperity.

At the end of June this index stood at 95.8, as compared with 82.2 in the previous June, and an average level of 79.7 for the year 1933.

This index is really on a tonnage basis and gives no recognition to the fact that with a much smaller dollar value for business and with profit margin much narrower than in 1926, the large physical volume of business does not create the optimism which would be generated at the higher price levels.

The Royal Bank's opinion is that the persistent upward trend in prices, however, makes it seem probable that the present profit margins will not for long be kept within their present narrow limits. Within the past year wholesale prices have advanced nearly 11.0 per cent. Only small further increases seem necessary as the pre-requisite of a more normal basis for business activity.

NO SHORTAGE OF FOOD.

The astonishing rate at which surpluses of food for human beings has been accumulating throughout the world in recent years is demonstrated in the confidence voiced by President Roosevelt of the United States, in the capacity of that country to avoid any such thing as a shortage, this year, despite unprecedented drought, heat, insect pests and other factors that have seriously interfered with the agricultural crops.

The agricultural department of the United States Government has reported, after an exhaustive survey, that neither the United States nor other parts of the world are likely to suffer from any shortage of food. Large carry-overs from other crop years will offset any shortage that might arise in this year's production. It is expected, however, that with the smaller supplies there will be a higher level of food prices. The world has been complaining vigorously about low prices of commodities, so that any increase arising from a deficient crop may be welcome. The unfortunate feature of this is that millions of consumers on this continent and elsewhere are in such a state of depleted finances that any increase in the price of necessities is bound to occasion extra hardship. The United States Government has given notice that any attempt at speculative profiteering in food supplies will be met by drastic action on the part of the administration. A warning of this kind is likely to be more effective to-day than was the case a few years ago. Governments have assumed wide powers of control of the destinies of individuals. They are in a position to make it uncomfortable for the profiteer if they care to exercise the powers that they now possess in that connection.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

ABOUT PLAYING GOLF ON THE SABBATH.

A correspondent writes us to bemoan those people who "year after year, and in increasing numbers, play golf on the Sabbath." We agree with him. Our reasons for our convictions may not be his, but while they may be more earthy they are none the less profound. We admit that it has taken us a long time to come to what we know, and we fear greatly that with us it will be a case of "knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." That doesn't mean that we oughtn't to confess that after long years of hope deferred we've come to the conclusion that a man who spends most of the Sabbath taking 100 or maybe more swipes at a golf ball, chasing it all over a field, into the woods and out again, has something wrong with him.

We know all about the argument of "sunshine and fresh air and lovely turf." It is just talk. Every vice has a "Devil's Advocate," and all that this talk about sunshine proves is man's infinite capacity for self-deception. It is something like that old saw about the "sermons of brooks and stones." In the course of our Sabbath golf-playing we've encountered a lot of brooks and a lot of stones, too, and the things we heard said about them, and that we said about them ourselves, weren't much of a sermon.

And so with the trees. We sometimes hear golfers admire the trees, but we notice that their admiration comes out only when they are back in the locker rooms or riding home in their motor cars, beginning to forget their scores. For ourselves, we admit that we've never admired a tree while going around a golf course. On the contrary, our attitude generally seems to be one of hostility to trees, and when, as seems to happen on nearly every hole, we encounter a tree with our ball hiding under it, we even become violent.

Some golfers pretend to like birds. Maybe they're telling the truth, though we can't remember having ever been in a foursome in which anybody stopped grumbling long enough to admire a bird, or to ask anybody else to do so. As for ourselves, the only bird we looked for on a golf course this year was a woodpecker which we wanted to brain with our brassie, it having made us top our second shot and we with a quarter on the hole.

The truth is that when we get into a game with a golfer who says he's playing the game because he likes the birds, or the trees, or the nice green turf, we decide to keep an eye on his score. For we're convinced that most golfers have never seen their own golf courses, that they haven't the remotest idea how many trees are on them, or where the trees are, or what kind they are. Ninety-nine per cent. of them just go around seeing nothing but their own or their opponent's ball, bemoaning their bad luck, or wondering whether their caddies ever caddied before. As for the turf—well, we never yet met a golfer who admitted that he had a good lie.

We have a friend, an honest fellow, who says that some day he's just going to take a walk around the course—to see what it's like. We're going to go with him. Because we, too, want to see that lovely green turf and those wonderful trees and birds that golfers talk about when they're not playing golf. We're looking forward to it as a unique experience.

We're not holding, of course, that nobody plays golf without enjoyment. On the contrary, we make a decided exception of those ladies' foursomes which invariably play ahead of us and in which the individual members, in the leisurely periods between shots, engage in friendly little visits. They do seem to be enjoying themselves.

But nobody else. And just because we have always felt that the Sabbath shouldn't be a day of sadness, but a day upon which men should put away all melancholy and all violent thoughts, we're against Sabbath golf. We doubt whether we'll profit from our own conviction, but it makes no difference to the argument. If a lot of people stayed away from golf courses on a Sunday and got better acquainted with their families there would be a great economy in gloom.—Ottawa Journal.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Little man, you've had a busy holiday.

With Mr. Bennett en route to Geneva instead of entering the by-elections, the campaign will be robbed of some of its thrill.

At least the friends of the NRA have been discreet enough not to credit the recovery policy for the success of the Detroit ball club.

As usual this month has thirty days, but far from usual no Peterborough Industrial Exhibition.

Perhaps the chief explanation of the Hepburn-Stewart controversy is that both the premier and the mayor are endeavoring to cover too much territory.

GERMANY.
Suspicions Become Vocal

INFORMED German people took with many a grain of salt the explanation given by Hitler about the sickening carnival of murder of June the 30th. The suspicions aroused seem now likely to cause Hitler some unrest. Did the murderers use this occasion to rid themselves of those who knew too much about the origin of the Reichstag fire. Did Hitler give orders for assassination of Chief of Staff Ernst of the Berlin SA and his wife? Did he also include in the list of those who did his dirty work on that February night the Chief of Police of Breslau, Heines? Was he anxious to get these men out of the way, lest they, on provocation, should tell the true story.

In Switzerland there is a refugee. Shortly after the fire he fled to a foreign haven of safety. This man, Kruse, was a servant of Ernst Roehm. He has given since June the 30th his story to the press of Britain. Kruse is ready to be investigated. Some items given by him to the press have convincing force that he knows whereof he speaks. A mass of detail already submitted is apparently unassailable. Criminologists have been busied with what occurred on both the February and the June nights. Their conclusions and the story of Kruse are not far apart.

The story of Kruse and his description of van der Lubbe as the tool of the perfidious Goering throws light on the plot. To read his exposure of the bearing of Ernst and Roehm during the Leipzig trial towards Hitler is like reading for the first time a hero story. Both of these men knew too much. And they were too prominent. What they knew had something to do with Roehm's coup de etat.

If Kruse should be summoned before a competent international committee of investigation, Hitler may have something difficult to refute.

THE UNITED STATES.
Cordell Hull.

A MAN in highly responsible public service ought in all justice be relieved from self consideration. Cordell Hull's responsibility in the State Department tests his fitness. He has been in some tight places. He did not put himself there. Roosevelt has been away from Washington on a long cruise. Other administration leaders have been running about the country taking care of their political fences. Cordell Hull has remained closely at his desk in the State Department. Tariff revision is in the public mind. Hull's one hobby is the tariff.

Early in the present administration President Roosevelt sought the advice of men much younger than Cordell Hull on foreign policy. This peeved Cordell. But he stuck closely to his job. Sumner Welles, Moley and Bullitt seemed to be on the inside as advisers. Any politician who tackles Cordell Hull will get as much as he gives. About Hull there is nothing smooth, or bending before the storm. He resented the preference given Moley at the London Conference. That conference was a disaster as far as the United States was concerned. The blame was meted out to Moley. Hull saw his opportunity and forced Moley out of his position at Washington. For President Roosevelt to pass over Hull and to take matters out of his hand, which properly belonged to his department, was not statesmanlike. Write it down, that is his way of lording it over all his cabinet. This policy will not wear. Not one in the cabinet is sure of his leader.

After this disparagement came the question of the Recognition of Russia. Again the President passed over the head of Cordell Hull. Bullitt was summoned to confer with the President. Just how will Hull stomach this treatment? Will he resign? Not he. He is at home with tariff problems and tariff legislation. Every bit of tariff policy has an international bearing. He decided to stick on his job. The President had up his sleeve a bit of strategy to relieve the tension. The Pan-American conference was to meet at Montevideo. But!

CONNECTICUT.
The Nutmeg State.

POLITICAL parties in the United States are at sea. Neither Democrats nor Republicans have a well defined political slogan. But one thing there is of which they are sure. They know the direction. That is of more importance than a platform. Having discovered the direction, platforms closer to the needs of all the people and in keeping with the drift of the age, will be built. The direction is indicative of a world change.

The insistent demand is not for prices, nor for markets, nor for material prosperity. It is for social justice. Social justice has become a cause. In several states groups are forming to press upon Congress this cry of the people. The political parties of the United States are disintegrating. This is all to the good. Democrats are forgetting their old affiliations and so are the republicans. A new alignment is thus possible. When political hidebound parties dissolve and return to mother earth the nation is advantaged.

Connecticut State is now offering for consideration a program within the bounds of the realizable. Business men, professional men and leaders of both the old political parties are taking the initiative.

The advocacy is for a maximum forty-hour week fixed by law. At least thirty million people in the United States must work every day, to keep up with the costs of living a decent life in this age. Many of these workers are unable to bear the strain of a longer work-week. To limit the week to forty hours is a humanitarian achievement.

Control of industrial homework anticipating its extinction is another ideal. Mothers have no time for work other than the care of the home. Children need her constant attention. The introduction of other than home work puts upon the mother an injustice. This new inter-party movement calls for the protection of the home and motherhood by legal enactment.

Child Labor Law.

One of the most important acts of the Roosevelt administration was the outlawry of child labor. Congress lost no time in passing a law that embodied the view of the President. In southern states the law is bitterly assailed. Some industries have refused to conform. To strengthen the arm of law, the Social Justice movement has begun a campaign of publicity. Child labor was a source of great profit. But it stunted childhood. The child is the last of mankind to have justice meted out by legislation. The child is the last unit in civilization to receive righteous consideration.

The extension of the labor laws to agriculture and the trades, not now reached, such as domestic service, and state institutions, is embedded in the Social Justice program. Think of this proposal. The unemployed to be cared for by a benefit fund administered by the state. Then follow to complete the program, old-age pensions and an appropriation for the labor department to effectively enforce these state labor laws. Make no mistake the world has started in a new direction. Social justice is the guide post for coming legislation. Politicians have begun to realize that there is a demand for these essential social justice reforms.

CRANBROOK, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

A young halfbreed named Findlay really was the founder of Cranbrook. He found gold on Finlay creek and went south to Walla Walla, Wash., to inform his friends. On his return journey he and his companion became tired and stopped to rest at Wild Horse creek. They did some prospecting there and made the richest discovery in that part of the country.

Two brothers named Galbraith were among those who flocked to the district. They engaged in the transportation business and, looking forward to the time when the railway would go through, they purchased 12,000 acres of land from the government. This they afterward sold to Col. James Baker and his associates.

Col. Baker was a native of Cranbrook, Kent, England, and he gave the name of his home town to the new settlement.

ALL OF US

(By Marshall Maslin.)

I MET A GENTLEMAN.

He looked shabby. He was slightly drunk. He asked me for a quarter, and he told me that he was a gentleman.

I gave him the quarter and tried to forget that remark about his being a gentleman.

There were three points to be considered. I wanted to give him the quarter, because he needed it. I hesitated slightly because he was drunk I resisted giving it to him because he was so insistent on that point about being a gentleman.

What did I care whether he was a gentleman or not? How did he know he was a gentleman? What IS a gentleman, anyway? Does a gentleman go around telling people that he is one, or is gentlemanliness so deeply buried in a man's being that he never speaks of it either to himself or to anyone else?

You find gentlemen everywhere and you can't recognize them by their clothes . . . I know of a gentleman whom I have never seen, but I heard his voice. He may be dead, he may have died a few minutes after he spoke to me . . . I can't tell about that. The night was too dark and it's difficult to keep track of a fellow in the tangle of war. I'd gone up to the front to find some wounded who were said to be lying behind a hedge. After driving over a field and wandering here and there I found a dozen American boys and got three of them into my car and started back . . . The roads were rough and rutted. It was raining. The night was horribly dark. We came to a black crossroads and I didn't know which turn to take. I had to wait until a starshell went up or until a shell exploded near so I could see. There wasn't a sound inside the car. I didn't know whether those boys were dead or unconscious.

Then a shell came. Closer than I had expected or wanted. It lit right in the center of that crossroads and all the landscape was hot, red, and fuming, made a big hole right there, and knocked a limb out of a tree and it crashed alongside. Then my poor old engine chugged out and I had to get out and crank it. A nice mess!

And a quiet voice from inside my car came to my ears: "Say, driver, don't you think we ought to be getting out of here?" . . . Not complaining, not whining, not wanting to rattle me, just wanting to know, that's all . . . So we got out of there and I didn't see any of them again. But it's always seemed to me that that boy in my car, wounded and brave, was a natural gentleman. He doesn't know it, but everybody else does. He wouldn't go around telling people he was a gentleman. He'd just be decent and do the right thing and forget all that nonsense about gentility . . . And that's enough.

ON THIS DATE

A DAY IN CANADIAN HISTORY

By Red Williams

BIRTH of a GREAT JOURNAL.

On this date, in 1829, the Methodist Church in conference at Ancaster, launched the Methodist Book Room and ordered the publication of The Christian Guardian. It was resolved: "That a weekly paper should be published under the direction of the conference of a religious and moral character to be entitled The Christian Guardian. That the place of its location be the Town of York. That the sum of $700 is sufficient to purchase all the apparatus for a printing establishment. That the sum of $2,000 will meet the annual expense of such a paper."

It was decided that the stock should be offered first to members of the church and then to others of strict moral standing. Egerton Ryerson, then but a stripling, was chosen as editor and his great career began. He was then in the fifth year of his ministry and his salary was $600, including house rent and fuel. He had to keep the books and fold the papers as they came off the press, writing his editorial by candle or lamp light at nights.

The Christian Guardian began with a circulation of 450, but within three years it had 3,000, the largest of any periodical in Canada; indeed, in 1831 it paid 227 pounds, 10 shillings for postage, while all the other journals in Upper Canada paid less than 200 pounds combined. Now it is The New Outlook, the mouthpiece of the United Church of Canada.

Ryerson's successors faithfully followed his ideals. They did their share in that remarkable business romance involved in the growth of the Book Room from an investment of less than 2,000 pounds in 1829 to the great organization of today with a total investment of $2,500,000; a payroll of $10,000 a week and a circulation of periodicals of nearly a million a week, printed, by the irony of fate, on the site of Beverley House, the centre of the old-time Toryism which Ryerson did so much to convert into moderate Conservatism.

THE STARS SAY . . .

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

For Wednesday, September 5

According to the astral influences bearing rule on the affairs of this day strife, commotion, excitement and other malefic conditions may be presaged. An element of the sudden and quite unforeseen, with disruption and devastation, unless a calm and well-directed control, with a quiet management of the necessary activities and particular resolve not to provoke enmities and quarrels.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a year of turmoil, confusion and sudden events, with abrupt and radical changes. Discretion and calmness in all such visitations may modify the malefic circumstances. Be especially careful to avoid enmities by violent and tempestuous conduct.

A child born on this day may be of a turbulent, passionate and impetuous nature, fond of change and hazardous adventures. It should be given a rigid training and discipline in early life.

BUYING FAIR MINE SECTION

Teck Hughes, McKenzie, Red Lake, Central Patricia Come in for Heavy Trading.

SILVER ISSUES QUIET.

TORONTO, Sept. 4 (CP).—Buying was fair at steady prices today in the gold section of the Toronto Exchange mining list, Teck Hughes, McKenzie Red Lake, and Central Patricia, particularly coming in for heavy trading. Saint Anthony featured the cheaper group with heavy turnover at a moderate advance. Silver and base metal issues were quiet and barely steady.

The weight of price changes was on the down side, even Teck Hughes failing to record a net advance in its heavy trade. The close for that issue was down 10 cents to $6.40. Some Lake Shore was taken at $56, unchanged, and Hollinger also held steady. Bralorne developed a little buoyancy and Wright Hargreaves was off narrowly.

Howey pushed up to $1.36 in the early session but surrendered the gain later and at the close recessions of 2 to 5 cents were showing for Sylvanite, San Antonio, Siscoe, Little Long Lac and Ventures.

LAGGARD TRADING FEATURES SESSION

Early Morning Gains Forfeited Later—Walkers Common Closes 3-4 Lower.

TORONTO, Sept. 4 (CP).—The industrial section of the Toronto Exchange appeared in no hurry to move out of the rut today as trading was resumed after the long holiday. Moderate gains were chalked up in the morning session but were forfeited in the afternoon trading and at the close recessions held a margin over gains. The influence of the New York Market was towards lower levels.

Walkers common closed ¾ lower and Industrial Alcohol ½ off while Distillers Seagrams finished the day slightly higher. Canada Bud and Canada Malting had gains of small fractions showing at the close.

The interlisted leaders worked lower, led by Nickel, Brazilian and C.P.R. all showing losses of a half point. Ford "A" sagged ¾ and Consolidated Smelters slipped back 3 points.

Assay work on the Waite Ackerman claims in the Saganags Lake area will shortly be commenced, it was announced by D. V. Bederide, geologist of the company, who is now awaiting the arrival of equipment to start work. He stated that the work will be in the nature of test pitting, stripping and surface exploration during the initial stages of development of the property.

Murwood.

A new issue of 300,000 treasury shares of Murwood Old Mines, Ltd., has just been announced. The company holds title to 21 claims, comprising 840 acres in North Tiblemont township, Quebec, and the ore area uncovered on the property extends for 850 feet and is 130 feet wide. Officers of the company state that they have approximately 150,000 tons of $15 ore in sight and a new vein has been uncovered in the northern zone. A mill will be erected during the next couple of months, it is expected, and the mine will be brought into production at an early date.

Brownlee.

We understand that once again Brownlee Mines has resumed operations at its property adjoining Noranda Mines in the Rouyn section of Quebec. A showing near the Pontiac boundary is said to have been picked up on Brownlee ground recently and it is the intention to explore this area.

Market Closing On All Exchanges

WALL STREET.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP).—With trading volume around record low levels, the majority of stocks recorded moderate declines today. The late tone was easy. Bethlehem, American Telephone and Standard Oil of Indiana held rather steady, but losses of fractions to around a point appeared in Case, U. S. Steel, Cerro de Pas, Tors, American Can and U. S. Industrial Alcohol. Transfers approximated 300,000 shares.

MONTREAL EXCHANGE.

Losses outnumbered gains about two to one at the close of to-day's dull session of the Montreal Stock Exchange. Trading was featureless and changes were small.

St. Lawrence Paper Preferred dipped two points at 16, and Canadian Cottons was down 1½ to 56½. Brazilian Traction eased ⅝ at 10¼. Canadian Industrial Alcohol "A" was off ⅛ at 8⅝, after holding steady most of the day.

Fractional losses were suffered by Canadian PaPcific, Cockshutt Plow, Power Corporation and International Nickel.

WORLD MARKET ON SUBMARINES IN TWO HANDS

British and American Firms Set Exclusive Areas, U. S. Senate Group Told.

OFFICIALS EXPLAIN.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4 (A.P.)—A United States Senate committee was told to-day that the Electric Boat Company and Vickers, Ltd., of England, had divided the world into exclusive areas for the sale of submarines and that the two companies interchanged patents for building boats.

Henry R. Carse, president of the Electric Boat Company of New London, Conn., appearing as the first witness before the Senate Munitions Committee, testified the two concerns had an agreement covering the construction of submarines.

Chairman Gerald Nye of the committee read into the record copies of the contracts.

Carse said Vickers was a customer rather than a competitor of Electric Boat.

Other testimony went into the record that the boats were sold to foreign countries and that the United States Navy used some of the basic patents owned by Electric Boat.

Carse said his company made a profit every time Vickers sold a submarine, because of the use of Electric Boat patents. He added that his company lost about $40,000 a submarine on 400 German submarines built during the war because of patent infringement.

RUSS COLUMBO FATALLY SHOT

Singer Dies of Wound From Friend's Old Pistol.

MOTHER NEAR DEATH.

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., Sept 4.—(A.P.)—Hovering between life and death, Mrs. Julio Columbo called to-day from a hospital bed for her son, Russ, but no answer came.

She did not now that the son, Russ Columbo, golden voiced singer, was dead, the victim of an accidental discharge of an old dueling pistol.

While the mother called for her son, a deputy of the county coroner's office prepared to call to-day the first witness at an inquest. Lansing V. Brown, Jr., film photographer, will be the chief witness.

Life-long friend of Columbo, Brown, 31 years old, held the cap-and-ball pistol which sent a leaden pellet into the singer's head as the weapon discharged accidentally while the two were examining Brown's firearm collection.

In a state of collapse, Brown was confined to his bed yesterday. A physician and nurse attended the grief-stricken photographer.

INDIAN POLICY SAID SHOCKING

U. S. Commissioner Claims Tribes Fortunate No Definite System Used.

LANDS NOT LOST.

FORT NIAGARA, N. Y., Sept. 4.—(AP)—John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, speaking at the Four-Nation celebration here today, said the Indians of New York State were fortunate that the United States had behaved toward them "In a manner irresponsible and inconsistent for a great many years," because as a result their land had not been lost.

"With ample power to intervene," he said, "the Federal Government from time to time has intervened and then has retreated from the picture. Just enough has been done to deter New York state from the assumption of full responsibility. There has been one happy result of this federal policy: Allotment in severalty was never forced on the New York Indians. Hence their lands have not been lost."

He described the United States policy toward the Indians in the past as "shocking," a record "bleak, bitter and humiliating." The Wheeler-Howard act, he told the hundreds of Indians and the other guests at the celebration here restores to the tribes the right to organize, to function and in some paramount matters to have a controlling voice."

He praised the Six-Nations Confederacy as being far in advance of white thought of its day.

30 P.C More Shipping In Sault Canals

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Sept. 4.—(C.P.)— An increase of about 30 per cent. in shipping passing through the Sault Ste. Marie ship canals during the first six months of 1934 as compared with the same period of 1933 is shown by figures issued here to-day.

The figures showed up to Aug. 1 this year, 21,181,057 tons of freight passed through the locks on both sides of the river. Last year's tonnage for the period was 13,816,676. In 1932 the figure was 6,562,697 tons for six months.

Although many shipping men are of the opinion the record peak of 1929, which was 46,531,270 tons for the first half of the year, will never be surpassed, much gratification was felt at the upward trend. Lake shipping is regarded here as an indext to prosperity or depression.

"Restricted" License For Col. Lindbergh

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP) — Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh has received a restricted license for his aeroplane—"Restricted to long distance flights."

It bears the same number as his famous Spirit of St. Louis, NR211.

The restriction(typed across the face of the license, does not necessarily mean that the Colonel is planning a long trip soon, said officials at the Glen Curtis Airport, where he is keeping the plane. Such a license would be necessary for a distance flight.

AMERICAN COAL DEALERS THREATEN MASS DEFIANCE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4 (A.P.)—N.R.A. confronted a threat of mass defiance from United States coal dealers to-day.

The dispute that resulted in resignation of the solid retail fuel code authority was over the method whereby cost of keeping warm this winter is to be determined.

No N.R.A. code now provides for price-fixing, but some do have the provision that if ruinous price wars are going on, an emergency in a particular area can be declared. The minimum price is then determined on the basis of "lowest reasonable profit" of "representative" concerns.

An emergency has been declared in several areas, and the question is whether the minimum price is to be settled within trade areas, or in Washington by N.R.A.'s research and planning council.

BRITISH UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES SHOW INCREASE

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 4. (C. P. Cable).—For the third successive month British unemployment figures showed an increase to-day, but actually more people are at work. An unusually large number of boys and girls leaving school are responsible for the apparent discrepancy.

Unemployed in August totalled 10,318 more than in July, but were 274,559 less than in August of last year. Employed in August increased by 34,000 over July.

Former school children entering the labor market and registered for unemployment increased 31,086 over the previous month.

POLICE CONTINUE HUNT FOR MISSING PROFESSOR

GLACIER PARK, Mont., Sept. 4 (CP)—Searchers were still without a trace to-day of Dr. F. H. Lumley, Ohio State University professor, missing since August 13. Royal Canadian Mounted Police are assisting rangers in combing the heavily-wooded area near the international border. Lumley left Goathunt Camp on a 17-mile hike and has not been seen since.

It is feared the missing man is dead. Relatives at first thought he might have continued across the border into Canada, but no evidence of that has been found.

August Sees Record Number Of Weddings

August was productive of a record crop of 31 marriages solemnized in the city. June, the traditional month of weddings, was in the shade by comparison, with a mere 19 weddings.

Not since June, 1930, when 33 couples took each other "for better or worse" has little Dan Cupid been so busy. In August of last year there were only 19 marriages.

Births are also on the upswing with 62 new arrivals, as compared with 59 in the corresponding period of the year previous. In the same period deaths also show an increase of 8 with 33 for the past month.

VETERAN RACING AIRMAN CRASHES

Nearly 100,000 See Douglas Davis Plunge to Death at 250 M.P.H.

WAS LEADING FIELD.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 4. (AP). — Death caught up with a famous United States aeroplane pilot late yesterday as 1934's National Air Races roared to a close before nearly 100,000 persons.

With two major aviation triumphs to his credit in four days and a third almost within his grasp, Douglas Davis, Atlanta, Ga., veteran of 1,00,0000 miles in the air, crashed to death in the final racing event of this year's program.

Davis was on the eighth lap of the 12-lap, 100-mile Thompson trophy race and was leading the field by an eight-mile margin when the wreck occurred.

Witnesses said he had just cut a pylon about three miles to the rear of the grandstand when he suddenly swerved to the left as if planning to circle back and take the pylon on the outer side.

His plane was travelling about 250 miles an hour when it shot out of control, twisted crazily through the air and plunged its nose into the ground.

Uninterrupted by the hand of death, the race went on to a finish, with first place honors going to Roscoe Turner of Hollywood, Calif., at a speed of 248.120 miles an hour. He received the coveted Thomoson trophy and a $4,500 cash award.

Davis won the Bendix trophy race in a dash here from Burbank, Calif., last Friday and only a few hours before his death attained his second triumph of this year's races by exceeding the world's land plane speed record of 304.96 miles an hour.

WIRELESS ORDER ALARMS VIENNA

Police Guard Criminal Court Building Following Bombing Message.

AIMED TO FREE RINTELEN.

VIENNA, Sept. 4 (CP)—"Rescue Rintelen from prison immediately. Failing which, blow up the wing of the Criminal Court Building on Wickenburggasse."

Vienna Police said they intercepted this short wave radio message last night when it was sent from Nazi sources to Austrian rebels, apparently trying to start a fresh insurrection.

The alarming nature of the message galvanized the police and army into immediate action and threw the people of Vienna into a fresh panic. The authorities immediately threw a strong guard of militiamen and police armed with rifles and machine-guns around the Criminal Court Building.

Then, fearing the presence of bombs below, the police made careful seaches of the elaborate canal system under the building, but as the afternoon wore on, they discovered no explosives.

It was said that Dr. Anton Rintelen, former Austrian Minister to Rome who was announced as Chancellor at the time of the abortive Nazi putsch July 25, had been transferred from a hospital where he was under treatment for a pistol shot wound to a cell overlooking the gallows of the Supreme Court. Police are still trying to get a confession from him on the part he was to have played it the putsch had succeeded.

GERMAN ARMY SOLIDLY BEHIND ADOLF HITLER

Sweeps Unreservedly Into Great Nazi Pageant at Nurnberg.

VON BLOMBERG RISES.

By A. D. STEFFERUD
(Associated Press Foreign Staff)

NURNBERG, Germany, Sept. 4. (AP).—A great pageant of Nazism opened in this Bavarian city today with the Germany army at last unreservedly following the leadership of Chancellor Adolf Hitler.

An announcement that General Werner von Blomberg, Minister of Defense, and other Reichswehr officers would participate in the National Socialists' convention led to a belief in some quarters that Von Blomberg will be named Hitler's deputy and political heir.

Until their recent oath of personal loyalty to Hitler officers of the Reichswehr considered themselves above party politics. Now they have become an integral part of the Nazi machine, and Hitlerites to-day are proclaiming the definite conversion of the army another example of Germany's unity behind the Fuehrer-Chancellor.

Since the "blood purge" of June 30 Hitler has cultivated the support of the regular armed forces, and some believe that he now reposes more confidence in them than he does in his own storm troopers and the Schutz Staffel.

The opening of the vast party conclave found this old city crowded to its most distant suburb by more than 500,000 flagwaving fervently enthusiastic delegates representing all Germany.

It is the sixth convention since the founding of the party, and the second since Hitler came to power. One Napi organ observed that it is the first since "the crowning of the Totalitarian state"—since Hitler's assumption of the powers of the Reichs' president.

UTILITIES SAVE $1,000 A MONTH

Diversified Power Peak Resulted From Factory Hours.

TEMPORARY GAIN.

Confusion resulting from the lack of a uniform daylight saving schedule in Peterborough this summer may have worked a hardship in some quarters, but not for the Utilities Commission. The Electric Department has been saving about $1,000 each month as a result of the confusion, Manager Ross Dobbin reported to the Commission this afternoon.

The fact that several different noon-hour periods have been observed by the local factories during the past three months is responsible for the saving Normally a peak power demand for the day is reached between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning, but, with an irregularity in schedules, the peak has been diversified this summer. The Commission has been supplying the same demand with the same returns, but has been buying the power from the Hydro on the basis of the lower peak. The Hydro's price to the Commission for power is on the basis of the daily peak.

The saving of $1,000 each month is equivalent approximately to 300 horsepower. With the majority of plants returning to standard time schedules at various times this month, the good fortune of the Commission will come to an end.

Little business awaited the commissioners as they convened for their meeting to-day. A number of electric and water accounts in arrears were discussed, and strict measures for their collection decided upon.

TWO AUTOS IN HEAD-ON SMASH

Mendell Smith Sustains Critical Head Injuries—Indians Also Hurt.

NORTH OF LAKEFIELD

Resulting from injuries sustained in a head-on automobile collision, Mendell Smith, 33, C.N.R. section foreman at Lakefield lay in an unconscious condition at Nicholls Hospital over the week end. Today his condition showed slight improvement, it was learned.

Driving north on Buckhorn road, about 2 miles from Lakefield on Saturday morning, Smith's car was involved in a head-on smash with another car proceeding south with a party of Indians from Curve Lake Reserve.

Cecil Knott, driver of the other car, and his five passengers were all more or less severely injured. Doris McCue, 19, and Olive McCue, 22, being admitted to St. Joseph's Hospital after their injuries had been dressed by Dr. H. E. Moore. Thirty stitches were required to close facial wounds received by the latter.

Others injured in the Curve Lake car were: Mrs. Dow Taylor, Mrs. Reg. Muskrat and Mrs. Arthur McCue, who were all badly cut about the legs.

The accident occurred at about ten o'clock on the crest of a knoll adjacent to Dennis Garvey's farm close to the junction between Buckhorn road and the 9th Line of Smith Township. According to Provincial Constable David Silvester his investigation disclosed that Smith approached the knoll on the wrong side of the road.

Smith who was alone in his car, was stated to have been going to Haliburton to join his wife who had been visiting with relatives. Both vehicles were extensively damaged, indicating that the impact was unusually severe.

Dr. Alex Fraser ordered Smith into the hospital, wheer the injured man was attended by Dr. A Moir.

Centreville

On Thursday Mrs. Clifford Hall was hostess to an afternoon tea and bazaar under the auspices of the Mission Band and Y.W.A. of Centreville Presbyterian Church. The beautiful lawn was made very attractive by several decorated booths in which were displayed many articles for sale. The midway, containing several novel entertainments, was the scene of much amusement for young and old. The Chinese booth, where home-made cooking was sold, was in charge of Miss Muriel Whittington and little Marian McGill, dressed in Chinese costume; the Japanese booth, containing fancy articles made by the Mission Band and Y.W.A. girls, was managed by Miss Phyllis Larmer, assisted by little Jean Rutherford, in Japanese dress; the Indian booth, containing pictures and candies, was in charge of Mrs. Graham and her little daughter, Mary, in Indian costume; Miss Iva Campbell conducted the weighing contest; Miss Grace Johnson was the official photographer; Miss Jsesie Anderson had charge of the doll contest, and Miss Dorothy Hood of the twenty-year-old photographs. Two other booths were very attractive and entertaining: one was occupied by Miss Allie Berry, who wore a gypsy costume and told fortunes with a teacup; the other, the famous Dionne nursery, containing the quintuplets, in charge of Nurse Miss Edith Deyell, B.A., with the babies reposing in an incubator and every precaution taken against infection. Dainty refreshments were served on the verandah. Mrs. James McGill and Mrs. D. A. McKnezie poured tea. The waiters were Mrs. F. Bannister and Misses Jessie Deyell, Robina Tate and Bernice Falls. Millbrook orchestra furnished excellent music. There was a good attendance, and all present spent an enjoyable afternoon.

ROEBUCK ASKS ALL PROVINCES JOIN CODIFICATION OF INDUSTRY

Suggests Dominion - wide Standardization of Minimum and Labor Laws.

POWER LACKING NOW.

TORONTO, Sept. 4 (C.P.)—National codification of industry, with every Canadian province joining in the formulation of a code and all industry governed by its clauses, is the objective of Ontario's new Liberal government. Attorney-General Arthur W. Roebuck told trades union members about it yesterday.

Speaking at the Canadian National Exhibition, the Attorney-General said he has written to all provincial premiers inviting them to confer with Ontario representatives in an effort to agree on Dominion-wide standardization of minimum wage and labor laws.

"I dictated letters to the premiers of every province on Saturday," he said, "inviting them to confer with us on a scheme for nation-wide minimum-wage laws, which would be applicable to both men and women. I am not in favor of minimum wage laws unless they are supplemented by codes."

Mr. Roebuck said the greatest difficulty facing labor is the lack of power to enforce agreements once they are reached between employers and employees. There was "a mummy at the feast or a skeleton in the closet. To recognize the decisions of the majority and went ahead with unfair or sweat-shop practices.

In Ontario, the government will call together employers and leaders of unions to negotiate an agreement "that will bring fair, decent wages and a decent living to the worker," the Attorney-General asserted.

"Having obtained the endorsation of the majority, we propose to give it enforcement by law and force it on the unwilling employer. The greatest enemy of employer has is the sweat-shop employer."

I.O.O.F. SERVICE CAMPBELLFORD

J. O. Herity, Belleville, Delivered Decoration Day Address.

LARGELY ATTENDED.

(By Examiner Staff Reporter)

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 4.—With very impressive eulogies of departed brethren voiced by guest speakers, the annual decoration service of the Campbellford and district Oddfellow Lodges was held on Sunday afternoon and was the most outstanding event of its kind held for many years.

Large crowds attended the function, lodge members and friends coming from Trenton, Belleville, Stirling, Madoc, Tweed, Springbrooke and many other points, forming a procession that was capably marshalled by Charles Holmes and headed by the Argyle Salvation Army Band of Hamilton under the baton of Bandmaster Jenkins.

Proceeding from the lodge room in the Ferris Block, the parade marched to the War memorial, where a very inspirational address was given by Major Keith of Hamilton. Wreaths were deposited at the base of the shaft by Joseph Poulton, Junior, Noble Grand of the Campbellford Lodge and J. D. McEachern, P.G.N.

A very impressive ceremony was held in Mount Pleasant cemetery, where the address was given by J. Owen Herity. The names of departed lodge members were called and flowers placed on their graves. Thirty-eight graves were marked.

Ross Holmes Injured

The game of cowboy and Indian proved a serious pastime for two-year-old Ross Holmes of Campbellford when he fell from the loft of a barn at the rear of his home and sustained a broken left arm. The arm was broken off at the shoulder socket and was eventually set at the Belleville General Hospital, following medical attention rendered in Campbellford by Dr. S. H MacNeill. Playing the part of an Indian, the little lad, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Holmes, was being chased by a companion in the loft of the barn, when he lost his balance and fell through the outside door. The drop was one of twelve feet.

Hamilton Band.

The strains of martial music combined with inspirational and well-delivered addresses, pervaded Campbellford on Sunday, when the Argyle Salvation Army Band of Hamilton, with their officers, combined with the churches of the town in staging an Army Sunday.

Opening their invasion of Campbellford with a fine music festival, held in the Regent Theatre on Saturday evening, the Army combined with the Presbyterians in the morning worship at St. Andrew's church.

The service was conducted by the Rev. J. C. Robinson, pastor of the church, the sermon being delivered by Major Keith and the prayer given by Captain Horselarder of the Campbellford corps. The band accompanied in the singing of the first and last hymns and also provided a quartette number. The choir, under the leadership of the organist, Mrs. Gwen E. Lewis, rendered the anthem, "Soldiers of Christ Arise."

In the evening a large service was conducted in St. John's United church, following the usual hour of worship, large crowds attending the observance which was marked by splendid vocal and instrumental music.

260 LB. MAN LOSES 20 LBS.

And Looks 10 Years Younger

"About three months ago," writes a correspondent, "I weighed 260 lbs. I started taking Kruschen Salts, and I lost 20 lbs. in a little over two months. I am feeling better than I have in years. My friends tell me I look ten years younger, and my step has an elasticity which is amazing. I shall boost Kruschen Salts wherever I go."—J. McC.

Kruschen contains just the six salts, blended in just the right proportion, that are essential to keep you in continual good health. Kruschen Salts keeps the system free from encumbering waste matter. Unless this wastage is expelled regularly, it will give rise to rheumatic and other body poisons. And Nature is liable to take the defensive measure of storing this poison-breeding material out of the way in the form of fatty tissue.

POPPING BOMBS ALARM HAVANA

Citizens Start Celebration of Fiesta in Uneasy Frame of Mind.

BULLETS WHINE.

HAVANA, Sept. 4 (A.P.).—This nervous capital, its sleep disturbed by popping bombs, awoke apprehensively to-day to celebrate a political fiesta.

The city and its soldiers took part in an observance of the anniversary of the "enlisted man's uprising" a year ago.

But in the minds of distracted citizens re-echoed the cracking of rifles as strikers yesterday were repulsed from the Cuban Telephone Company's office building.

A wave of bombings last night contributed further to the general uneasiness. Police had reports today of 19 bomb explosions in Havana, and 13 blasts occurred in Guanabacoa across the bay.

As bullets began to zip about in a mile's square area in the busiest part of the city, the Cabinet met to consider means of meeting the emergency. A sudden electrical storm coiled the zeal of the disturbers, but the Cabinet session continued until this morning. No announcement of the nature of the discussions was made.

Among the few persons abroad last night were left wing university students distributing typed warnings which read: "If you love your life don't ride on the street cars, buses or other forms of transportation."

HASTINGS TAKES THREE DECISIONS

Trent Bowlers Put Up Great Battle to Defeat Warkworth on Latter's Greens.

TRENT VALLEY SCHEDULE.

HASTINGS, Sept. 4. (Examiner Correspondence). — After getting away to a bad start in the second half of the Trent Valley bowling schedule Hastings came to life on Friday night and took three out of four games from Warkworth on the latter's greens.

In the first pair Smale in winning the only game for Warkworth administered a real drubbing to Lynch by a 14 to 1 score. The Hastings bowlers were having difficulty in getting on to the green. Dodd had the battle of his life to dispose of Baker. He slipped over a four in the third only to have Baker come back with the same on the fifth and lead from then until the last end when the Hastings veteran slipped over a pair for a 10 to 9 win.

DIED ON SATURDAY.

Deeply respected resident of Peterborough for the past twenty-six years, the death occurred at the family's summer home at Thorah Beach, Fort Bolster on Saturday noon of Susan Mariah Tomlinson, the beloved wife of Henry George Park. She was in her 70th year.

SCHOOLS REOPEN FOR NEW YEAR

No Changes in Teaching Staff of Public Schools.

1,000 AT COLLEGIATE.

Peterborough's younger generation dragged reluctant feet deskward this morning as the Collegiate, St. Peter's High School, and the Public and Separate schools threw open their doors for a new year of study. Preliminary figures at noon augured an increase over the past year in the enrolments of the Public schools, with the Collegiate, St. Peter's and Separate school totals showing little change.

The city Public school enrolment in June was approximately 2,800 and it appeared that an unusually large number of beginners and a high percentage attendance of children in higher grades would increase this total. First day attendance at the Collegiate hovered about the thousand mark and it is likely that the high attendance figure for last term, 1,034, will be equalled within a day or two. With 240 registered for High school courses and 280 in the junior school, the St. Peter's enrolment remained unchanged.

Public School Inspector A. Mowat said to-day that it was the first occasion in his experience of 27 years on which there have been no changes in the city Public scohol staff to report. He attached no significance to the fact beyond the possibility that teachers are clinging more cautiously to the jobs they have in a time of depression than they otherwise would.

Alexander Shearer, B.A., specialist in commercial work, and Donald Ross, B.Sc., specialist in mathematics, assumed their new positions on the staff at the Collegiate. They are filling vacancies left by Miss Mary A. Moir and G. B. Sullivan.

The returning students at the various school buildings found that painters, carpenters and other workmen had been busy while they were enjoying the summer vacation. Exterior trimmings at the Collegiate were re-painted, and the interior at Queen Mary school likewise serviced. At Central school, an abutment along the edge of the school yard was built up and the principal's office re-decorated. The tops of all desks in Queen Alexandra school were taken off and re-polished and minor repairs were made to steps at the entrance to King Edward school.

Four third-form rooms have been arranged at the Collegiate this year, an addition by one over last year. While first form students were allotted five rooms last term, the number was reduced to four to-day.

IS THE INHALATOR OF VALUE IN AIDING ARTIFICIAL RESPIRATION?

Coroner to Ask Medicos to Consider Question in Drowning Cases.

IN PUBLIC INTERESTS

Coroner Dr. T. W. H. Young has decided to invite Peterborough Branch of the Ontario Medical Association to discuss at its next meeting the merits or demerits of the inhalator in use by the City Fire Department.

The inhalator purchased by the Fire, Water and Light Committee in April last at a cost of $350 for the use by the Department as an adjunct to artificial respiration in cases of apparent drowning or gas poisoning, replaced the old pulmotor previously condemned as unfit for use.

While refusing to express his own opinion as to the value or otherwise of the inhalator, the Coroner stated, that he wished to get the well-considered opinion of the medical fraternity in the full interests of the public as a whole.

His decision to bring the matter before the Medical Association, Dr. Young admitted had been largely decided as a result of his investigation as coroner, into the death of John Mackenzie, 18-year-old visitor from Columbus near Oshawa who was drowned at Peterborough Lock on the afternoon of July 21.

To Be No Inquest

Dr. Young after ordering an autopsy which was performed by Dr. C. B. Waite strongly considered the advisability of holding an inquest, but has now decided to bring the matter before the Medical Association as an alternative. An inquest would not be held, he stated.

Asked if it was not a fact that Mackenzie's lungs had collapsed and that a rupture of the blood vessels of the lungs had resulted, Dr. Young demurred that he could not discuss that angle of the case. "As coroner I do not officially know the result of the autopsy until it has been given to me by medical witnesses in evidence," he said.

A reporter who was present when Mackenzie's body was recovered from the whirpool below the dam at the locks, informed the Coroner that after the use of the inhalator had been discontinued by the Fire Department rescue squad, Edward Williams obtained permission to continue the prone pressure method of resuscitation, and that when he went to lift the body blood issued from the mouth and nose of the dead youth. Dr. J. Malcolm McCulloch who was in attendance had remarked at that time that it was of no further use to continue artificial respiration as the lungs had collapsed.

Lungs Collapsed

"Well, there you have indisputable evidence that the lungs did collapse," the Coroner remarked.

Asked if he thought the use of the inhalator would bring about the collapse of the lungs and result in the hemmorhage, Dr. Young stated definitely that he was not acquainted with the inhalator recently purchased by the City and therefore not in the position to express any opinion on the matter. "I do not even know if any members of the Department received instruction in the use of the apparatus," he remarked, "but I would say there should be a specially trained squad if use of the inhalator is to be continued."

Prior to the purchase of the inhalator from the Safety Supply Company of Toronto, the apparatus was fully demonstrated at the Fire Hall in the presence of Chief George Gimblett and members of the Department, as well as Alderman Malcolm McIntyre, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, and Dr. A. W. McPherson as Acting Medical Officer of Health.

Highly Recommended

Before the apparatus was finally purchased on the evening of April 10 last, a number of other users of the inhalator were consulted, among them being Chief Constable D. C. Draper of Toronto Police Department; Chief Elliott of Oshawa Fire Department and Fire Chiefs Smith of Mount Dennis and Armstrong of Kingston.

Chief Draper in whose Department three of the inhalators had been in use for a period of three years, stated, "these machines have given excellent satisfaction and in my opinion are indispensible where artificial respiration must be applied under emergent conditions."

Oshawa Fire Chief wrote to state, "our reports show we have been successful in reviving two persons from carbon-monoxide fumes; five from coal gas fumes; and one patient at Ontario Hospital. I would say that the inhalator is a real asset to any fire department that is called upon to do this kind of work."

Within thirty-six hours of the purchase of the inhalator it was first used unsuccessfully on 3-year-old Ronald Hoar who was drowned in the flood water of Jackson Park Creek.

MRS. COO LOSES DEFENSE MOVE

Court Declined to Arraign Alleged Accomplice in Murder.

TRIAL RESUMES.

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 4.—(AP)—The defence in the murder trial of Mrs. Eva Coo today lost a fight to have Martha Clift, "Little Eva's" one-time friend and alleged accomplice in the killing of Harry Wright, arraigned to "see whether she pleads guilty to murder, second degree, in keeping with a promise of the District Attorney."

James J. Byard, Jr., Mrs. Coo's chief of counsel, made the surprise move " so the jury may have this in mind in weighing the guilt or innocence of the defendant."

The District Attorney, said Byard, "Said in the opening of his case that he had promised Martha Clift immunity."

Justice Riley Heath denied the motion. "Disposition of the case of the people against Martha Clift shall be handled as a separate matter and not as part of this trial," he said.

Justice Heath also denied an earlier motion for the immediate discharge of the defendant and dismissal of the indictment charging Eva with the murder.

Grounds for that motion included "that the people have failed to prove the guilt of the defendant."

REMARKABLE ENLARGEMENTS

Considerable interest is being taken in the window display at Roy Studio of a series of pictures taken at Exhibition Grounds during Fair week. Included in the series, are four pictures enlarged from 35 m.m. size (about as big as a postage stamp) to 7 by 9 inches. The enlargements are remarkable in view of the fact that they are approximately 200 times larger than the original prints.

SLIGHT FIRE DAMAGE

A small outbreak of fire causing damage estimated at thirty dollars gave the Fire Department a run to 189 Hunter street west at one o'clock Monday afternoon. It was the only alarm received over the week-end.

PROPAGANDA BY TORY MAYORS

property damage was less than two hundred dollars.

"Nevertheless this Mayor of Guelph now actually charges that he demanded of me that I call on the Federal forces to march into Guelph, and that I refused.

"The Mayor is not paying me a compliment, though one might think it such.

"He is boasting of his attempt to turn machine guns on his fellow citizens, and he is denouncing me for my refusal.

"He had exhausted his resources. His own City Council turned down his motion for an appropriation with which to arm a squadron of clubmen. He had tried both the fire hose and tear gas bombs, but they, he said, 'Did not make any difference'."

"Having failed to change the sympathies of his townsmen by choking them with gas bombs, he feels that he has justified himself in the public mind when he screams for bayonets.

Tory Heads Together

Naturally the next move in the campaign is the newspaper barrage. You find two Tory Mayors with their heads together. Mayor Stewart leads off and Mayor Robson follows.

"Why this alarmist talk? Do you see no political significance in the picture which these two worshipful worthies present?

"In the short time the Hepburn government has been in office I have had no fewer than five such invitations to send armed forces into first one and then another municipality. In each instance I have refused and on my refusal in each instance the trouble has subsided, harmony has immediately prevailed.

On Horns of Dilemma

"What then, you ask, is the explanation of this Gilbert and Sullivan nonsense Simply this; my Conservative friends imagine that they have me on the horns of a dilemma.

"When the excitement of an industrial contest has been fanned to its height, assisted perhaps by gas bombs and fire hose, a proponent of law and order calls me on the long-distance telephone to demand that I send a detachment of the Provincial Police or order out the Militia. If I say 'No,' I am to be denounced as in favor of mob rule, and the political checker player talks of 'desperate violence' and portrays impending crisis, martial law and a wreck of the ship of state.

Mayor Stewart sits on a volcano and Mayor Robson on a powder magazine.

"Or if by any chance I said 'Yes' and the troops marched, I could be denounced as having betrayed the working people who now look upon me as a friend, and as having gone into camp with the oppressors. I would be in a class with my predecessor in office who sent tanks and machine guns to Stratford.

"You see I am on the horns of a dilemma. I am damned if I do and I am damned if I don't.

Pretty smart politics? Yes, but what do you think of politicians who play a game with the lives of their fellow men?"

BEER FINES UP IN LOCAL COURT

Magistrate Langley Increases Tariff to $15 on Five Drunks.

SENTENCE SUSPENDED.

"We can not continue to have a group of drunks like this turning up every morning just because the beverage rooms are open," declared Magistrate Langley to-day when five men entered pleas of guilty to being drunk in a public place. "I have issued the warning several times that fines are going up. And they are. We will see if we can't stop it."

Each was fined $15 and $4.50 costs or 15 days in jail. One was a transient who was found asleep in the market square and who had run out of a cafe without paying for his meal. The others were local men, one of whom, police said, had been imbibing rubbing alcohol.

George Spafford, Harvey township farmer, was found guilty of driving a car while intoxicated. On the afternoon of August 22, Spafford drove a car which struck and injured Roy Fairbairn, 12, a cyclist. Workers of the Lakefield road paving job—Joe Gibbons, Hoard Baptie, and George E. Moore—testified of the erratic course of the car, and the manner in which Spafford and his companion, Gerald Calvert of Hall's Bridge, had staggered when they got out of the car at the order of Mr. Gibbons. They walked away into the bush, these witnesses testified.

Provincial Constable D. Silvester told of arresting Spafford at his farm in Harvey at 4 o'clock the following morning. Spafford was asleep in a stall in the barn, while Calvert slumbered in the haymow, he said.

"Spafford told me he could recollect nothing of what happened on the road," the constable testified. "He said the last he could remember was drinking in a hotel. He admitted drinking beer and a quantity of wine. He and Calvert smelt strongly of liquor but they were sober when talking to me. They said all they could remember was waking up in the bush and taking a taxi home."

No sentence was passed on Spafford to-day. The man faces a charge of criminal negligence and after this case has been heard, conviction will be registered on the intoxication charge.

Stoney Creek Barns Gutted With Crop

HAMILTON, Ont., Sept. 4 (C.P.).—One of the most spectacular fires to be seen in the Stoney Creek district in many years occurred when flames destroyed three barns on the property of Mrs. Nellie Corman, together with the season's crop and farm implements last night. Eight hundred bushels of grain, $100 worth of seed and ten tons of hay went up in smoke.

Mrs. Corman stated that her two boys, Ira and William, had worked hard to raise and garner the crop and had never taken a holiday all year until yesterday.

"Poor boys, now they will return to a scene of devastation," she said to-day.

GAINS ONTARIO TITLE

TORONTO.—Watched by a small band of spectators who braved the elements Saturday, Bruce Hall, versatile Toronto Tennis Club and University of Toronto Schools shot-maker, succeeded to the Ontario junior boys' singles tennis title relinquished by Art Anderson. He beat the persistent efforts of Hugh Pope, London junior ace, 7-5, 6-3, 8-6, on the rain and wind swept courts of the Toronto Cricket Club, Armour Heights, on Saturday. Later in the day, Hall, partnered Pope to win the double championship, defeating Eddie Donnenfield and Nick Saba in the finals, 6-1, 6-3, 6-1, thereby duplicating Anderson's double victory of a year ago. Both championships were decided in straight sets.

Thistles thrive in almost anything and the Fergus lacrosse team emulated its emblem in the O.A.L.A. semi-finals, to advance into the group championship round with Hamilton Tigers. The ornery orchids of the Hebrides survived a week's struggle with the Mountaineers of Mimico, that started in Fergus Monday and only ended after three gruelling games and a special storm session of the O.A.L.A.

Thistles won the deciding game Saturday afternoon in the mud and slush of the Mimico box by a 12 to 6 score, proving superior mudders.

RANKINE SETS RECORD

TORONTO.—Bob Rankine of Preston, Canada's official three-mile champion, scratched his name on another page in the record book and probably wondered whether the full marathon distance is as tough as they say it is. Rankine became a full-fledged long distance runner Saturday.

In the Canadian National Exhibition 10-mile run, the black-haired Ontario Scot set up a new Canadian record of 56 minutes 29 seconds in beating Lou Gregory of New York, former United States 10-mile title holder, and Paul Mundy of New York, present U.S. champion.

PETES CINCH VICTORY WITH DOUBLE IN EIGHTH FOR 5-1 WIN OVER NATS.

Russ Kitchen Gives Brilliant Performance On Mound Backed By Great Support In Garden—Locals Drive Williams From Box In The Eighth.

CALLADINE CLICKS FOR THREE HITS IN 4 TIMES KONOPKA, BATTEN, ASH, KITCHEN CLOUT TWO

Before a crowd of fifteen hundred in Riverside Park yesterday, the Petes took the first game of the C.O.B.L. playoffs from Belleville by a 5-1 score. Fine pitching by Russ Kitchen, along with some great support by his teammates, brought the first victory to Peterborough. The Petes drove Chief Williams, the Nats' ace hurler, from the box in the eighth and continued to hit Ernie Smith who succeeded him. Second game is in Belleville Wednesday.

It was a neat ball game to watch with the score 3-0 for the homesters going into the eighth. They put it in the bag in this stanza while the Mills' crew got one in the same frame. The locals earned the win by their smart all-around playing, receiving better pitching, hitting and fielding at all times.

Russ Kitchen had the Nats baffled all afternoon, mixing a fast ball with a sharp-breaking curve. He held them to seven scattered hits, fanned five and walked none. Russ received practically perfect support, his infield in particular fairly sparkling with their defensive play. Williams went good, except for four hits in the third, till he began to weaken in the seventh when the Lee crew got two clouts off him. He retired in the eighth after a hit and two miscues. Smith was met with two singles before the side was retired. The Chief did not get good support, there being only one earned run off him.

Kerr and Utronki with two hits apiece led the visitors at bat. Calladine topped the locals with three for four, while Konopka, Batten, Ash and Kitchen hit safely twice apiece. Green and Ford went good defensively for the losers, and Utronki pulled off a neat catch. For the Petes, the whole infield starred with some grand fielding while Burton and Foley pulled off nifty running catches in the outfield.

Belleville got a runner on in the first and second but could not advance him. In the Petes' third, the home squad got three runs. After one was out, Kitchen singled and took second on Konopka's scratch hit. He scored and Sig took third on Batten's bingle to left. Konopka coming in also when Jack fumbled the hit, and Ike taking second. The latter scored on Calladine's single. Belleville got a runner on in the fourth and the fifth on a hit and error but they died on base.

For the locals, Ash's hit in the fourth and one by Batten in the fifth came to naught. Utronki started off the sixth with a single and Jack came through with another. They moved up on an infield out, but Green fouled out and the next batter grounded out. Calladine's single in the home half did no good. The Nats went out in order in the seventh but the locals filled the sacks with one out in their end. However, a strikeout and a roller cut them off. Belleville got a run in the eighth when Kerr singled and took third on a bingle by Utronki, to tally on an out. The locals sewed it up in their half with two runs.

Add Two In Eighth

Calladine led off with a rap into right. He took second and Murray first when R. Smith dropped the ball on a bunt. Burton bunted to Williams who threw wide to third and the sacks were loaded. Smith went in to pitch, but Ash drove in two runs with a clout to right, with Utronki throwing out Burton as he went to third. Whatley advanced Ash to second but the next two grounded out. Belleville went out one-two-three in he ninth.

YANKS BREAK EVEN WITH MACKS WHILE BENGALS IDLE AT CHICAGO

Game Features "Lefty" Gomez's 10th Straight Victory, His 24th of Season, Foxx's 40th Homer and Babe Ruth's 21st.

By HERBERT W. BARKER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Even the weather man has climbed aboard the pennant band wagons of Detroit Tigers and New York Giants.

Both leaders spent Labor Day in their hotel lobbies as rain wiped out scheduled doubleheaders but both likewise gained ground thereby in their race toward the major league flags. The Giants picked up a full game on St. Louis Cardinals, walloped twice by Pittsburgh, and now lead the National League parade by six games. The Tigers actually advanced not at all in their quest of the American League bunting but the second place New York Yankees split two with Philadelphia Athletics and thus saw two more games wiped off their schedule without cutting into Detroit's 5½ game lead.

Cards Fail Chance

The Cardinals' double reverse at Pittsburgh not only put them another full game back of the Giants but also allowed Chicago Cubs, who split even with Cincinnati, to tie them for second place. The Pirates beat not one but both of the Dean Brothers, Paul and Jerome, as their part of the holiday celebration. They chased Paul to cover with an eight-run third inning outburst to win the first game, 12-2 and then hammered the elder Dean for the winning runs in the ninth inning of the nightcap. The Cardinals, scoring three runs in the first half of the ninth and sending Waite Hoyt to the showers, ha d this game apparently won. To protect a 5-3 lead they sent Dissy in to pitch the last frame. But singles by Burt Grace and Lloyd Waner and a double by Fred Linstrom, his seventh hit of the day, sent Dissy to the clubhouse. A long fly by Arky Vaughan off Bill Hallahan followed by Manager Pie Traynor's single sent in the tying and winning runs.

Cubs Split With Reds

Lon Warneke pitched the Cubs to a 6-3 10-inning victory over the Reds in the opener but successive triples by Mark Koenig and Jim Bottomley in the seventh accounted for four of the five runs the Reds scored in that frame to win the second game, 6-4. Good pitching by Fred Frankhouse and Huck Betts gave Boston two victories over Brooklyn, 1-0 and 4-2.

Babe Ruth's 21st homer enabled Yanks to take an 11-7 triumph over the A's as Vernon Gomez staggered to his 24th victory and his 10th in succession. The A's, however, came right back with a hitting drive, including Jimmie Foxx's 40th homer, to win the second game, 10-3 behind Sugar Cain's effective pitching.

Indians Tighten Hold

Cleveland strengthened its hold on third place by taking two games from St. Louis, 9-5 and 6-4. The Indians scored seven runs, five of them on three Brown errors, in the first inning of the opener and then got good pitching from Willie Hudlin in the afterpiece. Washington lost the first game to Boston, 6-3, and the services of Manager Joe Cronin to boot. And then held on to gain a 4-4 tie in the second contest halted because of darkness after eight innings. Cronin suffered a broken bone in his right arm when he tumbled to the ground after a mixup with Wes Ferrell at first base in the eighth inning of the opener. He will be out for the rest of the season.

LEAFS DIVIDE HOLIDAY BILL

Schott Unfortunate in Losing to Bisons on Two-hit Pitching.

ROYALS TAKE DOUBLE.

(By the Associated Press.)

Albany had all but clinched the fourth place play-off position in the International League to-day. With only seven games remaining on the schedule, which closes Sunday, the Senators held a 3½ game advantage over Buffalo Bisons and Montreal Royals, who were tied for fifth position.

The Senators took a firmer grip on fourth place yesterday when they came through with a double victory over Baltimore Orioles, winning the first game 14-8 and the second 4-2. Home runs by Joe Mowry, Gus Dugas and McGee played an important role in the first game. The nightcap was a pitching duel with Ray Prim shading Bill Lohrman despite George Puccinelli's home run.

Royals Take Double

Montreal Royals retained a mathematical chance of getting into the play-off by downing the second place Rochester Red Wings twice an dgoing into a tie for fifth place with the Bisons. The scores were 7-6 and 10-9.

The Wings rallied in the ninth inning of the inaugural game, but Harry Smythe was rushed into the rescue of Ray Fritz and quieted the rally one run short of a tie. Rochester got to Chad Kimsey for six runs in the second fracas out the Royals kept pecking away at Ray Harrell and Jim Winford, finally tying the score with a three-run splurge in the seventh and last scheduled inning. They put over the winning counter in the eighth.

Homers Feature

Johnny Mize, Rochester first baseman, hit the only home run of the first game, but in the nightcap Winsett and Ival Goodman each connected with their 21st home run of the season for the Wings and Fresco Thompson hit a circuit drive for the Royals.

Bisons Meet Setback

The Bisons' hopes of getting into the play-offs received a setback when they broke even with Toronto. Buffalo won the first game, 1-0, despite the two-hit pitching of Gene Schott, but the Leafs came back to take the second, 8-7. A base on balls, given to Johnny Wilson, Buffalo pitcher, led to Schott's downfall. A sacrifice, Bud Clancy's single and a long fly by Frank McGowan followed the free ticket and the only run of the game was across the plate.

The Bisons started the second game with three runs, but the Leafs answered with six in their half of the first inning With each team using three pitchers, Buffalo came within one run of tying the count in the seventh, but was stopped by Bert Cole. Xabian Kowalik, ace of the Buffalo mound staff, was driven from the mound in the wild first inning.

Newark Bears split even with Syracuse Chiefs to increase their first place lead to four full games over the Wings.

The Bears took the first game, 2-1, behind the four-hit pitching of Walter Brown, who hung up his 19th triumph of the season and ran his scoreless inning record to 28 consecutive frames. The Chiefs were more effective behind Fred Fussell in the nightcap, getting all their runs during the first five innings off Spurgeon Chandler to win 5-2.

MOORE'S DOUBLE-BASE CLOUT IN 12TH BREAKS UP BATTLE TO GIVE COGS 8-7 VICTORY

Great Win For Cogs

Locals Overcome Five-run Handicap to Tie Count in Eighth Frame.

KINGSTON NEXT IN LINE.

Bowman Holds Clubmen to Three Hits and One Run in Seven Innings.

A mighty two-base clout into deep right field, by Doug Moore, Cogs' centre-fielder, with one on in the last half of the twelfth innings, gave the Cognawaga intermediates the victory in the third and deciding game of the home-and-home series with Bowmanville on Saturday afternoon on the Port Hope ball grounds. It was a fitting climax to a hard-fought game that saw the "fighting Cogs" overcome a five-run handicap by a timely rally in the eighth frame, that netted them six runs, and then held the opposition in three overtime innings to finally grab a win in the twelfth. The winners now advance along the O.B.A.A. trail to tangle with Kingston.

Bowman held the locals to three hits and one run in seven innings, while his teammates were pounding Casey Masterson for nine safeties and six runs in the same length of time, four of the counters coming in the sixth, on a single and five errors. In the eighth, the Cogs started to go places. Rogers walked, Crary was hit to put two on, and Shocky Mein singled scoring both of them. Padgett, Wilson and Rooke all singled in a row, the first two scoring on Rooke's single. Moore was out on a grounder to short, that sent Rooke across, and Cadd biffed a terrific clout to the race track fence that was good for three bases. He scored on Masterson's long fly to centre and Padgett fanned to end the spree. Bowmanville came back strong in the ninth, to count the tying run on two singles and a force-out. The Cogs then tightened down to leave two runners stranded and the game went into overtime, in a drizzle of rain that had persisted during the whole game.

Win Game In Twelfth

Bowmanville failed to threaten in the tenth or eleventh, but got two on in the twelfth, only to be robbed by neat infielding. George Piper relieved Bowman at the last of the ninth and sent the Cogs out in order for three frames, on put-outs. In the last innings, Wilson grounded out, Rooke hit to second, and Colwell made a great stop but threw wild to first and Rooke took second. Moore next man up, stepped into a fast one that burned its way into right. Rooke crossed and the game was over.

PETES CLINCH TOP POSITION IN FIRST TILT

Locals Put Game on Ice With Three-run Splurge in 8th Inning.

FINAL COUNT 5-1.

By taking the first game of their double-header with Oshawa here Saturday, 5 to 1, the Petes cinched first place to wind up the C.O.B.L. schedule. A small crowd—not more than four hundred—saw a fair fixture with the count, 2-1, for the locals going into the eighth. They staged a three-run splurge in this frame to put it on ice. The revamped home lineup proved effective.

Both Lefty Wills and Archie Deyell hurled good ball, with the latter having an edge. He allowed seven hits and no walks while fanning four. His support was perfect with the infield of Murray, Calladine, Konopka and Houston starring. Murray led the local clouters with a triple and single in three appearances. Claus and Hollingsworth did some neat fielding for the Dukes, and Mathews pulled off a fine running catch. He and Malott topped the losers at bat. The box score:

SPORTS DAY BY DAY

Baseball, Lacrosse, Soccer Softball, Bowling, etc.

By C. J. P.

And that's one we don't have to worry about. We mean that 5-1 win over Belleville in the first playoff game yesterday. We slept till noon and then went down to Riverside and saw the Lee gang cop a neat victory, which also meant two fish plus four bits—from a bet—for us. Not a bad day's work, at all. The Petes go to Belleville tomorrow for the second tilt at three bells, and play the third—and we expect the final one—here Saturday. If we can knock Chief Williams out of the box, we ought to be just about able to win the series in three straight. However, we'll give the Petes four game to do it, and if they muff out then, well they're not so hot. At present, they look pretty warm to us.

• • • • • • •

Something like fifteen hundred fans took in yesterday's ball game, and they saw a pretty fair fixture. The Lee outfit got a 3-0 bulge in the third, but it was quite uncertain up until the eighth when they slid two more across. Those Nats break out in a rash of base hits at the slightest provocation, so you never can sometimes always tell. They're not licked yet, by any means, but we think they're on the run.

• • • • • • •

Russ Kitchen pitched a smart game of ball in this opening number. He mixed 'em up nice, and his sharp hook had quite a few of the Nats looking for the line and sinker. And Russ had beautiful support. The whole team, with Ash, Murray, Konopka and Batten in particular, rose to real heights to slap over the Mills' crew. They not only bingled the big Chief pretty steadily, but they robbed the Quinte lads repeatedly of hits with grand fielding. Konopka's sore arm is still bothering his throw, but Ash generally saves the situation with one of his circus pickups. The outfield also grabbed everything that came their way.

• • • • • • •

The Petes are playing nice ball lately. They have the pitching, the fielding and should have the hitting—though not always. They also have a good coach. We look for them to not only knock off Belleville but to go right to the Ontario finals. They may or may not win the Provincial title, but they should get into the finals. The home rooters have been giving them good support and we hope they will continue. We've been plugging away in baseball a long time and building up for a winner, and this year we may reap some results.

• • • • • • •

The local lads Saturday finished up on top of the C.O.B.L. heap with a win over Oshawa. They dropped one game of the double-header but finished on the top rung in spite of Belleville's 9-0 nod over Kingston. The Petes used a revamped lineup Saturday that went good in the first game, while the Old Reliables went in there in the second fixture and battled hard, but could not eke out the verdict. Deyell hurled good ball in the first, while Moose Mathews proved a bit too good for us in the second. Not many attended, most of the fans waiting for the playoffs.

• • • • • • •

Our scrappy intermediate Cogs yanked out an 8-7 in in twelve innings Saturday in Fort Hope over Bowmanville to grab this playdown series. They meet Kingston next, first game here at 4.15 p.m. Wednesday in the Exhibition Grounds. They rate plenty of support. Casey Masterson twirled a swell game for the Clubmen, and his buddies came through with the old garrison windup to eliminate the Lakeshore Loop champs. Booke got to first and stole second for the Davis' crew in the twelfth, while a flock of fans were so twitchy with excitement they looked like a St. Vitus dance chorus. Then Doug Moore ankled up to the platter and whammed a clean drive through second to score the winner. They'll meet tough opposition in this Kingston squad.

The L.O.L. picnic and softball tourney in the Oval Monday drew a goodly number and saw some close games. Maple Leafs won the gals' event, East City Growlers took the junior men's, Wimpy's won the men's intermediate, while Langley's of Oshawa won the senior affair by default. Seems Langley's and a local All-Star team were finalists at ten minutes to six, but, since they were due to play at Central at six, Langley's told the Stars that if the Stars would default to them at the Oval, they'd playoff for the prizes at Central. This won done, with the All-Stars strengthening up somewhat to win out, 16-10. Shine held this second-best team in Oshawa in subjection throughout—despite the fact that a week ago the Motor City scribe told us they had several better pitchers than Frankie in Oshawa.

• • • • • • •

Since the Aajmaa Club of Belleville eliminated Cobourg by 24 to 19 on their semi-final lacrosse round, the local Kiwanis open their playoff series tonight in Belleville. Return fixture is at 8.15 in the Armouries here Friday, goals counting on the round. The winner advances into the Ontario intermediate playdowns. We understand the Quinte gang has been bolstered up a bit and still use several former Campbellford players. Oh, well, we ought to be able to knock 'em off anyway.

OSHAWA TAKES TWILIGHT WIN BY 4-1 COUNT

Dukes Get to Abbie Rose in the Third to Score Three Runs.

SCRIVER GOES PART WAY.

A big third inning, in which they scored three runs, gave Oshawa the second game of their double-header with the Petes here Saturday by a 4-1 count. The Dukes got to Abbie Rose in the third and chased him, walks and hits doing the damage. Spook Scriver hurled the rest of the frame and the next, giving no hits and fanning two in a promising comeback. Bill Calladine finished the game in good style. Moose Mathews held the Petes in check throughout, with good support.

Malott led the victors with the willow, banging out a double and two singles in four, while Rowden hit a triple and single in three. Batten got two for four for the losers, and Murray clouted a double. It was a snappy seven-inning contest with both sides dishing up smart defensive play. Dalton, Malott, Murray and Batten looked good in fielding. This game finished the Central Ontario League schedule for the year. The box score:

AIRMEN LOSE TO ELECTRICS BY 7-3 COUNT

Electrics Give Good Soccer Display in Taking Exhibition Fixture

ON LOCAL GROUNDS.

The C.G.E. soccer outfit were returned victors by 7-3 count over the Trent Air Force on Saturday on local grounds. The Airmen gave a good exhibition in their efforts to defeat the locals, but their playing was not quite up to the par of the Electrics who took on early lead and held onto it throughout the entire game.

The visitors won the toss and C.G.E. kicked off. The locals went down field and forced a corner, which was well taken, but Jones spoiled their chances by giving away a foul. The game was very evenly contested, the ball travelling at great speed from end to end; C.G.E. came again and a soft header was allowed to slip between the goalkeeper's legs to score the first goal for C.G.E.

The game continued hard and in a raid on the home goal Kydd, the Trenton inside right, sent in a hard drive which beat Curtis all the way to even up the score. Both teams now went at it for all they were worth in an effort to secure the lead; C.G.E. were lucky when, on one of their raids the visiting goalkeeper made another bad miss, which meant another goal for C.G.E.

Clarke, for C.G.E., broke past the defence and beat the visiting goalkeeper with a fine shot. Shortly afterwards, Clark again got through to score a fourth goal. Give-and-take play followed until half time, which arrived with the score reading: C.G.E., 4; Trenton, 1.

Good Defence

Trenton kicked off and at once bore down on the home goal. They had some good tries, but the local defence was playing a sound game and did not give their opponents many chances to shoot. C.G.E. then took up the running, and after continued pressure Mitchell scored, making it five for C.G.E.

C.G.E. did a bit of pressing and another bad miss by the Trenton goalkeeper let in another soft goal for C.G.E. Trenton again came away and this time with success; the outside right got away and placed nicely across goal for the inside left to score Trenton's second goal. Again both clubs made great efforts—C.G.E. to keep their lead and Trenton to reduce it. Again luck was with the locals when the visiting back missed the ball, to let Earl in to score. Despite this reverse, Trenton never let up, but came again and again and received their reward when the inside right breasted the ball through for the third goal.

Referee—A. McKinley.
Linesmen—D. James and R. Clyde.
Teams:
Trenton.—Broadley; Wright and Bradshaw; James, Howell and Tennant; Walsh, Kelly, Goldie, Kydd and McKenzie.
C.G.E. — Curtis, Bolam and Blowers; Burgess, Jones and McPhatae; Quinn, Earl, Clark, Mitchell and Post.

It was tough luck for Trenton that their regular goalkeeper was absent through illness, and the sub. was not used to playing in that position. A draw would have been a good result for the game.

ORIOLES WILL MEET ALBIONS

Birds Gain South-end Finals as Result of 18-13 Win Over Nationals.

FIRST GAME TO-NIGHT.

Orioles will meet the Albions in the finals of the South-End Softball League as a result of their 18-13 win over Nationals in the semi-final game Saturday. First game of the finals will be at 5.30 on Tuesday in the Brinton Field, it being best three out of five for the loop title.

Nats started out strong and had a four-run lead going into the fourth, but the Birds bunched hits and took advantage of errors to get five, and came back next frame to garner five more. Red Hunter for Orioles gave eleven hits and seven walks, while fanning four. Reynolds on the other mound was touched for but eight hits and four walks, but was yanked for Ward in the fifth, the latter going no better. The Nats were short two regulars and did not play their best. Parsons, Millard and Gardino all played a good game. The box score:

Vanderbilt's Discovery electrified a record throng of 40,000 by racing to a new world's record of 1.59 for a mile and three-sixteenths at Narragansett Park yesterday to capture the $15,000 added Rhode Island handicap, which brought to a brilliant conclusion the most successful race meeting of the year.

BATTLE TO 1-1 TIE

HAMILTON — Rangers and Tigers, Ontario Cup district finalists were deadlocked as the result of their 1-1 tie game here yesterday. For 88 minutes out of the regulation 90, Tigers were on top. Local officials had the Brigden Cup on the ground, to be awarded the district champions for presentation, when Rangers scored the goal that evened the count.

TIGERS WILL BE AN EASY MORSEL

Bengals Will be Easier Than Senators Last Year, Belief of Bill Terry.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 4 (AP)—Big Bill Terry, cocksure manager of the world's champion Giants, said to-day Detroit Tigers would be easier for his team to defeat in the World Series than were Washington Senators last year.

Although the Giants haven't the National League flag nailed down yet, and there may be a slip between Mickey Cochrane's crew and the American League pennant, Terry stated:

"If we win the pennant, we will take the Tigers in stride. Afraid of them? Don't be silly. We aren't afraid of any club in baseball.

"I think they will be easier to whip than was Washington last year, and you know the Senators did not cause us to lose any sleep.

"Pitching will decide the championship as usual and I cannot see how Rowe, Bridges and Marberry are going to have anything on Hubbell, Schumacher, Fitzsimmons and Parmelee.

"Don't forget Rowe will not be at his peak. The strain of maintaining a winning streak such as he had takes a lot out of a man.

Replying to an inquiry about Marberry, Terry said "He might have been fast at one time. Now he couldn't drive his fast ball through a pancake."

Goldsmith Pitches Fishers To 4-0 Win

(By The Canadian Press)

The amazing Lefty Goldsmith of Southampton Fishermen, the storybook pitcher who has no ambition to get out of his own Bruce League, was back on the road to the Ontario Baseball Association Intermediate "A" championship to-day. Like Jimmy McLarnin, the welterweight puncher. Goldsmith never leads twice in a row with his chin.

Strathroy Millers surprised the estimable Fishermen a week ago with a one-inning assault that netted five straight hits and a 4-2 victory in the first game of the playdown series. The five hits were all the Millers got. Yesterday, before a Labor Day crowd of 4,500, Goldsmith pitched his team to a 4-0 triumph and tied up the series.

The southpaw ace, unbeaten this season till he faced Strathroy, permitted two separated hits and struck out nine. He walked none and contributed the only extra-base hit of the contest, a two-bagger. The Fishermen touched Art Fiddler, Strathroy right-hander, for 12 hits.

If It Had not been for that veteran pair of doubles players—J. J. Rowden and Joe Bennett—Peterborough would have been practically wiped out as far as outside tournaments were concerned yesterday. . . .

—o—

This Grand Old Pair have been playing Scotch doubles for years and are generally looked upon as being about the best in this district. If they had won the Bickle Memorial Cup this year that would have been four times in seven years.

—o—

As It Is they hold the record of winning it three times in six years. We believe this record will be hard to beat. However, we congratulate this team for doing so well. They each received a Hudson Bay blanket for their efforts.

—o—

Down At Fort Hope G. Cairns of Peterborough was just lucky enough to win the last prize in the Hard Luck event or else the Peterborough contingent would have come home talking to themselves. At that the "Hard Luck" competition was an added event.

—o—

Twenty-six Rinks made up the annual tournament of that town, with Peterborough, as usual sending down the bigger representation—namely five rinks.

—o—

D. Little and D. Smith were the pair to represent Peterborough at Belleville yesterday. There were forty-eight entries from all over the district.

—o—

Up On Our own greens we also staged a nice little mixed tournament. Fourteen rinks made up a nice draw. Three twelve end games were played. The winning rinks were skipped by G. Coleman, Sr., H. Martin and George Hutchinson.

CHAPTER 30

Giles stepped forward and met Joan as she came in. "You," she said, and he wondered if it was his fancy, or if she really waited a moment before she held out her hand to him. He took it in a close grasp.

"Are you glad to see me?" he demanded, "are you?"

Looking up into his smiling eyes, she knew that she was glad and said, honestly, "Yes."

"It is a miracle, my finding you. Even now I don't believe it."

"Tell me about it," she dropped into a chair in front of the fire and began to unbutton her jacket.

As she talked he was aware of a change in her. She was thinner, paler. He missed in her the vividness which had been one of her chief charms. She waked into keen interest, however, when he spoke of finding the handkerchief in the book.

"How did you know it was mine?" she demanded.

He reached into his pocket and brought out a wisp of rose-color. "You see?" he said, "you dropped it the night of the storm. And I knew the fragrance."

"Oh," she said, and a flush came into her cheek. He wondered what the flush meant. Was she offended?

There was a moment's silence out of which he said, "Won't you tell me of yourself? You see I've heard nothing."

"There isn't much to tell, except that I am not going to marry Drew, and that Aunt Adelaide and I aren't friends."

"That seems to be enough," he leaned forward a little. "My dear, why didn't you leave a line for me?"

She started to speak and stopped. Oh, why should she tell him? That she knew he had a wife? He might misunderstand her attitude, think her self-conscious.

"I thought it best not to let anyone know," was her explanation. And just then Penelope came in with the tea. After that the conversation was general. At last Joan spoke of her dancing class. "You should see the children."

"You should see Joan," Penelope said, "she's like a fairy."

Giles shook his head. "I told her when I first met her she was a dryad."

When they told of the Thanksgiving pageant, Giles said, "I wish you'd invite me."

Penelope was eager, "We'd love it. Couldn't you stay over and have Thanksgiving dinner with us?"

He looked at Joan. "Yes," she said, "why not?"

It was dark when Giles rose to go. "I will walk with you through the wood," Joan offered unexpectedly.

"Won't you be afraid to come back alone?" Giles asked.

"No, I do it often, and there's a moon."

They went through the kitchen, and when the door was opened, old Muffet like a gray shadow slipped out ahead of them and was lost in the gloom. The wind was blowing a gale, and as they walked along in the darkness, Giles took Joan's arm, anchoring her, as it were, against the blast. "I can't tell you," he said, "how glad I am that you are here with that good woman. I suppose I should regret your break with your aunt, but I don't. Not after seeing Mrs. Sears. A year with her is better than a decade with Mrs. Delafield."

"Penelope's a darling," Joan agreed, "but there are times when I miss—the fleshpots."

They walked on for a while in silence, then Joan added, "And there are times when I miss—Drew."

All at once, tumultously, because he was her friend and because there in the windy dark it seemed easy to give him her confidence, she told him all about it. She began from the moment in the storm when Giles left her with Drew. She told of the pressure which had been brought to make her apologize. "Aunt Adelaide wanted to bend me to her will . . . and I wouldn't." She told of her final rebellion and departure. But she did not tell him that she had been to the bookshop and had seen Scripps.

At the very last, came the confession of Drew's visit and his wish to marry her. "He didn't want anyone to know. And I wouldn't."

"The cad . . ." Giles' voice was sharp.

She hastened to her lover's defense, "No, he isn't that. But he feels it is silly to offend Aunt Adelaide, when we need what she has to give us. And he was afraid that if we didn't get married something might come between."

"Nothing could come between if you cared enough."

"That's what I told him."

"And now . . ." Giles asked after a moment, "you have given him up?"

"I'm afraid not . . ." he had to bend to catch the words.

"It still—hurts . . ."

"Yes."

"I know, my dear," he was all tenderness. "Yet when I heard you were to marry him, I felt as if you were a little ship headed for the rocks. That some one ought to warn you. Light a beacon fire. Yet how could I? I had to stand by and watch . . . and wait . . ."

She tried to laugh, "And now the little ship is—wrecked."

"No. There's a flag still flying, and the sails are set—for happiness. Joan, I shouldn't say this but I must. I can't bear to think that some day you may marry Hallam. I love you too much . . . I love you . . ."

"Oh, please," she stopped and stood away from him. "Oh, don't spoil it."

"Spoil what?"

"Our friendship. Oh, it is—hateful to have you speak of love."

"Hateful?" his voice was stern, "I am sorry."

They walked on in silence after that. And now Giles did not touch her. When they reached the place where she was to leave him, he said, "Is this the end?"

"Yes."

"And I am not to come and see you?"

"No."

"Not even on Thanksgiving?"

"No."

"But, Joan, why?"

"If you don't know I can't tell you."

She knew that she should have faced him with the fact, "You have a wife." But she couldn't. And anyhow the thing was ended. She had lost Drew and she had lost Giles. She said, "Goodby" in a breathless voice, and turned away from him and went back alone under the trees.

When she reached the house and opened the door, old Muffet slipped in ahead of her. The old cat had a mouse in her mouth. She had caught it in the wood, and Joan saw her yield up the limp body to her kittens. Life was like that. Cruel. Muffet had been only a half hour away. Yet in that time something had been killed.

The Thanksgiving pageant took place in the school house. It had been decided that as friends and families were to be invited, Penelope's living room would not be big enough.

There were hangings on the school room ceiling of blue with silver stars as if the sky were overhead, and on the low platform was an altar, with a brazier upon it in which a fire burned steadily. To the right and left of the altar were screens covered with gold paper. After the audience had gathered, the lights went out, and when they were turned on again, the children were posed classically against the screens, in tunics of green and purple, of blue and red. Each bore some fruit of the harvest, and when the music began they progressed in a swaying march, which brought them to the middle of the floor, around which the audience sat in a wide half-circle.

In the center of the room the marchers separated, and each one stepped forth in an individual dance, which ended in the laying of a gift at the foot of the altar. Then the dancer stepped back, and another dancer came forward.

Behind one of the golden screens, Joan played the piano. A peephole gave her a view of the children . . . there was Priscilla, apple blossoms in her hair and carrying a tray heaped with the luscious fruit; her brother, John, sturdy in brown and yellow, with his wreath of wheat, bringing a sack of fresh-baked bread to set by the side of the combs of honey which a tiny child with a crown of golden bees held high on a silver dish.

Evelyn Briggs said to Penelope, "It's a most wonderful thing."

DRUNKS CREATE CHURCH SCENE

Man and Woman Interrupt Jarvis Street Baptist Service.

EJECTED BY POLICE

TORONTO, Sept. 4.—Dr. T. T. Shields' campaign against the new beverage rooms was given fresh impetus Sunday night when an intoxicated man and woman entered Jarvis Street Baptist Church during his sermon, took seats in the middle of the front row, and proceeded to heckle the minister in blasphemous terms.

Attempts to quiet them failed, both from the pulpit and by nearby church worshippers.

Half a dozen church officials, including a police officer off duty, proceeded to take charge of the man.

A violent scuffle resulted. The man was only removed after a battle of several minutes, in which shins were kicked and punches landed by the cause of the disturbance. All the time the organist played at a crescendo in his effort to drown out the sounds of battle.

Outside the church, a crowd of non-churchgoers booed the efforts of a constable to hold the man, who turned out to be Leslie Dale, 24, a beverage dispenser in a district hotel.

A few minutes later, the woman (who proved to be Mrs. Joseph Dale, 45, mother of the other) was taken from the church service by a uniformed motorcycle officer when she stepped up to the rail and endeavored to argue with Dr. Shields on a point he had been making.

"A fine example of the beer parlor right here," summed up the minister. "This exhibition may have been permitted in the providence of God in order that thousands of people may see the utterly demoralising effect of this liquor curse. We shall have similar disturbances everywhere unless it is corrected."

A few minutes later an elderly woman in the gallery fainted from the excitement and was carried out.

BETHANY.

Miss Laura Hutchison, of Toronto, is visiting her sister and other friends this week on her summer vacation.

Mrs. Wesley Galloway, of the 8th line, spent Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. Foster, Glengarry road.

Mrs. Patterson, of Lindsay, was a recent guest of Mrs. S. Murphy and called on former acquaintances in the village and vicinity.

Mrs. M. Garratte, of Toronto, is spending summer vacation at the home of her mother, Mrs. Johnston Morton.

Mr. William Davis is spending a few days with his daughter, Mrs. James Boggs, of Manvers Station.

Mrs. Ross Carr and babe returned home from a visit with friends in Toronto this week.

Mrs. Johnston Morton was at home to a number of her neighbors and members of St. Paul's W. A. and served afternoon tea from 3 until 5 o'clock on Thursday p.m., August 30.

Mr. Arthur Jamison, of Port Perry, was the guest of his mother, Mrs. S. Jamison, on Wednesday and attended a bakers' convention held at Millbrook in the evening.

"NERVES" she called it

—it was really her KIDNEYS

She tried to get through each day as best she could. Never comfortable—always distressed. Low in vitality—lower in spirits. She hadn't thought of her kidneys, until a friend suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills—for over three generations the favorite kidney tonic and remedy. Seeking relief she immediately took Dodd's. The "washed out" feeling was soon replaced by clear headed energy and restful sleep. Headache, backache, and other signs of faulty kidneys soon disappeared.

TRADES UNIONS MARK LABOR DAY

Toronto Witnesses Largest Turnout in Past Ten Years.

PARADES IN MONTREAL.

(By the Canadian Press).

Record turnouts marked Labor Day celebrations throughout the Dominion yesterday when members of all trades unions gathered to hear addresses by government officials and Labor leaders and to indulge in sports programs and picnics. Toronto witnessed the largest attendance at a Labor Day gathering in the last 10 years when members of national and international unions met at the Canadian National Exhibition grounds.

The Montreal parade was featured by a float in memory of Jacques Cartier's landing on Canadian shores 400 years ago. In practically every city of the country parades were staged, containing floats depicting the advance of industry, more than 10,000 persons joining in the Toronto parade.

The Workers' Unity League in Toronto held its own celebration with Sam Carr, convicted Communist, recently released from Kingston Penitentiary, addressing the meeting at the Exhibition Grounds.

In an address before the trade union members in Toronto, Attorney-General Arthur W. Roebuck of Ontario announced the Provincial Government had invited all provinces of the Dominion to join in forming a national code for industry to be enforceable by law.

OSHAWA TAKES 18-10 HONORS SENIOR TUSSLE

Dinty's Inn Bows to Wimpy's 10-9 After Tumbling Tigers 12-3 in Intermediate.

Nicholls Oval was the mecca yesterday for hundreds of people from the city and district who flocked in for the first annual softball tournament, held under the auspices of the District L.O.L., and while a warm summer sun beamed down on the happy crowd, eleven softball teams competed in hard fought games for the various prizes.

The best brand of ball on the program was produced in the senior section, when Omemee and Langley's of Oshawa hooked up in fast battle, but the Motor City nine showed too much class for the villagers and finally romped off with an 18 to 10 victory. A third senior entry defaulted at the last moment. Clever ball was dished up in the intermediate section which had three entries. In the semi-final, the Tigers tumbled Dinty's Inn 12 to 3, but bowed to Wimpy's in the final 10-9. The winners pitched Fred Elliott, and the team was made up mostly of players from the Nationals. The first game in the junior section, slated to go seven frames, was not decided until ten full innings had been played, with Mike O'Leary's Growlers defeating Omemee juniors, 8-7. In the finals the Growlers tossed the Rinky-Dinks, a south end team for a 12-8 loss, to win the championship, and the twelve prizes donated by Board and Huffman.

The line-ups:—

Tigers—W. Starr, c; J. Mann, ss; Young, rf; T. Montgomery, p; J. Grisdale, lf; L. Walsh, 1b; F. Montgomery, cf; P. McGillen, 3b; N. Foster, 2b.

Leafs Win 6-4

In the Girls' section, the Omemee team met the Maple Leafs in a nine inning battle, which wound up with the Leafs on top 6-4. Genevieve Mann hurled the whole game for the winners, tossing in a fast ball that was hard to hit outside of the infield and her teammates came through with a great fielding performance behind her. Ev. Morecombe and Jean Hickson divided the hurling duties for the losers but both were hit hard. Agnes Sturgeon at short for the Leafs played a sensational game handling every chance without a slip. The winners received silver compacts.

Line-ups:

Omemee—D. Rehill, cf; D. Sherin, 1b; E. Bigelow, c; H. Fisher, 2b; R. McQuade, 3b; Hickson, ss, p; Morecombe, p, ss; Mages, rf; P. Bigelow, lf.

Too Much For Omemee

Langley's of Oshawa, who finished second to the team which put the Orphans out of the running, trotted out a smart team, and started Scott on the rubber against Omemee in the senior competition. The visiting pitcher showed plenty of smoke and held the Omemee batters to four hits in six frames, fanning two. He walked five in a row in the fifth when the losers tallied three times. Campbell went in at the start of the seventh and finished the game. He allowed four hits, five runs and fanned four with a fast breaking hook that baffled the opposition. Tom Parsons started for Omemee and lasted four innings. He was hit hard and his support was shaky. The visitors nicked him for nine hits, nine runs and one walk. He whiffed two. Shine followed him and gave seven safe bingles which meant for nine runs. He fanned four.

The teams:

KINGSTON HERE FOR FIRST GAME

Cogs to Tangle With Limestone Intermediate Champions on Wednesday.

Cogs start their second round O. B.A.A. playdowns here to-morrow (Wednesday) when they meet Kingston's Intermediate champions at 4.15 in the Exhibition Grounds. Not a great deal is known of the Limestone squad, but they are said to be a powerful aggregation of experienced ball players. Cogs won the right to meet them by eliminating Bowmanville, Lakeshore titleholders, in a nifty first round series, and the Clubmen hope to continue in the hunt by putting Kingston out. They deserve a big crowd and fans are almost sure to see a smart play-off contest.

Lefty Billingsley or Percy Vannest will get the locals' hurling assignment, and bother are expected to step in and pitch a good game. Casey Masterson was the twirling hero of the recent series, but he will likely get a rest in this game. These other two are equally smart throwers and are due to hit their stride again. The team will be at top strength and prepared for a great battle in an effort to cop the first fixture of the series.

BOB PIRIE WINS BUFFALO HONORS

Johnny Coulson, Also of Toronto, Captures Aquatic Honors.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Sept. 4 (C.P.)—Young Bob Pirie and Johnny Coulson, two of Toronto's up-and-coming water athletes, to-day held the feature awards which were up for competition in Buffalo harbor on Labor Day.

Pirie was pounds the best of the 22 narrators who vied for the United States National Amateur Athletic Union distance swim.

Coulson won the featured mile and one-quarter single sculls race.

Fresh from his fine showing at the British Empire Games in England, the strapping Pirie paced himself perfectly in the swim race, which was over a course of approximately three miles.

He stayed with the pack until the half-way mark then, with powerful, even strokes, pulled away to win handily in one hour, 10 minutes, 57 seconds. There was a mild current to battle.

Henry Tresnak of New York was second. Warren Piddy of St. Catharines, Ont., finished fourth.

In the sculls race Coulson, member of the Argonaut Club, flashed over the mile and one-quarter course in seven minutes, 35 seconds. Irvin Konrad, of Buffalo, was a length back.

Konrad gained a bit of revenge in the quarter-mile dash, nosing Coulson out by a scant yard. The winner's time was one minute, 16 seconds.

Wilson lasted less than a month with the Phillies, having been signed Aug. 10.

TENNIS POSTPONED.

FOREST HILLS, N.Y., Sept. 4.—(A.P.).—The day's program of the United States men's singles tennis championships to-day was postponed until to-morrow, and the whole program moved back another day. An overnight rain made the courts unplayable.

The finals now will be played on Monday, instead of Saturday as originally planned.

GEORGE LOTT HAS BEST CHANCE OF DETHRONING BRITISH PERRY

Ellsworth Vines Believes Davis Cup Veteran Most Heady Player in Tourney.

AN ABLE SHOTMAKER.

(By Bob Canagnaro, Associated Press Sports Writer.)

FOREST HILLS, N.Y., Sept. 4 (AP)—George Martin Lott, Jr., of Chicago, the Davis Cup doubles veteran, is rated by no less a talented performer than Ellsworth Vines as having the best chance of dethroning Fred Perry, the sparkling Briton, in the current men's United States singles tennis championship.

Vines, twice winner of the crown and a professional since the first of the year, based his calculation on the belief that "It will take a heady player as well as an able shot-maker to defeat Perry."

"George has both—the shots and a smart, quick-acting brain," Vines said to-day.

Fred Perry Dubious

"I had lunch with Fred Perry the other day, and he impressed me as being a little dubious about his chances against Lott. If form holds true, they'll probably meet in the fourth round and their match very likely will develop into the best in the tournament.

"Perry can be taken, but not very easily. I'm not breaking faith or confidence when I say that Lott can beat Fred by drilling away at Perry's backhand, and throwing a flock of drop shots at him

Headiest Player in U S.

"In my opinion Lott is the 'headiest' player in this country to-day and if a vulnerable spot shows up in Perry's game you can count on him to take prompt advantage of it.

"On the other hand, in order to take Perry, Lott will have to be in good physical condition as well as having his serve working. If George can keep Fred back I'd say he has a 50-50 chance of beating him."

Two contenders for the title—Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, and Clifford Sutter, the transpanted New Orleans star now living in New York, shared Vines' viewpoint.

"Who has the best chance of taking Perry?" they were asked.

"George Lott," they replied in chorus.

CARPET BALL

Once more the Coco mats are being taken out of the moth balls and the Porcelains being inspected and polished up whilst the old members of the City Carpet Ball League, with the prospective members, look forward to another year's play. Last season, this league consisted of twenty-two teams—fourteen church teams and eight lodge entries. This year, many more are anticipating entry.

This year, many more are anticipating entry. The first meeting of the league will take place on Thursday, Sept. 13th, instead of on Sept. 6th. Any lodge or church considering entering a team or teams is cordially invited to attend this meeting. Very few notices regarding changes in the constitution have been received to date, which shows that the standing rules are generally favorable. It is hoped that all members will bear in mind that Sept. 13th is the date for election of officers and other important business to get the league off to a good start, and to get an idea of how many teams will join this lively league this season.

SPRING GRAIN HARVEST GOOD

Oats and Barley Yield High Average in Millbrook District.

CORN CROP FAIR

MILLBROOK, Sept. 4.—(Examiner Correspondence).—A survey of crop conditions in the immediate neighborhood of Millbrook reveals that while very little fall wheat survived the severe winter, yet what has been harvested yielded well, probably at the rate of thirty bushels to the acre. Spring wheat yields average from twenty to twenty-five bushels to the acre.

On the whole barley is reported good, both in quantity and quality, easily giving thirty-five bushels per acre, and oats are a better crop than for some previous seasons; the grain is plump and threshings so far done show a yield of from forty to fifty bushels to the acre. Some farmers have had as high as sixty bushels per acre from certain fields.

As far as peas are concerned the fancy varieties have given an average of from seventeen to twenty-three bushels, while the common kind run as high as twenty-seven and twenty-eight. In some cases fields of peas were struck by insects and hence returned little more than seed, but in this district very few fields suffered to this extent, and no fields are reported as not going over fifteen bushels to the acre.

Potatoes have not many tubers to the hill and the next two weeks will determine the size, the recent rain helping a very great deal. Mangels are a fair crop, and will also be helped by the rain, as will likewise the turnips, this month being the one that has a good deal to do with making or marring the turnip crop.

Generally speaking, corn is fair. The dry weather has told on this crop and in some places leaves have curled up for want of moisture. Ears are also said, in some instances, to be not properly filled. Examination shows that a number of kernels have failed to grow, leaving cobs uneven when harvested. The rain over the week-end, however, will greatly benefit the root crop throughout this section, and has seldom been more needed or welcome.

COMING

RUPTURE
Troubles

Representatives of Wm. S. Rice, Adams, N.Y., originator of the Rice Method for the self-treatment of rupture at home, will be at the Empress Hotel, Peterboro', Ont. afternoon and evening of Thurs., Sept. 6 and all day Fri., Sept. 7, to give a personal and free trial of his method to all sufferers who want to end rupture trouble and truss wearing.

No matter how bad the rupture, how long you have had it, or how hard to hold; no matter how many kinds of trusses you have worn, let nothing prevent you from getting this FREE TRIAL. Whether you are tall and thin, short and stout, have a large abdomen, whether you think you are past help or have a rupture as large as your fists, this marvelous Method will so control and keep it up inside as to surprise you. It will so restore the parts where the rupture comes through that soon you will be as free to work at any occupation as though you had never been ruptured.

The trial will be absolutely complete and thorough without a penny of cost.

You owe it to your own personal comfort and safety not to miss the great free demonstration. It is a real opportunity to learn how you may be done with chafing trusses and the danger, suffering and trouble your rupture has caused.

The hours Thur. are 2-5 p.m. and 7-9 in the evening. The hours Fri. are 9-12 a.m., 1-5 p.m. and 6-7 in the evening. Remember the dates and place, Empress Hotel, Peterboro', Ont.

Dangerous Spot

SOMERSET, Pa., Sept. 4 (CP)—James Berdill is convinced that nearby Hooverville's streets are safer than the town jail.

Police arrested him on complaint of his wife and put him in a cell. Next morning, he appeared at a constable's home and complained that, during the night, two men entered the jail, unlocked his cell, robbed him of $14 75, and turned him out. No one is on duty at the jail at night.

COMMANDEER SEATS

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN,
Central Press Canadian Writer.

VIENNA, Sept. 4.—Every clan has its own hang-out in Vienna. The high-bourgeoisie, pompous, chiefs of government departments, ex-cabinet ministers of the republic, pensioned judges of the high court, all frock-coated and stiff-collared, all very important, foregather in the cafe "Graben." Professors, private dozenten, lecturers of the university, foreign scientists taking post-graduate courses, sit at the old "Cafe Central." Subjects of discussion here are not as weighty as you might imagine. It seemed to me that the learned doctors do an inordinate lot of checker-playing, and that it takes them an unconscionable long time to make a move on the boards. In the meantime, I suppose, they think. They stimulate thought by drinking coffee.

Have Seats Reserved.

Architects and musical artists are to be found at a cafe rightfully known as the "Museum," for a museum is a place devoted to the divine muses. Museums are not, originally, mere collection houses for mummies, old frocks and wisdom teeth of prehistoric mammals. What brought architects and musicians together is more of a mystery than I can solve. It's a pity Sherlock Holmes is dead. I'd know several sleuthing jobs for him here in Vienna. For instance For instance, why did Herr Franz von Papen, the new German ambassador-extraordinary leave six hours after arrival, and why did Prince Starhemberg take the next aeroplane back to Rome, whence he had just come? World politics! The plot thickens. It's as clear as pea-soup!

The journalists, of whom there are an almighty big lot in Vienna, divide themselves in their leisure hours, which, it seemed to me, amount to about twenty-four hours of the day, over the following three famous cafes: the Casino, the Kursalon and the Rebhuhn. Reghuhn means literally spring-chicken. This has no bearing on the journalists, who are grave and high-hatted old gentlemen, most of them. There are also some working newspapermen in Vienna. But you seldom see them at the cafes. Somebody's got to do the work. The Viennese papers have a new edition on the street every hour from three till midnight. After midnight the world goes whirling through space—unrecorded. Editorials appear on the front page. The Viennese journalists don't hide their opinions.

"The same seat in the same cafe till death doeth us part!" That's an old Viennese maxim. Woe the stranger who drops accidentally into the accustomed seat of a Viennese habitue during his absence. Woe, I say. Shots might fall or the unwary intruder may be challenged to a duel. However, those calamities have never happened yet. The habitue is never absent.

Hear German Propaganda.

A good Viennese comes to the cafe at three in the afternoon, meets his friends, goes home for supper around seven, is back again at nine, sits in the same seat and stays till closing time, which is shortly before dawn. Many snooze in their corners. Some slumber soundly and accompany same by a low humming sound which harmonizes perfectly with the basso profundo of the string orchestra. That's life in Vienna, "where romance started" . . . and died.

Since Herr Hitler, a fellow-Austrian, came to be chancellor in a certain neighboring country and the Nazis devote an awful lot of attention to radio-propaganda, every cafe in Vienna has installed a loud-speaker. This loud-speaker is turned on between nine and ten, when all the habitues of all the cafes are in their places. It is the hour that Dr. Roebbels is on the air, or Theodore Habicht, his assistant for Austrian affairs, or Herr Frauenfeld, another assistant. Checker, domino, chess, and card players interrupt their game. Conversation stops. Waiters stand at attention. Everybody listens for about a minute. As soon as the word Austria is mentioned, the loud-speaker is turned off. Everybody says: "They're still at it," smiles in a relieved way and has another coffee.

Starhemberg Visits Italy.

Viennese coffee is the most famous coffee in the world. We don't know what coffee is. The French, who think they know, could be given Epsom salts and wouldn't know the difference. The English don't need to be given Epsom salts. Castor oil will do. That ought to be the punishment for the vile, half-warm, dirty liquid they serve you in English restaurants under the name of coffee. The Viennese got their coffee straight from the Turks, who, you will remember, once besieged Vienna and were chased by King John Sobiesky and one of the ancestors of Prince Starhemberg, the present vice-chancellor. In their camp the Turks left behind along with coffers of gold, treasure, silver and nine thousand harem-girls, a multitude of sacks with hard brown beans. The Viennese got the frightened harem-girls to show them what to do with the beans, and have been coffee-fiends ever since. Incidentally be it remarked that there are many dark-eyed frauleins among the Viennese, damsels altogether too dark for the vaunted Nordic strain. Now history shows beyond dispute that those Turkish harem-girls! . . . As I was saying, Prince Starhemberg is now in Rome again, conferring with the boss. That's his fifth trip since Dollfuss' death. He must like travel!

Waiters Know Nationality.

When a Viennese enters the cafe, has taken his seat, greeted his friends, a waiter approaches with due decorum and pours him out a cup of coffee, capucino, noisette or mordore, whatever blend and strength is desired. The waiter asks no questions. He knows his client's most secret thoughts . . . on the subject of coffee, let it be well understood. The client takes a sip, sighs and puts the cup down. It is a ritual gesture faithfully observed. They spot a stranger at once in Vienna by the way he gulps down his coffee, especially Englishmen, who, not having known that such nectar exists on earth, behave in a totally weird manner.

The waiter stands respectfully aside and then brings the client's favorite stack of newspapers. At the Cafe Sacher in Vienna there are no less than 1,500 newspapers on file from all parts of the world and in all languages. It is claimed that the waiters in that gorgeous and civilized establishment will unerringly bring you a newspaper in your mother language. I put one of them to the test. He brought me . . . the "Leeds Herald." "Why this paper" I asked, not without irritation. "Excuse me, sir," he said, "my mistake," and then gave me the Copenhagen "Tidinge." Unerring!

In the Rebhuhn, where the journalists congregate, are also to be found the movie people, actresses, extras, stars, directors, scenario-writers, many gigolos and a certain type of stoic lady who doesn't care for coffee but prefers gin-fizz. One of these ladies, I observed, had her finger-nails tinted green. Some say Vienna is ahead of Montparnasse in feminine fashions.

Necessary Apology.

The same lady sent a waiter over to tell me that the smoke of my pipe incommoded her. My pipe was out at the time. I apologized—long-distance—by gesture in the best Viennese manner, hand on my heart and all that sort of thing and put my pipe in my pocket. I felt a fool but then bethought myself of the Duke of Wellington. The duke, it seems, was told on one occasion that he must ask foregiveness of a Spanish grandee and go on his knees. The duke explained afterwards that he "did not care a two-penny damn about going on his knees; so down I plumped." The Very Rev. Ralph W. Inge, dean of St. Paul's, quotes these words in his new book, "Engl and," which I was reading here at the Cafe Sacher.

HUGH BERTRAM BURIED MONDAY

Sudden Passing of Respected Native Son is Widely Mourned.

FATHER WAS MEMBER

Funeral services were held at the family residence "Spring Garden" yesterday morning for Hugh Bertram, lifelong resident of the city, who died on Saturday afternoon following a brief illness.

Contracting a chill while attending Peterborough Exhibition, Mr Bertram developed pneumonia and pleurisy and was forced to take to his bed on Wednesday last. His sudden passing in his 64th year was received as a great shock by his many friends and acquaintances. A man of sterling qualities, he was held in widest esteem and deep respect.

A son of the late John Bertram and Helen S. Shields, he was born in the old family residence on north George street. His father was the Federal Member of Parliament for West Peterborough in 1870, and for many years conducted a hardware business in this city, besides being manager-owner of the Collins Inlet Lumber Company.

Following his early education in Peterborough Public Schools, the late Mr. Bertram attended Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, and for the past thirty-eight years had been engaged in dairy farming at the place of his death. The farm is located on Lot II, Concession 1, Smith Township, and as familiarly known as "Spring Garden." It was originally settled by Hugh Bertram, grandfather of the deceased who came to this country from Edinburgh, Scotland, and has been in possession of the family ever since.

A man of kindly, retiring disposition, Mr. Bertram was regarded as a successful farmer and a good neighbour. Chief among his interests were his home and church. He was a lifelong member of St. Paul's, and for some years was actively identified with Peterborough Rotary Club.

Besides his widow, formerly Bertha M. Sperry, who is at present confined to bed through illness, Mr. Bertram is survived by one son, John Anson Bertram, of "Spring Garden", also two brothers, Melville and John Bertram; and two sisters, Mrs. Thomas Bradshaw and Mrs. C. W. Pitt all of Toronto.

The Rev. Dr. A. T. Barr officiated at the funeral services, both at the residence and at the graveside in Little Lake Cemetery where interment was made. Pall-bearers were: Messrs. E. S. Martin, George Boucher, Vincent Eastwood, W. F. Turner, Willis Garrow, and Lieut.-Colonel W. Gordon Hall.

From out of town there were: Mrs. R. M. Bertram, sister-in-law, and son Ted; Mrs. C. W. Pitt, sister, and son Bertram; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bradshaw; and Mr. and Mrs. Melville Bertram, all of Toronto.

WAS STRANGLED THEN DRAGGED TO TROUT CREEK

Expert Criminologist Finds Marks of Rope on Victim's Throat.

DOZEN TESTIFY.

Witness Tells of Threats Made —Fiancee Remains Calm at Hearing.

Much new evidence in the Manvers murder mystery, which was first discovered two weeks ago today when the decomposed body of Peter Rogouskie, 43, Lithunanian farm hand and carpenter, was removed from its place of concealment in a trout stream, was disclosed yesterday afternoon during the inquest at Bethany.

More than a dozen witnesses testified at the hearing, but the evidence of two women and Dr. Edgar R. Frankish, of Toronto, expert criminologist of the Attorney-General's department, was of chief importance in causing the jury to find that Rogouskie was murdered on the evening of July 29 by strangling and drowning at the hands of a person or persons unknown.

Rogouskie's intention to marry rosy-cheeked Olive Romanic, 16, daughter of his employer, Michael Romanic, was explained by Annie Rogouskie, sister-in-law of the murdered man. It was while walking home from visiting his sister-in-law that he was assaulted at a lonely place on the road, strangled by a rope and then dragged 185 yards through the woods and thrown into the creek while still breathing, the evidence showed.

Told Of Threats

"He came to see me at my home about 12 o'clock and left about 5 in the afternoon after having his supper," Mrs. Rogouskie said. "He wanted to come and live with me again. He told me he was going to marry the Romanic girl in October.

"He told me that Dymtro Bolejesuk did not like him being engaged to Olive, and in the evenings Dymtro would come and peak in the window of the Romanic house. Peter and Michael Romanic would drive him away, he said. He told me too that Dymtro had said that he would fix him up if he went with that girl. I warned Peter that he had better watch out that Dymtro was a bad man. He said, 'I don't care'."

Mrs. H. Vanderyeyt, who resides less than half a mile from the scene of the murder, related that about 7 o'clock Sunday evening, July 29, she saw Rogouskie walking along the road toward Romanic's. In the morning she had seen him go past on his way to his sister-in-law's.

Heard Scream From Creek

"Some minutes after Peter had gone past my two boys, aged 12 and 10, went toward the creek to get the cows," she stated, "they came back all frightened saying they had heard terrible screams and were afraid to go further for the cows. I went to the side of the house and listened and I also heard screams coming from the woods."

Dr. Frankish stated that he had made a post mortem examination

Veteran Slays Wife's Lover, Wounds Self

CRAIK, Sask., Sept. 5 (C.P.).—George Glover, 58-year-old grain buyer, was dead to-day and Donald McKenzie, 45, in hospital with a bullet wound in his head, following what police said was murder and attempted suicide.

Glover died in hospital at Davidson of a bullet wound in the head. McKenzie, a crippled war veteran, showed slight improvement to-day. The shooting occurred yesterday.

Mrs. McKenzie, police said, was suffering from shock as a result of an attempt to shoot her. McKenzie was said to have been worried by an alleged friendship between his 31-year-old wife and Glover.

Police alleged McKenzie bought a rifle and some cartridges, drove to Glover's home, fired from his car through a window at Glover, then drove home, shot at his wife, missing her and turned the gun on himself.

Automobile production in England has nearly doubled in the last 10 years.

CAROLINA BANK YIELDS $100,000 TO BANDIT TRIO

President, Wife Seized to Open Vault—Children Left Tied to Beds.

RAID THEN CARRIED OUT.

Seize Cash, Take Manager— All Prisoners Freed, Two 30 Miles Out.

LAKE CITY, S.C., Sept. 5.—(AP)—Three men robbed the Palmetto Bank of Lake City of approximately $100,000 today after kidnapping J. H. Carter, the bank president, and his wife from their home and tying Carter's three children to their beds.

The three robbers invaded Carter's home about 8.15 a.m., 45 minutes before the opening hour of the bank, and held up the family with pistols.

The three children, the eldest a 16-year-old girl, were tied to their beds and Carter and his wife forced to accompany the robbers to the bank.

Enroute there, the leader of the trio of gunmen, a young red-haired man, told Carter they were taking him to open the vault after the time-lock had made it possible.

At the bank, however, they found Fred Stalvey, the cashier, had already arrived and the vault was unlocked. Taking what money was in the vault, the robbers then forced the two bankers and Mrs. Carter into their car and left.

Woman Let Go

Three blocks from the bank Mrs. Carter was put from the automobile and the robbers drove off with Carter and Stalvey.

Mrs. Carter ran home and released her children and then advised officers of the robbery.

By that time the bank robbers were out of Lake City and the first word of them again came when Carter and Stalvey telephoned from Lamar, 30 miles from here, that they had been released unharmed.

The bankers told officers that the bandits had four sawed-off shot guns, two sub-machine guns and six pistols in the automobile.

Hint Closed Pheasant Season Over Ontario

TORONTO, Sept. 5 (C.P.).—Possibility of a closed pheasant hunting season in all Ontario but Pelee Island and Essex County, was forecast to-day by D. J. Taylor, Deputy Minister of Game and Fisheries.

While stressing the fact there was nothing definite about the proposal, Mr. Taylor let it be known he was seriously considering the move, and would make an immediate survey of the situation.

He said the birds had a hard winter and there was a possibility the season would not be opened.

However, he added, he would sooner see the whole province either closed or opened. He disliked the idea of isolating certain sections for the hunting and closing the rest. Mr. Taylor promised to announce his decision in a few days.

MEDIATION IN CLOTH STRIKE BY ROOSEVELT

President to Name Board of Three Men for Enquiry.

STRIKE EXPANDING.

Number of Strikers Reported Increasing—Owners Plan Defense.

(By the Associated Press)

President Roosevelt moved today to appoint a mediation board for the general strike in the United States Textile industry at the same time that employers' representatives announced a meeting to plan a defence against alleged intimidation of workers remaining on their jobs.

The President acted at the request of the National Labor Relations Board and will shortly announce the personnel of a board of three members to enquire into the strike situation.

The president aside from this move, however, is contemplating no federal interference in the general strike.

Heads of the silk, woolen and cotton industrial organizations announced that they would meet today in an effort to effect a plan of defense against alleged intimidation forcing workers who desire to remain at their jobs to walkout.

At the conference will be George A. Sloan, president of the Cotton Textile Institute, Arthur G. Besse, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, and Peter Van Horn, president of the National Federation of Textiles.

More Factories Close

Reports from both South and East indicated that the number of strikers was increasing. Additional shutdowns were reported in many sections.

In New England where about 200,000 were employed at the time the strike call was issued, union leaders placed the number idle today at 100,000 while manufacturers claimed a conservative estimate would not exceed 70,000.

In the Paterson, N. J., area 20,000 silk and rayon workers were called out and union workers jammed strike headquarters for picketing instructions. A check of the effectiveness of the strike could not be immediately made but union leaders said they expected the strike would be "100 percent effective" because of the high state of union organization in the area.

City At Standstill

At Fall River, Mass., James Sinclair, president of the Fall River Cotton Manufacturers' Association, announced that the members of the Association would shut down all their plants throughout the city bringing the entire textile industry in Fall River to a complete standstill.

Frank Schweitzer, secretary-treasurer of the American Federation of Silk Workers and chairman of the Silk Strike Committee, said today that the walkout in the silk industry had been 80 percent effective.

In the Carolinas additional workers were reported out and mills shut down, bringing the total idle in the two states to 90,000.

ZELLER STORE EMPLOYS FORTY AT $13,000 COST

Extensive Alterations to Former Turnbull Building Under Way.

USING MAIN FLOOR

Simcoe Street Windows Being Removed—Two George Street Doors.

Forty men are at work renovating the former Turnbull building on the corner of George and Simcoe streets in preparation for the opening of a Zeller Store here at the end of this month. The general contract is in the hands of the J. K. Sheehy Construction Company of this city.

Involving mainly the ground floor but extending also to the basement and the second floor of the building, the cost of project is estimated at about $13,000. Frederick Goodfellow has been awarded the contract for the plumbing and heating and G. H. Watson, the wiring contract. The Hobbs Company of Toronto will supply the glass for the newly constructed front show windows, and steel needs are being supplied by the Disher Steel Company of Toronto.

Three Weeks' Work

With different squads moving in and out of the job, work for about forty men will continue for three weeks. The building is to be turned over to the Zeller Company by the contractor on September 22.

Two entrances to the main floor on the George street front are being constructed. The display windows formerly on the Simcoe street front are being removed. Only a service entrance will remain on that side of the building. Work on the basement and on the second floor is confined mainly to the construction of partitions and stock bins. It is understood that, for the present, only the main floor will be used for business by the Zeller Company.

Mechanical Woman At C.N.E. Goes Haywire Belts Her Manager, Sends Him To Hospital

TORONTO, Sept. 5. (C.P.). — Michael Harley of London, England, custodian of "Alpha," the robot woman being displayed at the Canadian National Exhibition, to-day crept from hospital with a sore shoulder and a bad case of the jitters.

He went back to look after "Alpha" with some trepidation after she belted him yesterday with a mailed fist and knocked him to the floor. Harley had no idea what caused the robot, pride of an electrical company, to go haywire. He was standing with his back to her. He had uttered no word of command, but suddenly the mechanical woman swung on him.

Harley dropped. Spectators and other attendants at the electrical booth rushed to his assistance, picked him up and sent him to hospital, where he was treated for bruises and shock. "Alpha," after turning on her master, stood motionless and expressionless till some one else started ordering her around.

"Does playing in shorts really help your game?" asked a woman in the gallery.

"Oh, yes," Miss Gottlieb answered. "Shorts make the course seem shorter."

SMITH'S DIARY AND MAP FOUND

Tin Can Container of Ill-fated Canoeist Yielded By Sea.

IN BELLE ISLE STRAITS.

ST. JOHN'S Newfoundland, Sept. 5.—A new reminder of the tragic disappearance of John Smith, young canoeist bound from Peterborough, Ontario, to Peterborough, England, cropped up with the finding of a tin can containing a diary, his map and other articles in Red Bay in the Belle Isle Straits yesterday. Exact details of the find were not available this morning.

It is believed that the point at which the tin can was picked up is about 100 miles north of Point La Fontaine, where the empty canoe, "Pride of Peterborough," was recovered three weeks ago. The nature of the contents of the dairy was not stated in the report which was relayed to St. John's and thence by cable to Canada. Contemplating an emergency, Smith stated his intention of sealing his papers in such a floating container before he took his departure from Peterborough.

Earl Smith, brother of the drowned paddler, had not heard of the find when queried by The Examiner this morning. He expressed a wish that the articles be saved by the finder and forwarded to the family here. Possibly further finds of a similar nature will be made since, it is understood, Smith packed his rations in water-tight tins containing enough air to float them, before setting out from Gaspe on July 21. He foresaw the danger of capsizing, and hoped to be able to salvage his food after such an occurrence.

Requested by Earl Smith to secure the canoe and bring it back to Peterborough, the Canadian National Railways are making arrangements through Halifax and St. John's agents to carry out the order. Local officials report that it will likely be some weeks before the canoe reaches this city.

Earl Smith said this morning that his mother, Theresa Smith, has somewhat recovered from the shock of the tragedy. For many weeks after Smith set out from Gaspe to cross the 270-mile stretch in the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Ray, Newfoundland, she clung to hope for his safety, but her hope was dashed with the finding of the empty canoe.

STUART DRIVE PROJECT MEETS COUNCIL FAVOR

New Road Planned From Hunter Street to Nicholls Oval.

FROM BRIDGE END

Purchase of Armour Hill Property Rejected— Price Opposed.

The project of a scenic driveway from the east end of Hunter street bridge to Nicholl's Oval was given the sanction of the City Council last night. A gift from the Quaker Oats Company of the property along the river from Hunter street to Ross street was accepted, and the chairman of the Board of Works was authorized to have the stretch surveyed

The move, in contemplation for several months, was made on the recommendation of the Board of Works. No discussion arose over the matter, although the vote on the adoption of the report was not unanimous. Aldermen McIntyre and Tuggey declined their approval. The plan of the Council is to proceed leisurely with the project in a manner which will provide a maximum of benefit to local unemployed at a minimum cost.

Hill Purchase Defeated

Once again the proposal of a by-law enabling the City Trust to purchase the McBain property on the north side of Armour Hill was turned down by the Council. The acquisition of the property as a means of rounding out the Armour Hill Park site has been urged unsuccessfully in the past and, after giving it further consideration last night, a committee of the whole under the chairmanship of Alderman Ellis, rose without taking action. The by-law was presented by Alderman Holland and seconded by Alderman Stocker.

Alderman Tuggey led the attack on the suggested purchase of the property. Asserting that the city assessment of the piece of land totals only $250, he declared that

C. P. C. TRUCK HIT BY C. P. R. LOCAL IN N. MONAGHAN

William Sutherland, Orpington Road, Dragged 1,000 Feet by Engine.

AT ROAD CROSSING.

Frank Driscoll, Driver of Truck, Escaped Serious Injury.

William Sutherland, 53 year old Scottish-Canadian of Orpington road, was instantly killed when Canada Packers Limited motor truck, on which he was riding, was demolished at Bennett's Crossing in North Monaghan Township by the Canadian Pacific train leaving Peterborough at 7.20 a.m.

Frank Driscoll, 29, of Driscoll Terrace, driver of the truck, and John Hickey, 17, of 197 Westcott street, who were riding in the cab of the truck, miraculously escaped serious injury. Both survivors of the crash were badly shaken up and bruised.

The victim of the fatality, it is learned, had re-commenced work only yesterday at the township's gravel pit adjacent to the old Bennett homestead, located in the immediate vicinity of the scene of the occurrence.

Was Given Lift.

After hailing the driver of the truck as he was trudging along the road west of Crawford's Grove on his way to work, Sutherland was given a lift. He was sitting on top of the cream cans and chop with which the truck was laden just prior to the crash, according to eye witnesses.

Travelling west along the concession the truck had to climb a short, sharp grade to the railway crossing. When on the crossing the red-painted truck was struck broadside by the locomotive of the train, and was tossed aside in a broken, battered heap. Part of the load was carried on the front of the locomotive for a distance of almost a thousand yards before the train could be brought to a standstill.

Train 58 Minutes Late.

Shortly afterwards the train steamed back into Peterborough station bearing with it the dead and mutilated body of the dead man, and the injured driver of the truck and his companion. When it subsequently pulled out for Toronto the train was 58 miutes late. Conductor R. J. Kelsey was in charge of the train with Engineer William Murray at the throttle.

Workmates of the dead man told Provincial Constable David Silvester that the whistle of the locomotive was blowing as the train sped towards the crossing.

"Heard Her Blow."

Fred Gilmour, worker at the gravel pit stated he was half a mile from the crossing when the crash

GUELPH MAYOR RAPS ROEBUCK

Charges Attorney General Trying to Becloud Seriousness of Radical Situation.

DENIES SEEKING GUNS.

GUELPH, Ont., Sept. 5. (CP).—Mayor R. B. Robson of Guelph today issued a statement in which he charged Ontario Attorney-General Arthur Roebuck with "trying to becloud the seriousness of the situation' in their dispute over danger of radicalism in Ontario.

The mayor previously had said the province was 'sitting on top of a powder magazine" and predicted that unless the administration changed its policy toward labor difficulties martial law would have to be declared at some future time.

In reply Mr. Roebuck yesterday said the mayor had "screamed for bayonets" during recent disorders in Guelph arising from a garment workers' strike.

To-day the mayor declared he had not demanded or even requested use of bayonets or machine guns in the strike. He added, "The most I asked of Mr. Roebuck was that he might be good enough to lend assistance to the city of Guelph by detailing some of his provincial police constables to Guelph to assist us in maintenance of law and order. This would not appear to be an unreasonable request since just last week Mr. Roebuck fired some 50 of his Provincial officers, stating that he had no use for them."

ANGRY FARMER MURDERS FIVE WITH SHOTGUN

Runs Amok in Rage Over Old Unpaid Farm Debt.

BATTLES OFFICERS.

Prisoner Turns Weapon on Self But Will Live Doctors Say.

FULTON, Ill., Sept. 5 (A.P.). — Rage over an old unpaid farm debt, police said to-day, sent Fred Blink, 46, on a wild shotgun rampage, that brought death to five persons.

After slaying the five, including his debtor, John Hamilton, Blink "shot it out" with Officer Frank Kustes, when the latter cornered him yesterday afternoon.

Before his capture, Blink was wounded and turned his automatic shotgun on himself, inflicting additional wounds. Doctors at the hospital to which he was taken said he would recover.

The victims of the blasts from the enraged man's weapon, in addition to Hamilton, were Harry Minje of Belvidere, Ill., a railroad watchman; Mrs. Jennie Walter of Sterling, Ill., housekeeper for Hamilton; Web Collier, 70, of Sterling, and Mrs. Irene Corrick, of Des Moines, Iowa.

Mrs. Walter, Mrs. Corrick, Minje and Collier were the first to die. They were shot down when they attempted to flee from the Hamilton farmhouse near here.

From the farm, which Blink and Hamilton had operated on a share basis, the slayer went to a point near the home of John Pack, a friend, and shot Hamilton, at the same time seriously wounding Joseph Collier, a brother of one of the dead.

A George the Third child's silver tea service was sold recently in London for $376.

Drunken Driver To Serve 21 Days In Gaol

Sentence of twenty-one days' imprisonment was imposed by Magistrate C. A. Langley, K.C., upon George Spafford, Harvey Township farmer, convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated.

A further charge of criminal negligence against the accused was dismissed, the magistrate deciding there was no evidence to show who was driving the car at the time of the accident out of which the charges had resulted. Hearing of the case was concluded late yesterday afternoon.

The case was the sequel to an accident on the afternoon of August 29, in which Roy Fairbairn, 13-year-old cyclist, was injured on the Lakefield road. V. J. McElderry, K.C., conducted the prosecution and W. J. Arthur Fair was counsel for the defence.

Her father and mother carried Mr. John Post, an aged invalid, from the flaming house. Two other children, Lois, 11, and Arlow, seven, also were awakened and ran from the house.

The home, a two-storey frame structure, was totally destroyed. The Post family has sought refuge among friends and relatives in the village.

FIVE PROVINCES ARE NOW IN LINE ON FARM DEBTS

Ontario and Quebec Are Latest to Proclaim Adjustment Legislation.

EFFECTIVE OCT. 1, NEXT.

OTTAWA, Sept. 5.—(CP).—The farm debt adjustment legislation has been proclaimed effective in Ontario and Quebec as from Oct. 1 next, it was announced yesterday. This brings five of the nine provinces into line for the Government's measure passed at the last session of Parliament to permit those engaged principally in farming activities to secure a composition of their debts along the line of bankruptcy proceedings without the responsibilities and results of bankruptcy itself.

The act, officially termed "The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act," became effective in the three prairie provinces on Sept. 1. Procedure will be taken at once to appoint the necessary officials in Ontario and Quebec to enable farmers in those districts to avail themselves of the provisions of the act. This involves appointment of part time official receivers in each judicial district and the setting up of provincial boards to deal with proposals of settlement on which agreement is not reached between the official receiver and the creditors.

Cars Are Damaged Millbrook Accident

MILLBROOK, Sept. 5.—(Examiner Correspondence).—A front wheel taken off each of two cars as the result of a collision on Thompson's hill, Highway 28, on the evening of Labor Day, was the major part of the damage sustained in what might easily have proved a much more serious accident, Rev. William Simpson, of Millbrook, was the driver of one car, and Miss Gibson and her father were the two in the other, the former driving.

The reason for the collision which occurred most unexpectedly, is apparently difficult to determine, neither driver being aware of the proximity of the other car coming over the brow of the hill until the impact was unavoidable. Fortunately no one in either of the cars suffered injury except the severe shock.

Art Academy, Latest Pickford Ambition

NEW YORK, Sept. 5 (CP)—Here from Hollywood with her pretty head crammed full of ideas, Mary Pickford hoped to see another personage of the theatrical world—Eva Le Gallienne—to-day and talk over the establishment of a National Academy of Dramatic Art.

Miss Pickford said she felt the highest forms of literary achievement have been fulfilled in the theatre, and that the drama is the medium best adapted for creative endeavor to the people.

As directors of a national academy the pert little actress suggested Katharine Cornell, May Robson, Miss Le Gallienne, George Arliss, Walter Hampden, and herself.

Among the other tasks Miss Pickford brought to New York are the possible selection of a play in which she would be starred, the plots of "eight or ten" short stories and the "washing up" of a number of business details connected with the release of her latest motion picture.

"I want to be active," she said.

ESKIMO TRIED AND CONVICTED ON STEAMSHIP

Guilty of Burglary, Native is Sentenced to Two Months.

AT HARD LABOR

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Sept. 5 (C.P.). —Plucked from his northern home, an Eskimo had a sample of white man's justice administered in unique jurisdictional surroundings. He was arrested on a charge of burglary and summarily tried and convicted aboard the S.S. Kyle by Captain Abram Kean, O.B.E., justice of the peace and peer of Newfoundland's sealing fleet.

The specific count against Renatus Tuglavina, of Hebron, Labrador, charged him with breaking into the Hudson's Bay Company store there last winter and stealing food and other goods worth $190. He led a group of Eskimos in several raids upon the store, officials said.

At the company's request, Lieutenant-Commander Baker and other officers of H.M.S. Challenger's surveying party at Nain proceeded by dog team to Hebron and brought Tuglavina back to Nain, where he was formally arrested by police from St. John's.

Captain Kean happened to be a passenger on the Kyle when the prisoner came aboard. To save time, the Justice Department granted authority for the trial to be held at sea. A missionary from Nain acted as interpreter.

Tuglavina confessed, claiming that he and his family had been starving and, together with other Eskimos, resented treatment they had been receiving. Pointing out that goods other than food had been stolen, Captain Kean sentenced the accused to two months of hard labor at Twillingate Hospital. The Eskimo broke down when he heard a translation of the judgment and gave the court a promise that his burglarious activities were over.

As a result of decentralising its air force, South Africa needs new accommodations at Capetown, Durban and Bloemfontein, and new hangars and barracks are to be built.

B.C. TOURIST BUSINESS BOOMS, NEARS PROSPERITY YEARS' PEAK

Majority of Visitors Have Turned Sea Minded—Take Coastal Trips.

100,000 PASSENGERS.

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

VANCOUVER, Sept. 5 (C.P.) — British Columbia's tourist business is booming all along the line this year, in some departments coming within striking distance of the peak years of prosperity, and in others showing solid gains over last year and the year before.

The most colorful aspect, perhaps, is the extent to which visitors have gone sea-minded. It may be the drought that afflicted so much of the mid-continent, but, at any rate, travellers from all over Canada, especially the prairies, from practically every state of the United States, and from far corners of the earth, are taking salt-air tonic in the coastal waters.

The ships of British Columbia's coastal fleets have been putting to sea like war-time convoys, stretched out in long lines, and with capacity loads. Nearly 100,000 persons have viewed mountain-palisaded inlets, sanded islands, or grim northern coast.

Traffic Up 50 P.C.

Twenty - thousand people have come by cent-a-mile excursions, and tourist traffic generally by rail and steamship is up 50 percent over last year.

Automobiles from the United States had increased five percent over last year to the end of July, but later figures will show a greater increase. The increase has taken place in spite of whatever reducing effect the end of prohibition in the United States may have brought about. Further, the travel from the United States and elsewhere is of a substantial nature.

Visitors are spending more money, and spending it somewhat differently. In the past few years tourists came on carefully-planned budgets, with enough money to get to their particular destinations and back. This year they come prepared for side trips, with the result that interior resorts are benefiting; and also the steamships. Thus the tourist prosperity is spread through most of the province.

Regina Completes New Relief System

REGINA, Sept. 5.—(C.P.)— An entire new system of relief was being made effective in Regina today.

It will take the form of a works program, to be paid for in cash or cash and voucher, with a complete re-registration of all relief recipients. A new form of application form drafted as a legal contract enforceable under the criminal code will be used.

The plan rejects the recent offer of the Saskatchewan government to contribute $60,000 a month as its share toward relief in Regina. Instead, the government will be called upon by the city to contribute two-thirds of the cost, the city providing the balance.

In addition, the city will give to relief recipients, under the works program, an additional 25 per cent. on their regular quota for a clothing allowance and purchase of household utensils.

RAIL UNIFYING MEANS SAVING

Would Cost Taxpayers Over $50000,000 Less Yearly, Beatty States.

UNSOUND AT PRESENT.

VANCOUVER, Sept. 5 (CP) — Unification of Canadian railways for administration purposes was given further emphasis to-day by E. W. Beatty, K.C., President of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Speaking to a joint gathering of service clubs and the Board of Trade here last night, Mr. Beatty declared unification of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways would save Canadian taxpayers between $50,000,000 and $75,000,000 annually.

A partnership agreement under which there would be no interference with the ownership of either railway was favored by Mr. Beatty, net earnings of the properties jointly operated would be divided in agreed proportions between the two managements and both companies would apply revenues to the payment of interest charges and other obligations.

The effect of unification upon railway employees ultimately would be favorable, and even in its earlier stages it would not be a matter for serious apprehension, he said. "The railway situation in this country is unsound and unhealthy," Mr. Beatty declared. "I do not know why we should continue to be sick just because we have heretofore been able to pay the doctor's bill."

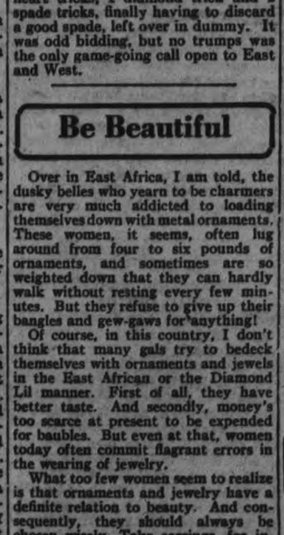
PICKING THE BEST RESPONSE

The defenders of America's cup do not spend all their time on subjects relating to the big race, as the following hand shows. It appeared the last week in June, between trial races.



Bidding went: South, 1-club; West, doubled, hoping for a major suit call; East, 2-clubs, which did not look at all favorable to the doubler; West, 2-spades; East, 2-no trumps, to see if his partner held at least 2 clubs to lead; West, 3-no trumps, with neither side vulnerable.

South hardly knew what to lead. Certainly he had no idea of assisting the declarer by leading a club. Finally South led his J of hearts, as the one thing which would be least liable to do harm. Dummy was in with the Q.

East saw that South could not have clubs stopped more than twice, even if he had all 5 missing from those held by dummy and declarer. The 8 of clubs was led from dummy, and allowed to run. South's J won the trick, and the 10 of hearts was led, removing the ace from dummy. The declarer felt positive that South had only 4 hearts. First because he had not bid that suit and second because North had started a plain-suit echo, by playing the 6 to the first trick, as his second highest card in hearts. This was confirmed when North played his 5 on the second heart trick.

The last club was led from dummy, and overtaken with declarer's 9, making it useless for South to withhold playing his ace. Having won his second defensive trick, South took his K of hearts. When North played his 8 it said as plainly as possible that he did not hold the missing ace of spades, even had not the declarer's play made it evident that East must hold the missing ace, or he never would have bid no trumps, nor played as he had done.

Having taken his fourth defensive trick, by playing off his last heart, South led his K of diamonds, hoping to win the setting trick with his Q, but the defenders were doomed to disappointment. All they won were 2 club tricks and 2 heart tricks. The declaring side won 4 club tricks, 2 heart tricks, 1 diamond trick and 2 spade tricks, finally having to discard a good spade, left over in dummy. It was odd bidding, but no trumps was the only game-going call open to East and West.

Be Beautiful

Over in East Africa, I am told, the dusky belles who yearn to be charmers are very much addicted to loading themselves down with metal ornaments. These women, it seems, often lug around from four to six pounds of ornaments, and sometimes are so weighted down that they can hardly walk without resting every few minutes. But they refuse to give up their bangles and gew-gaws for anything!

Of course, in this country, I don't think that many gals try to bedeck themselves with ornaments and jewels in the East African or the Diamond Lil manner. First of all, they have better taste. And secondly, money's too scarce at present to be expended for baubles. But even at that, women today often commit flagrant errors in the wearing of jewelry.

What too few women seem to realize is that ornaments and jewelry have a definite relation to beauty. And consequently, they should always be chosen wisely. Take earrings, for instance. Some women look younger, prettier and more alluring without ear pendants. And others acquire an air of glamor and striking individuality upon the addition of these ornaments. The facial contours are particularly important. If the face is long and slender, dangling eardrops should be avoided, and unobtrusive button earrings should be adopted. And if the face is round and full, the dangling earrings should be the chosen type.

Necklaces, too, have a great deal to do with the face and neck contours. If the face is round and full, a long necklace that falls into a deep oval or V is best. While a short necklace of the choker variety tends to lend fullness to a long, thin face and neck. A necklace of this type also tends to conceal any prominent bones at the base of a scrawny neck.

Even bracelts sdemand thought in their selection. When the hand is thin and scrawny, a wide bracelet that fits snugly at the wrist is best, as it will conceal any protruding wrist bones. While a narrow, unobtrusive bracelte is the best sort for a short, plump hand, as it will not stress the pudginess of the hand's contours. Choose your jewelry wisely always and it will prove an asset, rather than a detriment, to the loveliness of your appearance.

Polish Women Decide Slim Lines Are Best

WARSAW, Sept. 5 (C.P.)—Polish women are determined to become, or remain slim, regardless of any vogue in the western world for rounded figures.

Madame Jadwiga Ewert, the fashion oracle of Warsaw, is more or less responsible, encouraging slimness with such published declarations as:

"Dear sisters, don't get excited about news from Paris that more rounded figures are now fashionable. Remain slim and your dresses will look better on you."

Just Between Us Women

A daily chat with Examiner neighbors conducted by Anne Wilcox

The pickling season is on. It is important to make these piquant home prepared relishes while the ingredients are at their best, and are easy to get. If you wait too long, something will not be available, what it is depending on what you require. This is just the right time for some pickles, and a bit early for others.

* * * * * * *

The foundation for most homemade pickles is tomatoes, which fruit is generally wanted green, though not always. Here is a recipe for ripe tomato pickles:

* * * * * * *

RIPE TOMATO PICKLE

4 lbs. ripe tomatoes, small ones can be used whole. 5 cups cider vinegar. 1 cup tarragon vinegar. 1 cup button onions. ½ oz. each of mustard seed, celery seed, peppercorns and cinnamon stick. 2 teaspoons pepper. ¼ cup sugar.

* * * * * * *

Pour hot water over the tomatoes just enough to make the skin easy to peel off. Into an enamelware or earthenware pan or bowl put a layer of tomatoes and sprinkle with salt. Repeat until all the tomatoes are salted down. Let stand for a day. Drain, and let stand another day. Drain. Put vinegar, sugar, and spices into preserving kettle and bring to boil. Put button onions into vinegar and cook until onions are tender. Drain tomatoes well, and lift the tomatoes gently and put them into the boiling hot spiced and sweetened vinegar. Let come to boil, and put into heated jars. Fill to overflowing with the vinegar and seal. The spices and sugar can be increased in quantity to suit individual tastes, and the vinegar also can be entirely cider without the tarragon. The pieces of tomato should be as large as the handling of them permits.

* * * * * * *

EASY TOMATO PICKLE

Chop or put through the food ch opper the following vegetables and green tomatoes: ½ peck green tomatoes. 2 qts. white onions. 1 small head cabbage. 4 large or 5 small peppers.

* * * * * * *

Mix together and put in crock. Use contents of ½ cup of salt to sprinkle over layers. Do not exceed this amount of salt in all. Let stand over night and in the morning drain well. Put in preserve kettle with 2 teaspoons each of whole allspice, cloves, and mustard and 2 level tablespoons celery seed, ½ oz. tumeric and ½ cup sugar. Pour over the vinegar. Bring to a boil and continue boiling slowly for 1½ hours. Bottle and seal while hot.

80 HOURS' WORK MONTHLY BASIS IN CASH RELIEF

Regulations State Municipality "May" Adopt the Voucher System.

AT PREVAILING WAGE

Cash Payments Confined to Food and Shelter by Government.

A memorandum clarifying the Ontario Government's plan in regard to direct cash relief, sent from the secretary of the Unemployment Relief Department in Toronto, was received by the City Council at its meeting last night.

Referring to the re-registration of relief recipients which the city has already begun at the request of the Department, the memorandum states, "As soon as any municipality has completed its new registration and investigation and advised this Department of the number of families and individuals registered, an application may be made by the municipal council for payment of cash for food and shelter instead of the present voucher system.

"All unemployable persons in a municipality where cash relief is being paid shall be eligible for cash. This will include the sick, the maimed, the widow with children and all other who are unemployable. Unemployed men must work to receive their cash orders at the prevailing rates of wages for skilled and unskilled labor in the district. The municipality must use care in placing men on work for which they are adapted.

"The allowance for cash is confined strictly to food and shelter allowances and does not include milk, bread, and clothing. Where payments are made in cash for food, other than milk and bread, and shelter, the amounts so paid should be included in the accounts rendered to the Department under the headings respectively of food and shelter.

Example of Cash Plan

"To illustrate, where a man's family is receiving a total relief allowance of $40.00 a month for food and shelter, if he is a laborer and the prevailing rate of pay for such work in the district is 30 cents an hour, he will be expected to work 80 hours in the month or thirteen and one-third six-hour days.

"In cases were the shelter allowance is being used in all or in part to pay taxes the municipality will make its own arrangements to deal with the matter.

"If a man by his own initiative earns a little extra money he is to be permitted to retain same up to an amount not exceeding one-third of his food allowance for himself and family for the current month. He must report such earnings to the relief office. If he earns more than one-third, deduction from his allowance will be made according to the usual practice.

"The municipality must arrange its own program of work, and if it fails to do so cash relief will not be given. The program of work must be submitted to and approved by the Department and will be subject to inspection by the Department Inspectors.

"If funds are not available to the municipality for important purchases of materials, the work will naturally be confined to municipal projects which call for a maximum of labor and a minimum of materials.

"Municipalities will not be permitted to replace regular employees with relief recipients under this plan.

Frown On Abuses

"Individual recipients abusing the system will be dealt with harshly."

Following a recommendation by Relief Officer Arthur Metheral, the Council appointed G. R. Quartermain as temporary inspector of relief at a salary of $2.00 per day. Mr. Quartermain will assist in the work of re-registering and investigating the city relief recipients.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1934

TEXTILE STRIKE.

The great textile strike, the most widespread and serious labor disturbance in the United States in recent years and probably the most vexatious problem with which the Roosevelt administration has had to deal, is a regrettable example of what happens when common sense fails to guide the actions and decisions of employers and the workers.

It is estimated that the textile employees who have gone on strike will lose in the neighborhood of seven million dollars a week in wages; at the same time the textile firms are dropping vast amounts while their plants are idle.

Whatever the outcome of this disturbance both sides in the long run will lose, as, of course, will the general public, which always plays the role of the innocent bystander and gets hit with a brick when industrial troubles are to the fore.

As the Globe says, "When both sides are weakened financially the trouble will be settled. Why not now?"

It seems a tragedy that at a time when the United States has been making desperate efforts by unusual means to lift the country out of the slough in which it has been more or less bogged down since 1929, that a major strike on this scale should develop to jeopardise recovery plans and to create widespread suffering and distress.

Strikes are at best a doubtful policy, and this particular demonstration cannot be viewed by thinking people as anything short of a calamity.

THE RIGHT COURSE.

Most persons will wish Attorney-General Roebuck well in the campaign he is launching to have Canadian provinces adopt uniform minimum wage laws and other labor legislation.

Mr. Roebuck does well to endeavor to have the provincial administrations throughout the Dominion reach common ground on this question, for unless there is agreement on a policy that will be put into force in all provinces the Hepburn Government's plans to give Ontario a minimum wage law would obviously be seriously handicapped.

There is always difficulty in giving effect to such legislation if it is not uniform over all the country, inasmuch as industries are likely to seek new sites in sections of the Dominion where laws of this nature are not in force.

If the Attorney-General of Ontario can persuade the nine provinces to see eye to eye on this question he will have accomplished a feat that more than one Federal Government has given up in despair.

Unfortunately the chances are against the success of his experiment, for Quebec, for example, is conspicuously opposed to anything savoring of radical legislation, and is not in the least likely to look with favor upon the minimum wage legislation, in which case Ontario cannot make any marked changes without running the risk of giving her sister province a marked advantage in the industrial field.

NOT DOING TOO BADLY.

Despite the lamentations of some Canadians, Canada has not been doing so badly in the realm of international trade.

As a matter of fact, the National Revenue Review shows that at the present time Canada is leading the world as an exporting nation in four important products.

In 1933 this country exported more wheat, printing paper, nickel and asbestos than any other nation on the globe, and was in second place in the export of wheat flour, being beaten only by Australia, with the United States in third place.

That does not tell the whole story, of course, for Canada occupied fourth place in the export of automobiles and wood pulp, only the United States, the United Kingdom and France exporting more motor vehicles, while Sweden, Norway and Finland were the three countries that shipped out more wood pulp.

In the exportation of rubber tires last year Canada stood sixth, behind the United States, the United Kingdom, France ,Belgium and Italy in that order.

These leading exports made up, we are told, about half of the Dominion's total domestic exports.

However, in many other export fields the country fared well, ranking high in the world's exports of many other staple products, including lumber and timber, fish, copper, barley, cheese, raw fruits, whiskey, meats, farm implements, pulp wood, cattle, raw gold, silver, rye, oats, rubber footwear, leather and hides.

Stacked up against what other nations have been doing, this big country with its comparatively small population has been getting along very nicely.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS IN CANADA.

According to the annual report on labor organizations in Canada, published by the Department of Labor at Ottawa, that while there was a slight decrease in the number of trade union branches in this country at the end of 1933, the combined membership was substantially greater.

Altogether there were 2,707 trade union branches at the close of 1933, a decrease of 18, while the total membership was 286,230, a gain of 26,445.

According to information supplied by officers of central labor organizations and that secured from departmental records, the international craft union group, which consisted of the Canadian members of 76 organizations, the same number as in 1932, had 1,753 local branches in the Dominion, a loss of 60, with a combined membership of 140,801, a decrease of 8,328. The One Big Union reported 46 local units, a decrease of 1, with 23,300 members, a loss of 40.

The Industrial Workers of the World had 8 locals and 3,618 members, no change from 1932.

The Canadian central organizations, numbering 34, a gain of 5, had 746 branches, an increase of 47, with a combined membership of 76,063, which was 9,069 more than a year before. The National Catholic group consisted of 101 syndicates and 9 study circles, a gain of one, while the total membership, 28,894, was an increase of 1,869.

There were 42 independent units, five less than the number recorded in 1932, with a combined membership of 15,545, an increase of 49.

In 1911, the first year in which the department issued a report, the membership of all classes of organized labor bodies in Canada was 133,132, while the total last year was 286,230. The peak membership was reached in 1920 when a total of 373,842 members was reported.

ONE MAN DECIDES.

Premier Hepburn sees in the results of the two Ontario electoral contests this week an indication that the Liberal party will carry the five federal by-elections scheduled for September 24—"a fact that will undoubtedly force a general election in Canada."

But nothing can force a general election as long as one man shakes his head. The Prime Minister decides when a general election shall be held. It is his privilege and his responsibility, as Mr. Mackenzie King well knows. It was Mr. King, readers will recall, who decided that a general election should be held in the summer of 1930. Many prominent Liberals were opposed to a contest then. They pointed out that the Government could remain in office for approximately a year without outstaying its legal term. But Mr. King decided on a vote and one was held—just as one will be held when Mr. Bennett decides that the right moment has arrived.—Border Cities Star.

THE PREMIER'S WARNING.

Those who may have wondered at the retention of Mr. Stevens, as chairman of the Royal Commission investigating price spreads, mass buying and general business—in the face of stiff demands for his retirement because of his public criticism of certain business interests—have apparently not come to appreciate that Mr. Stevens' views are pretty largely shared by the Prime Minister himself.

By way of illustrating this point one may consider the following sentence taken from Mr. Bennett's recent speech in New Brunswick: "I am convinced that there will be more and not less interference by Governments in private business; not to substitute Governments for men who are better able to conduct business, but to regulate, control and prevent recurrence of conditions apparent to all."

* * * *

No Prime Minister in all the history of Canada has given the people more conscientious service. Mr. Bennett has labored long and faithfully to do his best for the country. He has made mistakes of judgment, of course, just as we all do, but his greatest enemy cannot accuse him of failing to try or of failing to put every ounce of effort into the job. If our present system is to be retained, however, it is essential that Mr. Bennett and his Government—or Mr. King and any Government he may head, for that matter—be given a greater measure of support from certain quarters than they have received in recent years.

We do not mean financial support nor political support in the ordinary way. We mean a greater personal effort to place their industries and businesses on a basis calculated to remove much of the criticism that one now hears, to make impossible a repetition, at some future date, of evidence similar to that given before the St evens' Committee (now a Royal Commission) during the last session of Parliament.

* * * *

In other words, industry has to clean house. If capitalism is to survive—and we feel that it is by far the best system for Canada or any other country—it must put its own establishment in order, it must give a greater measure of co-operation to the Government, it must take such steps as may be necessary to remove certain bad features and to rehabilitate itself in the good graces of the people.

Obviously, all industry is not guilty of the unfair practices revealed before the Stevens Commission, but the fact that certain firms have failed to play the game with their employees, with primary producers and with the public has served to put industry in general in a bad light. It has produced a public demand for more and more regulation, a demand that Mr. Bennett himself recognises when he makes the statement quoted in the second paragraph of this article.

Moreover, industry generally should welcome the Stevens inquiry and any reasonable form of regulation that may result therefrom. So much is at stake that industry cannot afford to dodge the issue. Any firm that fails to do the right thing is not only short-sighted so far as its own interests are concerned, but working a handship upon all others, no matter what their line.

* * * *

Mr. Stevens is a determined type of man and we have no idea that he will cease his efforts until he brings about a better condition of affairs than has obtained in recent years. Further, it becomes increasingly clear that his leader has just as strong convictions on the point and will back up the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his efforts. Let anyone who doubts the popularity of Mr. Stevens' position make an unofficial canvass of his own circle of acquaintances; he will soon be convinced that the Minister enjoys general support.

The thing for industry to keep in mind is that it is better to have some reasonable regulation of its activities under a democratic form of government such as we possess in Canada, than to have the pendulum swing the other way and find ourselves under the domination of an autocracy of one kind or the other.—Border Cities Star.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Peterborough having contributed a judge to Western Ontario, it is only simple justice that Paris should return the compliment and send us one.

The big increase in attendance at the Canadian National Exhibition is indicative of better conditions throughout the country. The "Ex" is a good barometer in that respect.

If rumored proposals for a union or national government at Ottawa involve a railway merger the movement is doomed before it gets fairly under way.

With 40 Ontario municipalities in default, a serious situation is created which the Ontario Government, jealous of the credit of the province, cannot afford to ignore.

Canadians generally will welcome the proposal to honor the thirtieth anniversary of Hon. Ernest Lapointe's entry into public life. He has been one of the country's outstanding statesmen for three decades.

Rev. Ben Spence does not like the present system of drinking beer, but we suspect the system of beer drinking that he would like has yet to be invented.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

Peterborough, Ont., Sept. 5, '34.
Editor, Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I noted an item in the Examiner of 31st August, "No Bulbs for City's Parks." On the recommendation of Alderman Stocker the beds were to be given a rest this year because the price of bulbs had been advanced.

As a lover of flowers I strongly object to this action. The city parks are kept up for the benefit of the citizens at large who care to go to see them. The price of bulbs were bound to advance because a duty of 15 p.c. has been added by our government on imports of bulbs from Holland. British grown bulbs may come in free, but so far the British haven't made any great effort to supply our market. Bulbs are now being raised in British Columbia, but they can only supply the merest fraction of the Canadian demand.

The Dutch government to protect its great industry of raising bulbs from ruin by some of their own growers who have been flooding the markets of the world with cheap and worthless bulbs produced under sweating conditions, have stepped in and fixed the minimum price at which bulbs may be sold; also fixed the acreage to be grown, destroying all the bulbs over the quantity allowed. It's possible that Alderman Stocker may never be able to buy again at the old price. Why deny the public of a little pleasure when they foot the bill?

Yours truly,
W. H. YOUNG.

Peterborough, Sept. 5, 1934.

LOCAL OPTION.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It is claimed that if two counties, A and B, are dry and two other counties, C and D, are wet, it is wrong for the people of A and B to impose their will upon the people of C and D, as it is claimed they would in a referendum. Now everybody knows that there is no such thing in Ontario as a perfectly dry or a perfectly wet county. The most that can be said is that there is a dry or a wet majority in certain counties. Therefore, in local option the dry majority in a county would impose their will on the wet majority, and vice versa. Now if this is right how can it be said that it is wrong for the people of one county to impose their will upon the people of another county?

But this is not a correct statement regarding a referendum.

It is not correct to say that the people of A and B counties would be imposing their will on the people of C and D counties.

The correct statement would be that a majority of the people of Ontario were imposing their will upon the minority. And what is there wrong about that?

The brewers and distillers are strongly against a referendum, and for good reason. But local option would enable them to retain some of their business.

We are hearing a lot of puerile nonsense about the wickedness of some people imposing their will upon other people. Why, sir, we all know that some people imposing their will upon some other people is the way in which the British Empire is ruled.

And if this way is good enough for the British Empire surely it should be good enough for the province of Ontario.

Yours very truly,
J. C. SMITH.

EMERSON, MANITOBA.

This southern entrance into Manitoba at one time was thought to be destined for the metropolis of the west, but other plans intervened and Winnipeg was chosen.

Original townsites laid out in this district were named South and West Emerson, followed by a townsite laid out by the Hudson Bay company and called East Lynne.

Messrs. Fairbanks and Carney were known as the original owners of the townsite of Emerson, securing crown patent for the lands in 1875.

W. N. Fairbanks, a member of this firm, was a man of letters and he named the town for Ralph Waldo Emerson, his favorite poet.

ALL OF US

(By Marshall Maslin.)

CAT ON THE DAVENPORT

That cat knows better. He knows he doesn't belong on the davenport. His place is on that chair by the door, not over there on that piece of furniture. . . . When he's sleeping on the chair, nobody ever disturbs him. That's his, and the human beings in the house recognize and respect his rights.

Then what is he doing on the davenport? And why does he look at us so sullenly when we come over and reproach him? And why does he miaow so self-pityingly when we pick him up and drop him on the floor? And why does he slink away like an animal in the jungle?

I'll tell you why. He's mad at us. . . . We caught him on the dinner table, eating our food and we scolded him a little and drove him away. . . . Remembering, to be sure, that he is an independent animal and will eat our food and lick our butter and lap up our milk if we are not looking, and even respecting him for his untameable qualities—and not scolding him very noisily or even giving him a cuff. . . . But he's mad at us, nevertheless. He doesn't like us any more. We're mean. . . . So he walked away from us and looked around for something else to do, something else we wouldn't like, and he decided that he'd go to sleep where he wasn't supposed ever to sleep. He'd snooze on our davenport, get hairs on it for once, and get his revenge.

And that's why that cat's on the davenport. . . . Just to be contrary.

Well, I don't feel so superior to that cat. He's not the only creature that ever got into trouble just through contrariness. I've been there, too, and so have you. . . . You've been in many a jam and wondered how on earth you got there. You were going to be wise, so clever, so broad-minded, so cool, so self-contained. And then you lost your temper, you felt abused, you felt mistreated, by life, by fate, by luck, by some other human being. . . . And you went sulkily away and did something you knew was wrong, was silly. You blew up and landed on the davenport of humiliation and defiant absurdity. Made an ass of yourself, and hated the world for laughing at you. . . . I know how you felt, I know how I've felt, and I know just how that old cat on the davenport feels.

A Thought

THE WANDERER

The loose foot of a wanderer
Is cursed as well as blest!
It urges ever, ever on
And never gives him rest.
It leads him over hill and dale,
By river and by lea,
Across the russet moors, at even
Down to the surging sea.
It fills him so with wanderlust
He'll never set him down
To build a home with hearth and fire
Near a friendly town.
No maid will ever hold him long
Tho' she be trim and fair—
He urges ever, ever on
With star-dust in the hair.

Principal H. R. H. Kenner Reports Attendance Figures—School Repairs Completed.

Principal H. R. H. Kenner last night reported to the Board of Education a first-day enrollment at the Collegiate of 1,004 pupils, with a staff of 38 teachers. It was an increase of 9 pupils over the same period of last year.

The academic department had an enrollment of 843 pupils, the commercial 262 and the household and industrial arts 199.

Inspector A. Mowat was not in a position to provide the board with enrollment figures for the Public Schools, but he judged the attendance to be fully up to the numbers enrolled last term.

On the recommendation of Mr. Kenner, the board authorized purchase of 45 vocational science text books at a net cost of 92 cents each for the vocational department.

W. J. Hancock, chairman of the Property Committee, tendered a verbal report of work completed at various schools throughout the city during the vacation period. The work included exterior painting of the Collegiate; interior decoration of Queen Mary School, also provision of new blinds in the principal's office and installation of an electric bell system, and the rebuilding of the door frame and repairs to the steps at the south entrance; at Central, redecoration of the principal's office, repairs to the door and rebuilding of the steps at the entrance to the school; Queen Alexander, boiler repaired and seats resurfaced; King Edward, front steps relined; and at Prince of Wales, installation of new blinds. All the work was done by contract, it was stated.

WINNIPEG'S ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

On this date in 1892 Winnipeg saw the official inauguration of its electric railway, due to the enterprise of A. W. Austin, who died July 5th, 1934. The first attempt at urban transportation in Winnipeg was a bus service on July 7, 1877, but it was ahead of its time. In 1882 another bus service was operated and it was so successful that Mr. Austin, then a new arrival from Ontario and only 23 years of age, astonished the city council by offering to operate a street car service on rails. Despite his youth both as a citizen and as a man he was given the franchise and on October 21 the service was started amid the cheers of citizens who had jeered when the proposition was made.

The rolling stock consisted of 4 cars, 4 sleighs and 20 horses, each car held 24 persons and the fare was 10 cents or 15 tickets for a dollar.

In 1888 Mr. Austin asked for leave to transfer his system into an electric one but the aldermen declined to risk the "danger" of exposing the citizens to so "deadly a mode of propulsion".

Austin was determined that the change should be made so he went outside the city and experimented with such success that it was not long before the city council advertised for tenders for an electric service for Winnipeg. Austin, of course, got the contract.

The first electric car was run on city tracks July 26, 1893 much to the perturbation of the horses in the other cars but to the delight of the citizens who crowded the car all day, for all rides were free that day! The electric system was publicly inaugurated September 5, 1892, by an aldermanic trip from the C.P. depot on Main Street and speeches lauded the enterprise of A. W. Austin. On May 1, 1894, horse driven cars disappeared entirely from Winnipeg streets and the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company bought out A. W. Austin, who later returned to Toronto, became president of the Dominion Bank and other enterprises, a man who never lost his faith in western Canada.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE REVIEWS

ONTARIO GRAIN

Approximate prices track shipping point—Wheat, 90c to 92c; oats, 35c to 36c; barley, 60c to 64c; corn, 85c to 86c; rye, 55c to 57c; buckwheat, 55c to 58c.

MONTREAL PRODUCE

Egg prices continued to advance on the Montreal Produce and Dairy Market yesterday. Cheese quotations also were fractionally higher, while butter and potatoes remained unchanged from their former price levels.

Ontario colored cheese was priced at 10½c to 10¼c a pound and Quebec cheese brought 9¾c to 9¾c a pound, each being up ⅛c. Receipts were 769 boxes.

Butter prices held steady at last week's levels, fresh No. 1 in carlots or less being qquoted at 19¼c to 19½c a pound. Small lots to retailers were 20½c to 21c a pound for solids and 21½c to 22c a pound. Arrivals totalled 364 boxes.

On the egg market prices were up ½c to 1c. Graded shipments in carlots or less were priced at 24c to 25c a dozen for A-large, 22½c to 23c for A-medium, 19c to 19½c for B, and 13½c for C. Receipts totalled 1,505 cases.

Potatoes of the new Quebec variety continued to maintain a price of 45c to 50c per 80-lb. bag of No. 1 grade.

CHICAGO GRAIN

Late rallies in wheat yesterday that virtually overcame substantial preceding losses followed announcement the United States visible supply showed the earliest decrease in recent years.

A reduction of the domestic wheat visible supply at this season is most unusual, as normally the stock does not start to decrease until after the turn of the year. Helping the late rally of wheat prices were indications that peak pressure of newly-harvested wheat in Canada would be passed this week.

Wheat closed irregular, ¼c off to ⅝c up, compared with Saturday's finish; corn, ⅝c to ⅞c down; oats, ⅛c to ⅜c advanced, and provisions, unchanged to a rise of 7c.

Corn sagged, owing a good deal to 1,745,000 bushels enlargement of the corn visible supply.

Oats price upturns were associted with Government buying for seed purposes.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

Wheat prices recovered from early weakness on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange yesterday and converted a one-cent decline into a net gain of ⅝ to ¾ cent.

Slackening of hedging pressure due to week-end rains in Western Canada, and purchases by export houses and Chicago interests, accounted for the late rally. October wheat advanced to close at 81⅞; December at 82⅝, and May at 86⅞ to 87 cents.

Foreign sales of Canadian wheat approximated 500,000 bushels. Trading was dull with the exception of the last hour when the buying movement entered the pit.

Liverpool wheat declined about 2d under pressure of Argentine offerings.

No. 1 hard wheat and No 1 Durum were easier, but other grades of cash grains held steady. Coarse grains staged a late rally in sympathy with wheat.

CUBANS SPEND 3 GIDDY DAYS

All Business Halts for Celebrations Interrupted by Bombings, Riots.

SEVERAL KILLED.

HAVANA, Sept. 5 (A.P.)—Cuba tried to regain its composure today after three giddy days of disorders, bombings and celebrations in the course of which all thought of business was abandoned.

Terrorists and assorted leftists took a final fling last night and early to-day at Col. Fulgencio Batista's celebration of the first anniversary of the insurrection which placed him at the head of the army.

At Marianao, a suburb, a bomb exploded in the midst of a group of merry makers and killed one man. Ten were injured. Other blasts injured. Other blasts injured one in Havana, one in Guanabacao and one in Santiago.

A hilarious group of left wing students burned an effigy of Col. Batista at the university.

Some of the disorders were attributed to the killing of two alleged terrorists. Rafael Sanchez and Ivo Fernandez, last Saturday. Students charge the pair was shot ruthlessly by soldiers.

The figure given is 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 metric tons (about 260,000,000 bushels below the harvest of 1933 in the same area).

C.P.C. TRUCK HIT

occurred, walking towards his work.

"I saw the train go by and heard her blow," he stated. Remarking that he did not actually witness the crash, the man said, "all I saw was the train go by and the mess afterwards."

Richard McGrath was about one hundred yards from the crossing, he said, and heard the train whistle before it came to a stop.

Harry Bird, another gravel pit employee, phoned for a doctor and ambulance. He had previously see the truck pass him on the Tenth Concession and stated that Sutherland was sitting on top of the load at the rear of the truck.

Truck Overturned.

The force of the impact when the train and truck met, swept the truck to the west side of the crossing, demolished the body and overturned the vehicle so that the wheels were pointing skyward. The truck lay parallel with the tracks, the front of it pointing in a northerly direction.

The badly battered remains of the victim were at first mistakenly identified as those of William Finlay, and it was two hours later before Albert Vass, foreman at th gravel crushing plant learned of the mistake.

Learns of Mistake.

Mr. Vass who was assisting the provincial officer to round up witnesses, went down to the crusher at about nine-thirty o'clock and was astonished to see Finlay shovelling gravel into the machine.

He immediately ordered Finlay to secure a car and hurry home to his wife, who had been notified shortly after the accident that her husband had been killed. It was a merciful circumstance that Mrs. Finlay previously learned of the mistake when she went to Comstock's undertaking establishment to identify the remains. Even as it was, the shock she sustained was severe.

Frank Driscoll was seen by The Examiner at his home early this afternoon. He was apparently none the worse for his alarming experience. He had been employed as a driver for Canada Packers for three years, he stated, and during that period had gone over the route he was on this morning twice a week.

Knew Train Due

"Yes. I knew the train was due about that time," he said. "And I approached the crossing slowly. I asked the young lad who was on the seat beside me if the train was coming. He said, it was not."

Driscoll related that he started over the crossing and had intended stopping on the other side to drop off Sutherland whom he had picked up near Bruce Johnston's farm. Then the crash came.

Following the crush Driscoll stated, he and his young companion remained in the cab of the overturned and partly demolished truck. "I don't know how we escaped. I received a small cut on the neck and a bruised arm. I am going out with another truck this afternoon."

Asked what had happened to Sutherland, the driver said the dead man had been seated on the load at the rear of the truck. "I believe his legs were dangling over the end of the truck."

Impaled on Cow-Catcher

The body was impaled on the cow-catcher of the locomotive and it was about 10 to 20 minutes after the crash, according to Driscoll, before the body was discovered. After the train came to a stop some distance south of the crossing, the engineer and conductor raced back to the crossing to assist those who might be injured. The body of Sutherland was not discovered until a subsequent search revealed it broken and battered on the front of the engine.

Driscoll remarked that he had picked up young Hickey at Bogue's drug store on George street. Hickey had accompanied him on previous trips, he stated, having been to Buckhorn only yesterday.

Young Hickey Out

John Hickey was not at home when The Examiner called at the family residence on Wescott street, but he had told his mother, he did not recall having seen the train approaching, nor did he hear the whistle blown. The first he knew, his mother stated, was when the truck was overturned.

The dead man, who is survived by his widow and by one son, Ian Sutherland, both at home, and by a brother George Sutherland of Toronto, came to this country from Scotland twenty-four years ago. He had spent the greater part of that time as a resident of this city and was formerly employed as a fitter by the Canadian General Electric Company. Latterly he had been out of employment.

He was an active member of Pentecostal Church, and services are to be held at the church at 2 p.m. on Friday, with the Rev. G. A. Chambers officiating. Interment will follow at Little Lake Cemetery.

FROM LAND'S END TO JOHN O' GROATS.

In a letter to a member of The Examiner staff, the Rev. William Allan, pastor of Dovercourt road Presbyterian Church, Toronto, states he is embarking at Greenock on Saturday next on his return to Canada.

The Rev. Allan during the course of his vacation in Britain, says in his letter, "I have motored from Land's End to John o' Groates; have been in the misty Isle of Skye and hope to go to Iona." At the time of writing he was in the Rob Roy country, staying at the Bailie Nicol Jarvie Hotel, at Aberfoyle.

'SWORD OF DAMOCLES' OVER HEADS OF AUSTRIAN JEWS

Fear Political Peace Would Bring Fresh Attacks on Race.

GERMANY GAINING.

By PIERRE VAN PAASSEN
Central Press Canadian Writer.

VIENNA, Sept. 5.—It is an old saying that every country has the Jews it deserves. I don't know what this might mean exactly. For if that saying were true, how is it that Austria and Germany have the most aristocratic and cultured Jewish community in the world, and Britain, generally speaking, the most backward? As far as Vienna is concerned, if it were not for the Jewish bankers here, the House of Rothschild at their head, there would be no Austrian republic today. The Jewish bankers kept Sipele going. They kept Dollfuss afloat and now they are backing Schuschnigg. The Jewish bankers are really the only genuine champions of Austrian independence, the only real patriots. Starhemberg dickers with Mussolini. Others intrigue with Nazi Germany. If Schuschnigg has his way Austria will become a virtual annex of the Vatican City. The Jews are more patriotic than the professional patriots, and still they are in danger.

Warned by Dollfuss

If Starhemberg had his way the Jews of Austria would be put on the spot tomorrow. Dollfuss was also an anti-Semite and Schuschnigg is another. Only they are more clever than Hitler. They do not make a show of their anti-Semitism. They went about it quietly and the world heard nothing about it when thousands of Jews were removed at the beginning of this year from the university, the teaching professions, the law-courts, the hospitals and from the civil service.

The Jews of Vienna saw the thing coming just as soon as Hitler reached power in Germany. The leaders of the community sought to forestall the application of anti-Semitic measures by the Dollfuss government right in the midst of the February troubles.

While the women and children of the Socialists were being bombarded in their homes by the siege-howitzers of Dollfuss—even the German army command at Antwerp in 1914 could not quite make up its mind to bombard the residential districts of the city—while this bombardment was at its height in Vienna, a delegation of Jewish ex-officers marched to the Ballhausplatz, where the chancellery is located, and offered its services to the government to help in exterminating the Socialists. The spokesman of the delegation was the Jewish general, Sommer. Dollfuss refused to see Sommer but let him stand in the corridor and sent word out that "the Jews of Austria ought to be glad that the government was not dealing with the Jewish question—yet."

Threatened With Attack

Not daunted, the Jews thereupon began a housecleaning campaign of their own. The Zionist council of Vienna started by dismissing the four representatives of Jewish labor from that body. And when the Jewish labor party in Palestine sent a thousand pounds sterling for the relief of the victims of the bombardment, the rich Viennese Jews promptly disavowed this act of solidarity.

That Julius Deutsch, former minister of war of Austria, who led the Socialist Schutzbundlers in that epic resistance against Dollfuss in February, and that Koloman Wallisch, the heroic defender of the Ottakring apartment block, who was hanged with the cry: "Freedom!" on his lips, that these men are Jews, remains to this day the greatest single cause of worry to the Jewish bankers of Vienna. They are always reproached with that fact. Of course the Jews were and are nominally still full-fledged citizens of Austria, but that Jews should have ever belonged to the Socialist party, which was a fully legal party in Austria and the dominant party at one time, is now accounted a crime to the whole collectivity of the Jewish community. It is a very convenient excuse and the Jews of Vienna know that an outbreak of virulent anti-Semitism hangs above their heads like a sword of Damocles.

What is going to happen, I, for one, cannot foretell. The fate of Austria itself is a ticklish question in international politics. The Jewish community hopes for the best. "What is the best?" I asked a famous young Jewish poet. "That things stay as they are," he said. "The chaos and anarchy of the present time are preferable to a settlement the one way or the other."

Will Come Under Hitler

But things will not stay as they are. They never do. However, much it may appear that Hitler has no chance in Austria at the present moment, largely his own fault, ultimately he will triumph and the union of Austria and Germany will be consummated. The feudal nobles of Austria who dream of detaching Bavaria from Germany and making a great Catholic kingdom out of Austria and Bavaria combined are pursuing a chimera. In his heart Mussolini does not want the Hapsburgs back in Vienna. Moreover Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia and Poland will not permit a restoration. An independent Austria then? But Austria cannot live alone, the last 15 years have shown this. The truth is that only Germany knows what it wants with Austria, namely, annex it. But that means Germany potentially the dominant power in Europe—and not France.

A German Reich from the Rhine to Vienna and from the Brenner pass to Memel will turn the Baltic states and the Balkan countries into German vassals. Obviously France dreads such an eventuality. Therefore Austria is to be left in chaos and destitution for the time being. But the slightest incident inside of Austria will throw the torch in the powder-barrel.

For the time being nobody knows what to do with Austria, least of all the Austrian government itself. Assurances that Austria is to become a model Catholic state founded on the principles of the pope's encyclical "Quadragesimo Anno" fall flat in the face of reality. Nothing can be done in Austria but march troops up and down now to quell a disturbance here, then again to crush this or that party. In the meantime the Heimwehren are becoming more and more Nazified.

"Germany Is Our Ideal"

"Don't say that an officer of the Heimwehren told you," one of them said to me. "But Germany is our ideal. The Germans are our brethren. Together we are a mighty and great people. Divided we are playballs of European politics. Marvellous how Hitler has brought order. Wished we could have a little of that order here. After all why should we not join? We belong together. I say," he went on, "and thousands of my fellow-officers believe with me that if we simply went over to Hitler, nobody would interfere. France might splutter a little. But France will not go to war. In the end nobody will dare to prevent us joining Germany," he added emphatically.

The peace treaties created many problems. Austria is the greatest problem of all, for its presents an acute war-danger that is not lessened by time.

ALLIGATOR THRIVES

BROCKVILLE, Sept. 5 (CP)—Spending its eighth season at Beverly Lake, near Delta, an alligator brought from Florida by S. E. Seaman when it was only a few inches long has now attained a length of almost three feet, and seems to thrive in its Canadian summer environment. The alligator seems to be perfectly content to remain on the shores of the lake and not once during the eight summers that it has spent there has it broken bounds.

NO LIGHT ARRANGEMENTS

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT" for POOR COMPLEXION — removes the Cause!

WAS STRANGLED THEN DRAGGED TO TROUT CREEK

of Rogouskie's body on August 23 at Millbrook and from the advanced stage of decomposition judged that he had been dead at least three weeks. He found evidence of large bruises at the back of the neck near the shoulder blades, and, on the left and right side of the neck were marks as though made by a rope drawn tightly around the man's neck. These rope marks, he said, corresponded to the strands of rope, found near the scene of the crime, which was produced in court.

Rope Drawn Tightly

The man's larnyx, or adam's apple, was badly fractured on the left side, and there were other evidence of abrasions of a rope on the front of the neck. "This all indicates that the rope was drawn rather tightly round his neck," Dr. Frankish said. "Otherwise there were no marks on his body.

"The fracture or pressure on his larynx was sufficient to render him unconscious within half a minute," he said. "The rope was put around his neck previous to death; there is no doubt about that. Finding himself being choked, it would be natural for him to scream such screams as Mrs. Vanderyegt states she heard."

Alive In Water

Debris from the creek was found in the man's mouth and windpipe. "This could not have got there except that he breathed it in before he died," Dr. Frankish testified. "He was still living when he was put in the water." Food found in the stomach indicated that the man had eaten a meal approximately two hours before his death, he concluded.

Michael Romanic stated that he had known Rogouskie for three years and each summer Rogouskie had worked for him at his farm on the fifth concession of Manvers. The last he saw Rogouskie was on Sunday, July 29, when he left to visit his sister-in-law. Three weeks later, when Rogouskie had not returned, he inquired at Mrs. Rogouskie's place and was told that the man had left the same day to return to his employer. Search was started and the help of Provincial Constable Smith, of Bowmanville, called in.

Girl Is Composed

Olive Romanic, with utmost composure, related that she had intended marrying the murdered man in October. "I was engaged to him," she said. "I saw him last on July 29. The evening before he had been with me at my home. He left about 7 o'clock in the morning and promised to be back around 6 or 7 in the evening."

Frank Rogouskie, nephew of the deceased, stated that during his uncle's last visit at his mother's place he had seen Peter counting his money. "It was in the barn and he said he had $80," declared the youth. "It was a large roll of bills."

The two empty purses, found near the creek and produced in court, were identified by him as belonging to Peter. "He left our place about 5 in the evening to go back to Romanic's and was in good humor," he said. "He promised to help me on the farm the next Sunday."

Alice and Vera Petraites, two sisters, said they had seen Rogouskie walk past their home about 5.30 on his way from his sister-in-law's to Romanic's.

Horse Shied At Bridge

Williams Argue, Manvers farmer, said he was driving along the road of the fifth concession of Manvers about 7.30 on the evening of July 29. He saw and spoke to Mrs. Vanderyegt. "As I drove along toward the bridge over the creek the mare put up her head suddenly and stopped," he said. "Just at that spot I saw that the grass had been trampled down as though by men's feet in a struggle. As I was talking to Mrs. Vanderyegt, I saw William Serhenwick go past with a cow."

Mrs. Vanderyegt also testified of seeing Serhenwick walking along the road with the cow.

John Fallis, another farmer, told of finding the body in the creek and the manner in which it was concealed by several heavy poles, sticks, clods and muck.

William Sehrenwick, employer of Bolejczuk, who is now in Cobourg jail and who will be formally charged to-morrow with the murder of Rogouskie, told a different story of his movements of July 29 yesterday than he did a week ago to an Examiner reporter. Then he said he had been home after 6 in the evening and Bolejczuk was with him, but yesterday he said he was out of the house until 8 o'clock.

Identifies Rope

He identified three pieces of rope as being similar to rope at his home. "We have lots of rope at our place," he said. He admitted that several weeks ago he missed one piece of rope that had been used to tie the cow's feet with. "It went some place, I don't know where," he stated.

On Sunday night, July 29, he said Dymtro was at home between 9 and 10 o'clock. "He had some trouble about the girl, Olive, but he never mentioned it to me," he said, relating that on the Saturday night previous he had been at Romanic's house and observed Dymtro peeping in the window. "It was none of my business," he affirmed.

Provincial Constable Smith told of his work in connection with the finding of Rogouskie's body and his arrest of Bolejczuk at the creek immediately that the body was discovered. He described the manner in which the body was concealed in the creek. Fifty feet from the body, he found a piece of rope. This rope was six feet long, of three strands, three-eighths of an inch in diameter. The rope was looped at one end to form a noose. At Serhenwick's he found other pieces of rope similar in every respect.

At the road fence, about 40 yards south of bridge at the creek, he found several hairs on the lower rail. The hair was dark with several gray hairs among them, and appeared to be human hair. From the road to the place where the body was found measured 186 yards.

Members of the jury were: Milton Wright, foreman; L. Staples, Bruce Riley, Arthur Flack, James McKinnon, R. Palmer, Jack Clark, Herbert Fallis and Isaac Fallis.

Colonel F. D. Boggs, K.C., Crown Attorney, conducted the inquest before Dr. H. Ferguson, coroner, of Emniskillen.

HOSPITAL TAX SEEN FOR MEALS

Association of Municipalities Claims it Would Net $1,250,000 Annually.

URGE GAS TAX CHANGE.

TORONTO, Sept. 5 (C.P.)—The Ontario Association of Municipalities to-day will vote on resolutions proposing a three per cent debenture loan from th Ontario Government and a "hospital tax" on restaurant meal checks. The proposed loan would mature in from three to six years.

Farmers' problems would be relieved by the loan it was declared at yesterday's meeting when the proposals appeared. Other resolutions that came before the association urged consideration of ability to pay be made when taxes are assessed and that professional men, educated at the province's expense, refund part of their training cost to the government.

Changes in the gasoline tax system also were suggested, one resolution proposing an assessment on damage done by commercial vehicles with the repair cost to be met by the gasoline tax which, according to another resolution, should be applied wholly to highway costs.

The five per cent "hospital tax" on meals costing 50 cents or more, it was declared, would mean $1,250,000 annually for the province, sufficient to meet the entire hospital expense levied on the municipalities at present.

Magistrate's Court

A local builder pleaded guilty before Magistrate Langley to-day to failing to comply with a rule in the city building bylaw requiring the laying of asbestos paper under wooden shingles. He was fined $5 and $2.50.

Film Candidates Sought For Locally

Film fans of Peterborough and district are to have the novel experience of not only seeing pictures in the actual making, but of participating in film production as members of the cast.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, Manager Stewart announces Hollywood Studios are to visit the Capitol Theatre, and the general public are invited to offer themselves for film tests, with a view to determining their eligibility for film work. Names of all who are successful in passing screen tests are to be submitted to Hollywood filmdom officials, and who know but that contracts may not result.

The stage at the Capitol is to provide the setting for the film tests and members of the audience will be able to sit back in their seats and witness pictures in the actual making. The pictures will also be shown on the screen.

Hollywood Studios have been in the Ontario Government Building at the Canadian National Exhibition, and it is stated that Oshawa and Peterborough are the only two cities outside of Toronto that are to be favored with a visit of the motion picture makers.

Police have been asked to co-operate with relatives in seeking the whereabouts of Arthur Jolly, a young man formerly employed as a tinsmith here. Any knowledge as to his present address should be forwarded to the police station.

PET SQUIRRELS
'Pat' Cullen brought his pet squirrel, 'Darky' along with him this morning to let The Examiner have a glimpse of the gay little fellow. He has beady black eyes and a bushy tail. Only two months old, he lives in a coat sleeve when at home, and promptly looked around for a similar hiding-place at the office. He whisks around his owner's neck and perches on his shoulders, but the noises of the clacking presses bothered him. Several people in the city are making pets of these cheerful little fellows. James Jackson of Maitland avenue has a larger specimen that isn't at all afraid of visitors. He will perch on Mr. Jackson's arm and eat nuts while people stand around and admire him. Near Dr. McNulty's home on Hunter street there is a colony of these black squirrels, some full grown. They visit the neighbors' lawns and gardens without any perceptible fear of humans.

A NICE CATCH.
Mr. Douglas Buell of Rochester, N.Y., landed a 20¾-lb. lunge on Labor Day while fishing in company with George Green of Peterborough, who also was successful in landing an 18½-lb. beauty last Sunday at Clear Lake.

Mrs. Howden was born in Cavan township, June 14, 1858, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Lowes.

For over forty years Mrs. Howden resided at Fairmont, Ontario, where she was an active member in church, Sunday school and Women's Missionary Society work. A woman of sterling qualities, who by her quiet and kindly disposition won the esteem and respect of all who knew her.

Since the death of her husband Mrs. Howden has resided in Peterborough and was a member of George Street United Church.

The funeral on Monday afternoon from the parlors of A. Comstock to St. John's Cemetery, Ida, was largely attended. The services were conducted by Rev. J. E. J. Millyard.

Beautiful tributes placed on and around the casket bore silent testimony of the high esteem in which the deceased was held by her many friends.

Those left to mourn are one sister, Mrs. Wm. H. Lee, Bethany, Ontario, and two brothers, Dr. Jos. A. Lowes, Pleasant Prairie, Wisconsin, and Henry W. Lowes, Mount Pleasant, Ontario.

South Africa's public works department has started the biggest program ever budgeted, and will expend $15,000,000 in about two years.

SOCIETY HOLDS HOLIDAY PICNIC

Sports Program Enjoyed by Members of St. David's Welsh Society.

AT "SNUGL-INN" CAMP.

A pleasant introduction to the activities of the Fall season of the St. David's Society was made on Labor Day. Between fifty and sixty members and friends of the Society held a jolly picnic on the banks of the River Otonabee at 'Snugl Inn' the camp of V. Rivard and Frank Cairns. Mr. Rivard and Bob Evans ferried the parties across the river to the picnic grounds where the Welsh flag hoisted on the wharf waved a welcome.

An active committee convened by Vivian Mills, vice president had planned an enjoyable program. The younger members took advantage of the warm day to indulge in swimming and diving, or a sail on the river. A softball game followed; this resulting in Miss E. Mill's team being the winners with a score of 17 to 10.

After tea had been partaken of a number of races were run off, resulting as follows:

Children under 7 years—1, Margaret Jones; 2, Doris Simmonds.

Junior girls — 1, Gladys Simmonds; 2, Audrey Yorke.

Boys' race—1, Glyn Davies; 2, Jack Morris.

Senior girls—1, Gwen Davies; 2, Ruth Farney.

Senior girls sack race—1, Gwen Davies; 2, Kathryn Edwards.

Men's sack race—1, Alf Mills; 2, Eric Gardiner.

As darkness approached, a huge camp fire was lit, and while corn and weiners were being prepared, the company was entertained to some well known tunes by an orchestra, composed of Henry Simmonds, Alf Brooks, Harry Brooks, Arthur Barnes, Ted Lewington and Eric Gardiner, the instruments being violins, guitars, banjos and harmonica. Several Welsh choruses were sung. No gathering of the society ever being complete without some Welsh music. The corn and hot dogs' eventually made their appearance, these being prepared by Mrs. R. Jones and Mrs. E. Bradbury.

During an intermission, Rev. J. L. Hughes, president, extended sincere thanks to the committee for their successful management of the day's proceedings and to Mr. Rivard for his kindness in allowing the use of his property. He and Mr. Frank Cairns had spared themselves no trouble for the comfort of the party. The president also offered the congratulations of the Society to Mrs. G. Blowers who had gained six prizes for her handwork at the Canadian National Exhibition. A very memorable day concluded with the singing of the Welsh National Anthem, after which the party dispersed.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the rectory of the Sacred Heart Church on Saturday, when Claire Vera Glen Parnell, second youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Parnell of 726 Elcome Crescent, was united in marriage to Mr. Leo George Blodgett, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Blodgett of 556 Romaine Street.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. C. Maloney.

Mr. and Mrs. Blodgett will reside in Peterborough.

JOHNSON—GRAY.
The marriage was solemnized quietly by the Rev. J. E. J. Millyard at four o'clock on Thursday afternoon, at the parsonage of George Street United Church, of Mr. Wesley Charles Johnson of Smith Township, and Miss Dorothy Irene Gray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Gray of 243 Stewart Street.

The bride was attired in blue crepe with matching hat.

After the ceremony, a wedding supper was served at the home of the bride's parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson will live at their home in Smith Township.

FITZGERALD—WALSH.
A pretty wedding was solemnized quietly at eight o'clock on Monday morning, at St. Peter's Cathedral, when Marguerite Lillian Walsh, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Walsh of Edinburgh Street, became the bride of Mr Mark Fitzgerald, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald of Toronto. The ceremony was solemnized by the Rev. P. Costello.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely frock of blue dotted net over taffeta, made on long princess lines. The large puffed sleeves were of taffeta ruffles and the narrow belt was buckled in silver.

A large blue picture hat had a narrow band of grosgrain ribbon finishing in a bow at the front.

White kid slippers were worn, with flesh colored hose and long white lace mittens. The bride carried a sheaf bouquet of Los Angeles gladioli.

Miss Marie Walsh was bridesmaid for her sister, wearing a dainty long dress of rose taffeta. The tiered skirt was fashioned entirely of ruffles that rippled to a V line, and ruffles made the short puffed sleeves. A narrow belt of black velvet had a large bow in the back. A small hat of black felt was trimmed with rose color. White kid slippers, flesh-colored hose and white silk gloves completed the costume, with a harmonizing bouquet of gladioli.

Mr. Leo Fitzgerald was groomsman for his brother.

After the ceremony, a dainty wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents. The bride's cake centered the table and decorations were in pink and white.

Mr. Fitzgerald and his bride left later by train for a trip to Niagara Falls, New York, the latter travelling in a blue suit with matching accessories. They will reside in Toronto.

BICK—DUNCON
Yesterday afternoon the marriage took place of Margaret Catherine, only daughter of Mrs. Duncon of Lindsay, and the late William George Duncon, to Mr. Charles Otter Bick of Toronto, son of Lieut.-Col. Bick and the late Mrs. Bick of Cannington. It was held in the garden at Mrs. Duncon's home. The wedding music was played by Miss Ann Naylor of Toronto and Rev. J. J. Johnstone Black officiated. The bride was given in marriage by Prof. George A. Cornish of Toronto. She wore a gown of ivory satin fashioned on fitted lines, with tight bodice trimmed with tiny buttons from neck to waist, long close-fitting sleeves and a long skirt flaring into a short train. Her veil was arranged with a halo of rare old lace belonging to her great-grandmother, and she carried an arm bouquet of Sweetheart roses, lily-of-the-valley and baby's breath. The bride was attended by three bridesmaids, Miss Vera Robertson of Lindsay, Miss Anne Ripley and Miss Helen Cornish, both of Toronto, the groom's brother, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. George Bick of Cannington, brother of the groom, and Mr. Alexander Galloway of Woodville. After a reception Mr. and Mrs. Bick left for an extended trip by motor, the bride travelling in a navy blue suit, with long coat trimmed with blue wolf and matching hat. On their return they will live in Toronto.

I wish to state that the picket of unemployed men around the house in which I am living at 349 Princess street is not there at my request. I am not a member of any unemployed association and have not asked for this kind of help. I wish also to thank officials for the leniency shown me so far in my trouble; at the same time I would greatly appreciate it if I could get a home for my family to live in.

"WATCH THOSE GIANTS"—Joe Cronin, who was in the last world series, warns Mickey Cochrane just how tough the New Yorks are.

INSIDE THE PADDOCK

BY ART MURRAY

WITH SATURDAY and Labor Day the racing scene shifted in the United States. Coney Island track at Cincinnatti opened their long Autumn campaign and are away to a good start. Providence and Saratoga shut up shop and Rockingham and Belmont Park opened up for business. While we are speaking of Rockingham we want to tell you that one called Larranaga is down there and all ready for a winning effort. Prince Tokalon is also at that track and will crash the winners circle before long. They have also shipped Moralist over there with the idea of sopping a few purses.

× × ×

Everything is in readiness for the opening of Thorncliffe on Saturday. Claude Pascoe, the well known Toronto merchant has announced that he will present a suit of clothes to each of the two leading jockeys at the coming meeting at the Leaside oval. This will certainly pep the jocks up and some spirited finishes should be in order. Each autumn for many years down at Pimlico they hang up a prize for the leading jockey and there is nearly as much interest in that competition as there is in the actual horse racing. Bill Woollatt is over in Detroit doing missionary work for his coming meeting and a large number of stables have promised to ship from that point. And at the present time he has over 350 horses quartered at the track. There will be no shortage of horses.

× × ×

JOHNNY THORPE the Seagram trainer paused up the recent meeting at Stamford and shipped direct to Toronto and his charges have had the benefit of a three weeks rest, so they should be right on edge when the bugle blows on Saturday. The rain over the week-end was very welcome to all track superintendents as the courses were as hard as flint. Art Halliwell is thinking of transferring his large string from Detroit to Thorncliffe and if he does you can count on him to grab off a few wins.

× × ×

The scene of racing in Chicago shifted in Labor Day from Hawthorne to Lincoln Fields, with practically the same horses in action. A plater by the name of Mad Career is over there and about this time every year he pops down in front at a sweet price. A little bird whispers that he is ready. Jim Badame is shipping his string from Providence to Thorncliffe and they will be at the Leaside course for Saturday's opening. Khorasan who broke the track record at Providence is the ace of the stable and is right in top form. Unless the handicapper loads too much weight on him he will be a sure fire next week. You know the old saying that weight will stop freight trains. Aymond is another of this same stable that will bear watching. The horses belonging to Col. E. R. Bradley are in great condition at the present time. He topped all owners at the long Saratoga meeting which closed on Saturday. A peculiar thing about this stable is that all the horses names begin with the letter B. . He will have many a well placed horse in the coming Belmont Park meeting which opened yesterday at New York.

TORONTO CLUB LIKELY FINISH SCHEDULE ON THE THIRD RUNG

Newark Increases Lead Over Wings by Spilling Syracuse Chiefs 4-0.

SENATORS HOLD GRIP.

(By the Associated Press)

International League clubs will have to go through the motions of playing out the regular schedule which ends Sunday but to all intents and purposes, the campaign could be called off right now.

Mathematically there still is a chance of a change in the standings but actually it seemed certain today that the four top clubs, in order, would be Newark, Rochester, Toronto and Albany.

The club with the highest percentage at the close of the regular season automatically wins the league championship. The teams finishing in the first four places then plunge into a play-off series to determine an International League representative in the Little World's Series against the American Association winners.

Bears Increase Lead

Yesterday Newark increased its lead to 4½ games over Rochester by spilling Syracuse Chiefs, 4-0, behind Jack Larocca's six-hit pitching. Rochester's game with Montreal, in the meantime, was washed permanently from the schedule unless one or the other team's place in the final standings is affected by failure to replay it. Larocca fanned 7 Syracuse batsmen and held the chiefs helpless all the way. Newark won the ball game with early inning attack on Jimmy McCloskey.

Albany maintained its grip on fourth place by swamping Baltimore, 10-3. Bill Atwood's home run with two on in the second inning gave the orioles a 3-0 lead but Albany pounded George Darrow steadily to tie it up in the fourth and then take a commanding lead in the late innings. Ed Chapman allowed the Orioles only three hits.

Bisons Back in Fifth

Buffalo remained 3½ games behind the Senators but regained sole possession of fifth place by beating Toronto, 3-1, in a game marked by the good pitching of both Charley Perkins and Al Hollingsworth. The latter was the victim of his teammates misplays in the fifth when errors by Joe Morrissey and Blakely gave the Bisons two runs. Their third marker came in the ninth on successive singles by Dick Gyselman, Perkins and Gregory Mulleavy. A wild pitch which Roy Spencer failed to retrieve immediately and a long outfield fly gave Toronto its lone run in the sixth.

Leaders All Idle

New York Giants' two entries, Bill Terry and Mel Ott, failed to take advantage of their opportunity to gain on the other "Big Six" batsmen yesterday when they took part in a doubleheader while all their rivals were idle. They continued to occupy the last two places in the sextet as Terry managed to keep his .352 average unchanged by hitting safely three times in nine trips to the plate, and Ott dropped a point to .346 with two hits in seven times up.

Keene Lassies Tie Clockmakers 4 To 4

The tangle in the Ladies' City and District Softball Loop was twisted into a worse condition last night on the Keene diamond when the Rural Lassies came from behind with a spirited rally in the last of the seventh innings, to push the tieing run across, against the Westclox and the final count was 4-4, thus making another game necessary; and as the result of this game has a direct bearing on the play-off chances of the other teams, the Westclox and Keene have been ordered to replay the game on Friday of this week.

Keene outhit the visitors 9 to 4, but made several miscues that the Clock-makers used to advantage, especially in the first canto when they chased three counters across on two walks, two errors and a fielder's choice. They got the other in the third on a triple by Webb and a passed ball. Keene crept along getting one in the first, one in the second and another in the third, the last mentioned one coming on triples by Marg Brown and Helen Nelson. Brown scored the tying run, when she singled, went to third on passed balls and romped home on Nelson's single to right. Hall pitched the first six for Westclox, fanning three and passing one. Blade hurled the seventh, whiffing one. Marilyn McCarthy went the route for the homesters, sending five out swinging She walked four. The teams:

Giants Have Good Chance of Settling Pennant Race in Home Grounds.

TIGERS RAINED OUT.

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York Giants to-day faced the beginning of their final home stand against their western rivals of the National League with a seven-game lead and handsome prospects of settling the pennant race before they leave the Polo Grounds again.

They tuned up yesterday by taking a pair of ninth-inning, one-run decisions from the Phillies, 3-2 and 6-5 to add a full game to their margin over idle Chicago Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals, who are tied for second place. In their next dozen games they encounter the Cubs, Pittsburgh Pirates and the Cards in order and if they can win three games out of four in each series that will virtually win the flag for them outright.

In further support of the Giants' position is the fact that they have lost only two series, both at Chicago, since the first of June.

Close Calls For Leaders

The Phils gave the league leaders a couple of close calls yesterday but neither Curt Davis nor Sir Johnson could stand off New York's ninth inning bursts. After giving only four hits in eight innings of a duel with Carl Hubbell in the opener, Davis handed doubles to Travis Jackson and Hank Leiber in the ninth for the odd run. Hubbell, who allowed nine blows, was credited with his 20th victory of the season.

In the second clash the Phils got a three-run start off Fred Fitzsimmons in the first and held a 5-4 margin going into the final inning although Johnson had to relieve Buel Moore in the eighth.

Then Harry Danning singled and Joe Moore clouted a home run to win the game, for New York.

The only other National League game saw the Braves and Randy Moore defeat the Dodgers 3-1, for their third straight triumph and their 10th in 11 home games against Brooklyn. Moore drove in all three Boston runs with a pair of singles. The defeat, incidentally, brought about Brooklyn's mathematical elimination from the pennant race.

Tigers Rained Out

The weather benefited Detroit's Tigers for the second time when their doubleheader at Chicago was rained out, leaving only one game on the American League program. The Tigers' leading rivals, the Yankees, also were idle but the games with the White Sox now must be played at Detroit, giving the Tigers' the slight advantage of the home grounds.

The single contest that was left saw the Indians tighten their hold on third place by bowling over the Browns 8-3, coming from behind after St. Louis had scored three runs off Lloyd Brown in the first. Hal Trosky and Earl Averill each hit his second homer in as many days to lead the assault. Trosky's homer was his 30th of the season and Averill's his 28th.

THISTLES NO MATCH FOR SPEEDY TIGERS

Mann Cup Holders Win First of Play-off Games 12-6.

HAMILTON, Sept. 5. — Tigers went one game up in the play-down series with Fergus for the Group 1 championship of the O.A.L.A. senior series here yesterday when they defeated the Thistles by 12 to 6 in a tilt that was just as one-sided and sometimes as listless as the score would indicate.

The locals started in early to pile up a comfortable margin and tallied seven times before the invaders got a counter. At the end of the opening period Tigers led by 3-0 and at half-time by 7-2. In the third quarter they outscored the visitors by 2 to 0, and ran their total up to 12 before Fergus got another counter but penalties in the dying stages of the game and some listless playing on the part of the Tiger defense enabled the invaders to score four times in the last three minutes of the game.

"OUTPUNCH THE PUNCHER," AIM OF ROSS FOR THURSDAY NIGHT

McLarnin Won't Have Chance to do Anything But Dock and Block.

IN PERFECT SHAPE.

By EDWARD J. NEIL,
(Associated Press Sports Writer.)

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—(A.P.)—Experience, the great teacher, has whispered into Barney Ross' unscarred ears that there is an even easier way of whipping Jimmy McLarnin Thursday night than the method he employed in the gruelling 15-round duel that brought him the welterweight title last May.

This youngster of the superb confidence that's so natural it never becomes offensive isn't at all hesitant in revealing the lessons he learned when his first session with the belting Irishman was over and he had the big gold welterweight star to carry home to the folks in Chicago.

"THIS TIME"—and he grinned as naturally and matter of fact as though he were the teacher—"I'M GOING TO OUTPUNCH THE PUNCHER. I'm going to keep so everlastingly on top of him throwing leather that he'll never have a chance to do anything but duck and block. I'm going to fight him this time as though Knute Rockne were my manager. My offense will be my defense."

"I know now he can't hurt me," he said, "and I know, too, what he also knows—that I've got youth and stamina and he hasn't any more. I think I'll knock him out this time in one of the late rounds."

As he went through his last boxing workout here yesterday, Ross was the answer to a fight manager's prayer. His shoulder and arm muscles seemed pounds heavier than in May and he scaled 130¾ pounds, a hint that his days as a genuine lightweight are numbered. He hits harder, sharper and he's a cunning dynamo of activity.

CLUBMEN BEAT QUINTE 15-12 IN FIRST GAME

Both Teams at Full Strength Give Good Display in Nip and Tuck Battle.

PETES HOLD SLIGHT EDGE.

Peterborough Kiwanis lacrossers took the first game of their O.A.L.A. group playoffs from Belleville last night by a 15-12 score in the Quinte town. This gives them a three-goal lead over the Aajmaa Club team for the return contest of the home-and-home series in the Armouries here Friday. The Petes had a slight edge on play last night and deserved the victory. They are slight favorites now to continue in the O.A.L.A. playdowns.

Both teams were at top strength, except for the absence of Joe Gould from the Belleville lineup, because of a sore leg. They had had Whitton in his place, and Kiwanis had added Shine Bovin to their squad. Play was fast, close and rugged between these well-matched outfits and the large crowd got repeated thrills. Referee Waghorne of Toronto kept the athletes in check when play roughened up in spots.

Leads Home Scorers

Hendy topped the homesters in scoring with six counters, while Runions got four—despite the fact that Miller checked him up closely all evening. Gibb tallied twice, and Whitton also turned in a neat game throughout. The whole Kiwanis team looked smart. Red Creighton played a fine contest in goal back of a strong defence. Jack counted five goals, with Magee and Dundas getting three apiece and Bovin two. The Petes combination and back-checking was a feature. The count was 6-3 for Belleville to end the first frame, 7-all going into the third and 10 to 9 for Kiwanis as they entered the final quarter.

Settle Score in Final

While the first line of the winners' squad proved more dangerous on the offensive, the alternates held their own with steady plugging and nice passing. With the score see-sawing and both teams very much in the fight, it remained 'till the dying minutes of the fracas before the visitors proved their superiority. The aggressive Peterborough players drew four of the five penalties handed out by the referee, who banished Runions and LeBarr right at the start for mixing it.

The teams.

Kiwanis—Goal, R. Creighton; defence, Miller and LeBarr; rover, Magee; centre, Dundas; wings, King and Jack; alternates, McConnell, Bovin, Jones, E. Creighton, Olaveson and Meyette.

Belleville — Goal, Goodier; defence, Pillon and Whitton; rover, Gibb; centre, Powers; wings, Runions and Hendy; alternates, Blue, Bush, Day, Burdes and Laughlin.

Referees: F. Waghorne of Toronto and D. Batchelor of Belleville.

Trinity Tennis Club Ends Season On Top

Trinity Tennis Club finished first in the Peterborough City Tennis League, leading all teams by twelve points. The final standing is:

Trinity	38½
George Street	36½
St. Andrew's	24½
All Saints	22½
Kawartha	20½
Quaker Oats	17½

The games which were rained out the first Saturday of the schedule will be played because of the close standing of the last five teams. On completion of these, the first and second teams will playoff to decide the league championship. This is the first year for this league and a real interest has been shown in it throughout the schedule. It has provided a good place for beginners and other tennis players as well. Every Saturday saw some fifty players in action. It should be even better next year. An account of the finals will appear later.

SPORTS DAY BY DAY

There's a ball game this eve, starting about 4.15—weather permitting—down in the Exhibition Grounds. It's between Kingston and Cogs, the second round of the O.B.A.A. playdowns in Intermediate B-1. This should be a nifty struggle and deserves a crowd. Cogs showed their class by knocking off the Lakeshore League champions in the first round, while this Kingston crew won the title of their district and defeated the best the Bay of Quinte loop could produce. There were fifteen winning teams in this class at the start, but nearly half have been eliminated to date, with more falling by the wayside right along. Cogs have a good chance of going places if they take Kingston.

Ye Petes are in Belleville this aft taking part in their second C.O.B.L. playoff game. Derell or Calladine will do the chucking for Knotty Lee's gang, while it'll have to be Casey or Smith, we expect, for the Nats. The Petes ought to cop this one, but don't lay the family silverware on anything in baseball playoffs. The lads are all rarin' to go since they cuffed Chief Williams' ears here Labor Day. In fact, they figure Monday might have been Labor Day literally for Jawn, but 'twas just another ball game for them. They meet the Nats in the third tussle here next Saturday.

Our bantam and juvenile ball teams are still waiting around and cooling their heels while other outfits are keeping in the pink with games. Don't know who is to blame, but the local teams have been ready and waiting for weeks for opposition, but nothing stirring so far. King Edward bantams ought to swing into action this week against a Toronto team, and the juvenile Terriers are certainly due to, also—but no definite word has been received here. Meantime, these teams are practising faithfully and getting in the odd exhibition workout.

• • • • • • •

And what about the gals' softball playoffs? We don't even know what teams have qualified for the finals, or is that settled yet? Omemee plays C.G.E. here this e'en to wind up the long-drawn-out schedule, so we imagine the playoffs will be commencing before it gets so cold the scorer will be having his fingers frostbitten trying to jot down the damages. Don't mind us if we're curious about these playoff arrangements, but think of the fans who might also like to get an idea about 'em.

Three local swimmers took part in the C.N.E. water races in Toronto over the week-end and did okay for themselves. They were Vern Janeway, Ward Wright and Bill Gerow. Saturday in the longer try for the Parker gold trophy, which Bob Pirie won, Janeway finished eighth and Gerow ninth out of eighty-six entries—a fine showing. Monday in the men's mile swim, which Barry of Vancouver copped, Janeway was third and Gerow sixth out of thirty-six entries. And in the Monday 100-yard water sprinter for men's senior Canadian championship, run off in two heats, Ward Wright finished fourth, doing the first heat in third place and coming fourth in the final—an exceptionally smart showing. These boys deserve credit. They are planning now on starting a boys' swim club at the "Y" here shortly and anyone interested should get in touch with one of the three.

We've often been struck with the fact—which, no doubt, we too are often guilty—that just as soon as an athlete does something really outstanding, several towns more or less claim him as their own, through the newspapers. Toronto is particularly adept at this and has never quite forgiven Howie Morenz for not only being born in Stratford but for failing to even stay a short time in Toronto before going to Montreal. Anyway, if any of the sportswriters in Toronto, Oshawa or St. Catharines—where he has lived at times—sees our article on Bill Engel, in tonight's paper, they will strongly resent the inference that he's a Peterborough boy. He isn't, but he's living here at present. A mighty good sprinter, who has made a name for himself recently in international racing. Bill has a real future in athletics before him.

Kiwanis lacrossers went to Belleville last eve to grab a 15-12 victory over the Aajmaa Club crew and take a three-goal lead on their group playoff round. Next game is here Friday in the Armouries, and if the local lads can hold that lead or increase it, they'll be champs of the Central Ontario district, and will advance into the O.A.L.A. playdowns. After Cobourg was knocked out by the Belleville gang, some of the Lakeshore team players stated: "That team is much stronger now and will slap Peterborough cockeyed, too; just wait and see." Well, we're still waiting but haven't seen anything yet.

• • • • • • •

Kiwanis all played bangup lacrosse, defensively and offensively. It's true that Joe Gould was out with a bum leg and that Runions was watched like a hawk by Miller, but the visitors did excellent work in winning on the Belleville floor. "Shine" Bovin was back in a Peterborough sweater and did okay, as did Jack, Magee, Dundas and the rest. Whitton played for Belleville, but Hendy, Runions and Gibb were the scoring stars. With Gould back again, they should give Kiwanis a mighty stiff struggle here Friday before letting the group championship come this way.

Up and down Sports' Rialto: In a snappy 80-minute gals' softball tilt at the Bowl last gloaming, Maple Leafs pulled out a 13-10 nod over Bailieboro . . . . Incidentally, looks like Keene, Westclox, C.G.E. and the Leafs will all be in that Bailieboro tourney Saturday . . . . The Westclox and Keene lasses tied at 4-all yesterday and must re-play it in the village Friday, while Keene goes to Sixth Line Thursday . . . . Looks like the G. and W. Grads may cop the T.A.B.A. senior ball title ere long now . . . . Bovin may be playing for Kiwanis in the Belleville-Petes' lacrosse game at 8.15 in the Armouries here Friday.

Mounties Defeated By Orillia Terriers

MOUNT DENNIS, Sept. 5.—Orillia Terriers took a strong hold on the O.A.L.A. Senior Central Group championship last night when they defeated Mount Dennis by 9 to 5 in the first game of the finals. The second game is carded at Orillia next Thursday night.

Some 1,200 fans witnessed a keen and exciting struggle, in which the "Mounties" took a commanding lead, tallying four times before the visitors got on the score sheet. The Terriers, however, came back strongly and held a 5-to-4 lead at the half-way mark.

Mount Dennis tied the count with the only counter of the third session, but Orillia clinched victory with a four-goal rush in the final period.

A Few Days Ago we printed all what Jimmy Matthews thought about our publicity stuff. . .And now again we have to stand corrected—only from a different source. .

—o—

It Seems that in reporting the mixed tournament of Wednesday last we kind of forgot to mention the ladies on the winning rinks.

—o—

Now, We Admit we did go a little shy on the ladies, but it was not intentionally, because we believe they were the backbone of the rink and if it were not for their good playing some of the skips would have been lost entirely. We congratulate all the ladies in the tournament, but more especially the winners.

—o—

We Have A Reason for printing all this, because we are afraid that if the board of directors got wind that we were not reporting all this stuff correctly, and giving credit where credit is due, well we might lose our job—and we don't want that to happen (well, not 'till the season is over, anyway).

—o—

R. Dyer's Rink completely outclassed J. Penrose in the final game of the club schedule. The Penrose gang were never in the hunt at all. Right from the beginning they were behind, and at the half way mark were trailing, 13-1. They did a little better towards the finish but ended up, 22-10.

SILVER SLIPPERS BY Temple Bailey

CHAPTER 31

Penelope knew that it was more wonderful than it looked. It had been Joan's salvation. It had kept her from thinking. When she had come home from her walk with Giles she had said to Penelope, "Isn't there anything I can trust? He told me loved me . . . and he is married . . . I can't have him any longer as a friend."

And now Joan behind the screen was saying mentally, as she had said so often aloud to her class, "Step, glide, step, swing . . . step, glide, step, swing . . ." Her brain was swept clear for the moment of everything except the necessity for holding the children to the rhythm and beat.

She saw nothing but the children; not even the parents in their pride. Step, glide, step, swing . . . step, glide, step, swing . . . "How lovely they are! How lovely!" Joan exulted. There was little freckle-faced San Sneed, in a burgundy blouse and gold sash, with a green bowl heaped with cranberries. "He'll never see himself freckle-faced again. He has had a glimpse of something better."

Step, glide, step, swing . . . "And Minnie Pratt—she is simply heavenly with that old ermine muff of Penelope's and that sled of popcorn balls . . ."

Step, glide, step, swing . . . a group of brown gnomes now, with their sacks of potatoes; two ivory-clad figures with celery making an Indian headdress; a thin line of yellow-clad carrots; squat, green-gowned maidens, cabbage-bonneted!

Step, glide, step, swing . . . This time last year Joan had been with Aunt Adelaide in the great palace on Mount Vernon Place—there had been a play and a dance afterwards . . . and Joan had worn white tulle and the pearls that Aunt Adelaide had given her—the pearls which had slipped down like a white snake on Aunt Adelaide's back . . .

Step, glide, step, swing . . . This time last year she had not met Drew Hallam. She had not met Giles Armiger. This time last year she had believed in love and constancy and things like that . . . friendship . . .!

The gifts about the altar were piled high, so that its flame was almost hidden. The end of the program was in sight . . . seven roasted turkeys, borne aloft by seven white-clad cooks . . . a melting and marvellous finale.

Then Joan came out from behind the screen and made a little speech and thanked everybody, and smiled, and received congratulations, and only Penelope knew how hard it was for her. "Her thoughts aren't with us," said the wise old woman in her heart.

The Leonards and the Briggses were to have supper at Penelope's. Old John Leonard drove his rickety car back to the farm to get his invalid wife, and Penelope and her guests went through the wood.

Joan and John and Priscilla lagged a bit behind Evelyn and Penelope. A great moon rolled up over the ocean. "The sky looks like our gold screens," said Priscilla. And John said, "The trees make black stripes on it."

They came to the place where Joan had danced with Drew, and suddenly she felt as if something gripped and held her there. "Run on ahead, children," she said, "and help Penelope with the supper. I'll follow you in a moment."

They asked no questions and sped on their way, and Joan stood alone in the cold, moonlighted wood. And suddenly it seemed to her as if she heard the beat of the tune Drew had whistled . . . and the air seemed filled with dancing silver slippers . . . up and down in front of her eyes . . . like birds in flocks . . . until she put out her hand to push them away and found nothing there . . .

She leaned against a tree. "I must get away from here," she heard herself saying, "this place is—haunted . . ."

She began to run. When she reached the house she stood for a moment on the steps before she dared open the door. She felt that her face would show what she was feeling. Yet when she was safe within the kitchen its warmth and friendliness seemed to enfold her.

"Can I help?" she asked, with her breath still short.

Penelope who was stirring gravy, shook her head. "Not out here. You can fix the table and light the candles."

Joan tried to speak with lightness. "You insist on my being simply ornamental."

Evelyn, who was mashing potatoes, commented, "Why not? You do it so well."

The candles on the table were yellow, the linen was ivory, and there was purple and yellow fruit in a Chinese bowl. Joan wore a dress of purple chiffon, one of the sheer things Adelaide had insisted on sending after her. There was a gold band about her hair, and over one ear a tiny bunch of golden grapes.

"Such state and elegance," said old John Leonard as he came in with his wife on his arm, "I don't know how we are going to live up to it."

The children were in raptures: "It is like the Arabian Nights."

Penelope remarked: "Joan makes a feast of the simplest meal. She refuses to yield to the commonplace."

"It is you who make the feasts," Joan told her, "I haven't seen such a chicken pie in a thousand years."

"Really a thousand?" asked young John earnestly.

Joan laughed, "Perhaps I ate one in a previous incarnation . . . but never one as good as this."

Throughout the meal Joan laughed and talked and told stories. And who could know that in the back of her mind was the vision of a cold moonlighted wood, and of silver slippers dancing . . .

For dessert there were small and spicy pumpkin pies, and coffee in Penelope's Chinese cups. And it was while they were drinking their coffee that the telephone rang.

Joan went to answer, and called back presently that it was "long distance."

"For me," she added.

When she returned to the dining room her face was white. "Aunt Adelaide is ill," she said, "she wants me."

"My dear . . ." Penelope rose and looked at her.

Joan answered the unasked question: "Yes, I'm going."

Priscilla got up from the table and flung herself upon Joan. "Oh, you musn't go away, you mustn't."

"Cilla," her mother admonished.

"But you'll come back for Christmas? You will, won't you? We were going to invite you to our house to dinner. It wouldn't be like this, with the candles and everything, but it would be nice. We planned it all, didn't we, mother? John Alden and I are saving our allowance . . . for the oysters . . ."

Joan gathered the weeping little figure in her arms. "My darling," she said, "I must go. But I'll come back, and we'll have our Christmas dinner . . . and you shall buy the oysters, and I'll eat 'em all up."

On Penelope's loving heart was printed indelibly the picture of Joan in the purple dress bending down to the weeping child. She had a frightened feeling that Joan would not come back for Christmas. That when Adelaide had her again, she would not let her go. With no sign, however, of her inner disturbance, she spoke of trains. "There is none you can take until tomorrow morning."

But Joan could not wait. "I'll motor to Portland and get the midnight express. Aunt Adelaide is very ill . . . they think that she is . . . dying . . ."

FINE ADDRESSES GIVEN MADOC W.I.

Mrs. J. Aylesworth Discusses Agriculture—Mrs. F. Harrison Tells of Alaskan Trip.

MADOC, Sept. 5 (Examiner Correspondence). — "Agriculture; Its Origin and Scope" was the subject of an exceedingly well-prepared and interesting paper given by Mrs. James Aylesworth at the meeting of the Madoc Women's Institute held at Sagsnoska Cottage at Moira Lake, on Friday afternoon.

About twenty-five were in attendance and one of the most interesting and educational programs of the year was given. Mrs. William Miller dealt with the current events of the month. Mrs. F. E. Harrison, who has just returned from a delightful trip to Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Alaska, gave an illustrated talk on the beauties by land and water of this memorable trip. Mrs. W. H. Hunter gave a brief but interesting sketch of her motor trip to Winnipeg through Northern Ontario and north of Lake Superior and returning by a southerly route entering Ontario at Sarnia. She sketched some incidents and adventures at tourist camps, noting the courtesy and assistance given at these camps.

Reports of committees were received, and it was decided that at the next meeting committees would be formed for the Fair booth, and consideration given to new plans of work.

Donations of clothing are asked for a family of eight children, boys 13, 12, 11, 5, girls 9, 7, 3 and baby. These children need clothing at once to be able to attend school Donations may be left at R. McCoy's store or Mrs. T. L. Nickle's home.

Consideration is being given regarding a donation to the Dafoe Hospital for the Dionne babies, as Dr. A. R. Dafoe is one of our own Madoc boys.

A picnic lunch was served by the ladies consisting of salads, beans, pickles, sandwiches, cake, cookies and pie, and as one lady expressed it, "Those who stayed away to-day certainly missed a great treat."

Community singing and the National Anthem concuded the program.

The roll call was answered by "Insect Enemies of the Farmer."

Doubts Local Affect From Textile Strike

"It is most unlikely that the textile strike in the United States affects us in Peterborough or other textile plants in Canada a great deal," D. H. Melton, manager of the Bonnerworth plant of Dominion Woollens and Worsteds, inc formed The Examiner to-day when his opinion was sought as to how the strike might react on Canadian industry.

He did not think that the strike would open up any new export fields for Canada, pointing out that the tariff barriers more or less prohibited such trend if the strike in the States is prolonged.

"It may affect raw materials somewhat," Mr. Melton said, "but this too is very problematical. Everything is so unsettled throughout the world these days that it is next to impossible for a manufacturer to predict future developments with any expectation of success."

Canadian Press Summary

Canadian textile manufacturers to-day looked with some indifference on the strike of operatives in the United States, but some suggested prolongation of the labor conflict in the south might result in opening to Canadian manufacturers of new export markets now supplied by United States interests.

No labor difficulties were anticipated in Canada as a result of the United States strike, it was said, and Canadian workers in textile plants were reported contented.

Officials of plants in Truro, N.S., centre of the Maritime textile industry, said they anticipated no adverse effects from the strike in the United States. They added they expected that if the strike was prolonged sufficiently they might be called upon to supply part of the United States market.

STEVENS SEES CANADA HEADED FOR NORMALITY

Confident $40,000,000 Public Works Program Will Stimulate Business.

EMPIRE TRADE GROWS.

KENORA, Ont., Sept. 5.—(CP)—Belief the $40,000,000 program for public works, passed at the last session of parliament would stimulate business throughout the Dominion and the time had come when Canada should move out to regain normal conditions, was expressed by Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, here.

Speaking in the interests of Joseph Derry, Liberal-Conservative candidate in the forthcoming federal by-election, Mr. Stevens, chairman of the Mass Buying and Price Spreads Committee, quoted facts and figures to discount the presumption he believed was held by some that the Bennett government was to blame for the depression in Canada. The depression and the closing of the markets of the world had already taken place before the Bennett government took office.

Quoting at length from statistics, Mr. Stevens showed that France, Germany, Italy Belgium and many other countries had heavily increased the tariffs on many commodities before 1930. He also cited duty increased on wheat, wheat flour, butter, lard, zinc, newsprint, oats, etc, before 1930, which was prior to the Bennett administration taking office.

Exports Increase

Dealing with the Imperial conference at Ottawa, he quoted figures to show resulting increases in exports of bacon, apples, wheat, flour, canned fruits, wood, paper newsprint and other commodities.

There had been a substantial increase in imports from all Dominion, he said. While there had been a 35 percent decline in word trade, there had been an increase of 47 percent in trade among the nations of the British Empire and Canada.

"Capital is an outgrowth of Democratic institutions," stated Mr. Stevens, "and we can't cure the evils of it by wiping out the entire system."

Turning to the Marketing Act he said it gave Canada power to control exports as well as imports. The bill to relieve the debt problems of the agriculturist, which would effect compromises and rearrangements to enable the farmers to remain on the land as effective producers, and the Bank of Canada Act were also referred to in detail.

Touching relief, he stated the government had already paid out $150,000,000 for relief purposes.

PETERBOROUGH PAIR CAPTURES CENTRAL ONTARIO NET HONORS

Mrs. J. A. Dewart and Miss Gladys Carvolth Triumph in Central Ontario Tennis.

DOUBLES CHAMPIONSHIP.

A Peterborough pair, Mrs. J. A. Dewart and Miss Gladys Carvolth, won the ladies' honors in the Central Ontario doubles championships held here on Labor Day. They went through without losing a set against some of the best players in this section of the province.

Mrs. Dewart played a steady driving game from the baseline while Miss Carvolth was brilliant at the net, angling her volleys consistently for placements.

Miss Graham and Miss Powers of Tweed, the other finalists, played a strong game and made it close, particularly the second set. The scores:

First round: Mrs. Cowan and Miss A. Grieves of Aurora defeated Misses Fleming and Callaghan of Oshawa, 2-6, 8-6 and 6-4; Mrs. Dewart and Miss Carvolth defeated Misses Lees and Baker of Lindsay, 7-5 and 6-2.

Semi-final round—Misses Graham and Powers defeated Mrs. Cowan and Miss Grieves, 6-2 and 6-3; Mrs. Dewart and Miss Carvolth won from Misses Packard and Thompson of Oshawa, 6-0 and 6-3.

Final round—Mrs. Dewart and Miss Carvolth defeated Misses Graham and Powers, 6-2 and 6-4.

Men's Play Halted

Darkness called a halt in the men's doubles championships before a winner could be declared. The tourney was held on the courts of the Peterborough, Kawartha and Quaker Oats courts, starting at ten a.m. Labor Day. Nineteen entries represented Oshawa, Aurora, Tweed, Lindsay and Peterborough. There were six ladies' entries.

The strong Oshawa men's team fared the best and the three teams remaining in the running all represent that club. S. Alger and John Harris fought their way to the finals by defeating B. Rollins and Joe McTeague of Tweed in a thrilling semi-final, 6-4, 5-7 and 6-4. In the other bracket, Strike and James, last year's runners-up, ran into decided difficulties when R. O'Hara and Al Neun, lower ranking players of their own club in Oshawa, carried them to 4-all in the third set before darkness prevented any further play. O'Hara and Neun won the first set, 7-5 and were leading, 5-3 in the next but Strike and James put forth their best tennis to pull out the set, 8-6. O'Hara and Neun grabbed the first three games in the third set but could not hold the edge and the set was tied 4-4 when play was called. It will be finished and the finals played in Oshawa next Saturday.

Close Call for Tweed

MacDonald and Hainer of Oshawa nearly ousted the strong Tweed entry. After leading by one set and 5-3 in the second, Rollins and McTeague rallied to take the match, 5-7, 7-5 and 6-3. K. Davis and W. Adams of Aurora extended Strike and James to the limit in the quarter-finals, having a lead of 4-2 in the third set but lost out, 6-3, 2-6 and 6-4.

The local entries fared poorly, the veteran George Scott and Walter Jackson being the only ones to win a match. However, in the consolation, J. H. Bell and C. Crowe of Kawartha Club came out on top, winning in one set, 6-4, from Tom and Bob Harris of Oshawa. The scores:

First round—G. C. Scott and W. Jackson defeated Dr. Devins and T. Cowan of Aurora, 4-6, 6-2 and 6-3; O'Hara and Neun of Oshawa defeated H. Forsythe and R. Baker of Lindsay, 3-6, 6-4 and 6-3; Barker and Burroughes of Oshawa won from A. Ward and H. Howden, 5-7, 6-3 and 6-4.

Second round—B. Rollins and J. McTeague of Tweed defeated H. Marsh and N. MacKenzie, 6-1 and 6-1; R. D. MacDonald and H. Hainer of Oshawa defeated Max Cotton and J. Cowling, 4-6, 6-3 and 6-2; S. Alger and G. Harris of Oshawa defeated Scott and Jackson, 6-2, 6-2; E. Granick and C. Dowell of Oshawa defeated W. White and F. Williams of Lindsay, 6-3, 7-5; O'Hara and Neun defeated Tom and Bob Harris of Oshawa, 6-4 and 6-4; Barker and Burroughes defeated B. Heslop and G. Harper, 6-4, 6-2; W. Adams and K. Davis of Aurora defeated G. and J. Kirkwood, 6-1, 6-1; R. Strike and S. James defeated J. H. Bell and C. Crowe, 6-4 and 6-1.

Third round—Rollins and McTeague won from MacDonald and Hainer, 5-7, 7-5 and 6-3; Alger and Harris defeated Granick and Dodwell, 6-0 and 6-2; O'Hara and Neun defeated Barker and Burroughes, 6-3, 6-3; Strike and James won from Adams and Davis, 6-3, 2-6 and 6-4.

Alger and Harris defeated Rollins and McTeague, 6-4, 5-7 and 6-4; other unfinished.

Consolation

First round—Devins and Cowan defeated Cotton and Cowling, 6-2, 6-3; Forsythe and Baker defeated Marsh and MacKenzie, 1-6, 6-4, 6-4; White and Williams won from Ward and Howden, 3-6, 6-3 and 7-5.

Second round—Heslop and Harper defeated Scott and Jackson by default; Harris and Harris defeated Devins and Cowan, 8-6, 2-6, 6-2; Forsythe and Baker defeated White and Williams, 6-1, 2-6 and 7-5; Bell and Crowe defeated G. Kirkwood and Hammell, 6-2, 6-3.

SIX TRAINERS ARE SUSPENDED BY RACING BODY

Stamford Park Racing Association Officials Take Action.

SALIVA TESTS BLAMED.

TORONTO, Sept. 5.—In a meagre statement issued in Hamilton yesterday Stamford Park Racing Association officials announced that W. C. Weant, W. J. Donohue, P. S. Price, Thomas McCarthy, E. M. Doumani and P. H. McDonald were suspended from training horses until Sept. 20, according to a racing publication.

For some reason or other the statement refrained from mentioning the names of the officials who took action against the six trainers and deprived them of the right of racing during the Thorncliffe Park meeting, or the nature of the offense. One of the men affected by the ruling stated some days ago that he was prepared to testify in a properly constituted court of law that his horse had not received anything in the way of stimulant or narcotic since the season commenced in Kenilworth Park.

Four of the trainers mentioned in the announcement were directed by David Gillies, an I.C.R.A. official, to appear at a meeting in Toronto of the I.C.R.A. some days ago, and after spending an hour in the offices of this body, were advised to return to the Stamford Park officials. The excuse given was that Stamford Park, while employing I.C.R.A. officials and operating under I.C.R.A. rules, was not a member of the I.C.R.A., according to one of these trainers.

Learn of Suspension

The four trainers observed a prominent owner, Arthur Hullcoat and James Smith enter the committee-room. Then learned they had been suspended until Sept. 7, which meant that no action of serious consequence had been taken against them because they were able to proceed about their work in preparing their horses for fall meetings, and the latter open at Thorncliffe Park on Sept. 7. They expected their cases would be dealt with, but the committee decided otherwise and sent them off to the Stamford Park officials.

The four trainers were told when directed to appear before the I.C.R.A. committee that entries of their horses had been refused on account of saliva tests. After they had been told no decision would be reached in their cases they expected the Stamford Park officials would hear them. Instead they discovered by way of the meagre announcement that if they desired a hearing they could ask for one during the Thorncliffe Park meeting. The statement did not say if they were to present their cases to the I.C.R.A. or the Stamford Park officials.

There was no announcement as to whether John P. Turner, a United States citizen, agreed to the suspension of the six trainers. Turner is expected to work at Thorncliffe Park during the coming meeting. After the I.C.R.A. meeting complain was made that an United States citizen should not be permitted to render any decision affecting the property rights of a Canadian, because should the decision be unjust the Canadian horseman might have difficulty in securing redress.

Peterborough "A's" Takes Championship

Peterborough "A" team of the Peterborough Tennis and Lawn Bowling Club, captained by Max Cotton, won the championship of the Kawartha District Tennis League by defeating Kawartha "A" team, 3 to 2, in the semi-finals, and Port Hope by 4 to 1 in the finals. ENGEL TAKES SPRINT HONORS

Local Athletes Cop Four Firsts and Two Thirds in Six Events.

AT TORONTO EXHIBITION.

In Bill Engel, Peterborough has a real sprinter. Though not born here, he is residing in this city now and as a Peterborough athlete took part in the Labor Day track and field events at the Toronto Exhibition Monday. He won four first prizes and two thirds in the six events he entered. He captured first place in the 100-yard and the 200-yard sprints, the running broad jump and the hop-step-and-jump. He won third place in the standing broad jump and the shot put.

Bill took four firsts and a third in the Toronto field day in 1932, last year being in Europe while these competitions were held. While there, he raced in London, Leeds, Paris and Prague. In the later place, he finished second to a native Czecho-Slovakian who broke a national record at 100 meters to win. Engel holds the Balmy Beach record for 100 yards, doing it in 10 seconds flat two years ago. He has also tied the Canadian 50-yard record of 5 2-5 seconds.

Holding numerous trophies and medals, this young athlete is a real prospect in sprints. He missed out in the British Empire trials by just one place. He got his experience in the shorter races while attending University of Toronto several years ago. His next competition he expects will be in Asia next spring, Bill having been invited to compete as a member of the British Mooshee team. He keeps in good condition all the time, and may yet be wearing Canada's colors in the 1936 Olympic games.

WESTWOOD COUPLE CELEBRATE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Dickson Have Lived Fifty Years on Farm.

NUPTIALS RENEWED

The fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. William David Dickson and Mrs. Dickson (nee Hannah Jane Elmhirst), was fittingly celebrated on Saturday afternoon and evening, September 1st, at their home near Westwood, when they were greeted by seventy-five guests who brought felicitations from various parts of the country.

The bride and groom of half a century were banquetted with a sumptuous turkey dinner. The head table was adorned by the bride's wedding cake, while all tables were almost bent by the amount of salads, desserts and other delicacies.

The toastmaster for the occasion was Rev. P. J. Horwood of Toronto, a son-in-law. Toasts were proposed as follows: To the bride and groom, by Mr. George Elliott, to which Mrs. Dickson responded; to the guests from the United States, by Miss Lillian Dickson; to Mrs. M. R. Elmhirst (who was present at the wedding fifty years ago), by Mrs. P. J. Horwood, to which Mr. Lou Elmhirst responded; and to the ladies, by Mr. Loyne Elmhirst, Mr. W. Gamble of Peterborough, brought greetings and gave a short address.

At the conclusion of the dinner, the bride and groom were subjected to another marriage ceremony by Dr. Horwood, who started them off on their second fifty years, after which they inspected the many and varied gifts, which represented the esteem in which they are held by those present.

A pleasant evening was spent in community singing, and a short program was provided for the entertainment of all.

Mr. and Mrs. Dickson have spent all their married life on the farm where they still reside, and the good wishes of the community go with them for the remaining years of life.

The ten children of their family were present for the occasion. They are: William, of Otonabee; Mrs. Percy Davidson, of Indian River; Rendle, of Otonabee; Mrs. P. J. Horwood, of Toronto; Mrs. Melville Wood, of Keene; Truman, of Syracuse, N.Y.; Victor, of Otonabee; Helena, at home; Lillian, graduate nurse, of Oshawa; and Reta, at home. Several of the eighteen grandchildren were also present, and among other guests were the bride's only living sister, Mrs. J. Lobb, of Westwood, and two brothers, Frank and William Elmhirst, of Oswego, N.Y.

LAKEFIELD SCHOOL RE-OPENS TUESDAY

More Than One Hundred Students Enrolled in Upper Classes.

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 5 (Examiner Correspondence).—The High School reopened on Tuesday morning, with more than one hundred pupils enrolled, with more to come.

The pupils gathered in the Second Form room and the principal, J. F. Harvey, addressed them for a few minutes, welcoming old pupils back and extending a warm welcome to the young people who, having passed the Entrance examinations at midsummer, are now entering a new sphere. The fact that last year's staff are all back again is a matter of great satisfaction, Dr. J. C. Smith and Miss Graham, members of the board, were present and said a few words of appreciation of the work of the staff and the pupils and expressed confidence in the good work which will be carried on this year. The stronger school spirit was also commended.

The staff consists of J. F. Harvey, B.A.; Mrs. Nellie M. Stinson, B.A.; Miss Bessie Dunn, B.A.; and H. P. Barrett, B.A.

The Public School also reported on Tuesday with the same staff as last year, T. W. Chaplin (principal) and Miss E. Kennedy, Miss M. J. Payne, Misses T. Carveth, B. Madill and E. Kidd. It was indeed the first day of school for quite a number of little people who entered the great new adventure of "going to school."

Mr. Renard was present and is making arrangements for the teaching of music, which will begin at once, according to the arrangement made in the early summer.

Gained 12 pounds

"I was terribly thin, rundown, tired all the time yet couldn't sleep. I tried all sorts of tonics, and was getting discouraged when a friend told me about C. C. & B. Tonic Tablets. I quickly gained 12 pounds and felt like a new person. Believe me, I can't praise C. C. & B. enough."

—Marjorie Pry, Lachine, P.Q.

You, too, can gain good solid flesh to fill out your body to its natural weight. C. C. & B. Tonic Tablets consist of 4 great tonics in 1—Calcium Carbonate to purify the blood, clear up pimply skin and put the stomach in first-class order—and Brewer's Yeast, Blaud's Iron and Extract of Cod Liver — all making you an abundance of rich pure blood.

STUART DRIVE IS APPROVED

the price of $800 being asked for it from the city was absurd. The property is a "sour lemon" which, worthless to the owners, the city is being asked to unload from their hands, he said.

Aldermen Sloan and Macdonald voiced opposition to the deal. Alderman Fitzpatrick suggested that the city might bargain for a much lower price. Alderman Ellis stated that when he originally approved the idea he understood the Ashburnham Patriotic League to be desirous of the property in carrying out their scheme in connection with Armour Hill. He had since learned that the League scheme has nothing to do with the property and, as a result, has switched his attitude in the matter, he said.

A communication from the Relief Land Settlement Department, informing that it would take no further families from Peterborough this year was received by the Council.

Office Not Sanitary

A letter from Dr. W. J. Bell, Deputy Minister of Health, declaring the condition of the local Provincial Laboratory in regard to sanitation to be decidedly unsatisfactory was referred to the Property Committee for action. The Council, in the meantime, approved a recommendation of the Property Committee for arrangement of caretaker services for the office of the Medical Officer of Health and the Laboratory.

The letter resulted from a recent visit to the city by Dr. Bell and two associates. Discussing the letter, the aldermen agreed that the efforts of the Council to keep the city in a clean condition should be pursued "at home" as well as afield. It was felt that no blame could be attached in the matter; the caretaking service in the past having been totally inadequate.

Given Half Day's Pay

The purchase of a typewriter for the office of the Medical Officer of Health was approved. Pointing out that, through an oversight, local men working on relief were docked a half day's pay for a holiday given them to go to the Exhibition, Alderman Tuggey asked that payments of 52 cents to each be made. The suggestion was carried.

A request by the Bell Telephone Company for permission to lay underground conduit along the north side of Simcoe street between George and Aylmer was referred to the City Engineer with power to act. Three eating house licenses were ordered renewed. They are for the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, the S. S. Kresge Company, and the Sunshine Dairy.

Sunday School Class Honors One Member

(Examiner Correspondence.)

NORWOOD, Sept. 5.—On Thursday evening, the senior girls' class of the Elgin Sunday school gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs Sam McGee to bid farewell to their daughter, Miss Margeurite, who is leaving on Tuesday to enter the Training School of Nurses, at the Western Hospital, Toronto.

In a beautifully worded address the girls expressed their appreciation in the many ways their class mates had so willingly assisted in all Sunday school activities, and presented her with a pendant set with her birthstone. Miss McGee, replying in her pleasing manner, thanked her friends for their good wishes.

The rest of the evening was spent in playing games after which lunch was served.

Light Fingered

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—(CP)—This business of the pants has Harry Morris coming and going. Detectives who said they saw his fingers reaching into the pockets of other men's trousers arrested him as a pickpocket. Federal agents looked at prints of those same fingers and accused Morris of helping to conceal $10,000 worth of stolen pants and pant material.

Peterboro Rangers Beaten By Saints

Campbellford Outfit Takes 14-5 Decision in Exhibition Fixture.

(By Staff Reporter)

CAMPBELLFORD, Sept. 5.—The Peterborough East City Rangers went to defeat before St. Mary's Campbellford, in a softball tilt on Saturday last, when the local registered the long end of a 14-5 count. The game was a return fixture of a home and home series in which the Rangers won the first tilt in Peterborough with a 5-4 score.

The game, played on the High School grounds, was a fast one, the first frame being blank. St. Mary's however had the edge on the play and soon piled up a very satisfactory lead, with the assistance of Holmes on the mound, who pitched a whirlwind game.

Two homers featured the game, Palliquin for Campbellford and Hoolihan for Peterborough rounding the bases.

Hastings Game Is Ordered Replayed

HASTINGS, Sept 5 (Examiner Correspondence)—At a meeting of the Hastings Softball League on Tuesday night the protest entered by the Clerks against the Tanners on Friday night's game which the Tanners won 8 to 7, the game was thrown out and ordered replayed.

The Tanners won the first game 15 to 2 and appeared to have the second one 8 to 7 only after looking up the rules the Clerks found they could protest on a blocked ball at home, which nipped off one of their runs. A great many such incidents have occurred during the season but this was the first protest.

In the meantime Elgin are standing by waiting for the winners to start the finals. The Tanners and Clerks will likely tangle on Friday night.

Robertson (formerly Miss Bertha Rattray, of the Madoc Public School teaching staff) gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs John Robertson, for a social evening and to present her with a miscellaneous shower of many beautiful and useful gifts. An enjoyable evening was spent in dancing.

When lightning recently tore up the floors of a house near Vicenzia Italy, a large quantity of rifles sabres, bayonets and other weapons dating from the time of Napoleon were revealed.

CANADA'S PRIME MINISTER LANDS AT FRENCH PORT

Will Reach Paris This Evening on Way to Geneva.

BRIEF INTERVIEW.

"No Reason to Refuse" Soviets to League of Nations.

DISARMAMENT TALK.

(Editorial Note. — Menaced by Japan in the east and by Germany and Poland in the west, Russia may be given a permanent seat in the Assembly of the League of Nations. Although no composite army or navy would be available for her aid in the event of hostilities with these powers, Moscow would be in the position of invoking mediation of the League against aggressors. Great Britain, France and Italy are agreeable to Russia's entry, a prospect which has become one of the major diplomatic moves in the Old World. Japan has designs on both China and the Russian port of Vladivostok, and Germany and Poland would like to divide the Ukraine between them. In view of Russia's present position in regard to her Oriental and western rivals, Premier Bennett's brief statement to the press at Cherbourg, France, today bears far more importance than may appear to the casual reader).

CHERBOURG, France, Sept. 6 (C.P. Cable)—There was no reason why the entry of Soviet Russia into the League of Nations should be opposed, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett of Canada said briefly as he landed to-day from the Empress of Britain, en route to Paris, Geneva and London.

Premier Bennett disposed of apparent uncertainty over Canada's attitude to the entry of the Soviet into the league with a sentence.

Asked to express himself definitely on the stand Canada would take during the forthcoming league assembly, Premier Bennett said

LOCAL WATERS ARE RESTOCKED

Summary of Department's Work in County Last Year.

IMPRESSIVE FIGURES.

The annual report of the Department of Game and Fisheries states that the various Crown game preserves are doing well and that wild life therein is on the increase, and that the continued expansion of this work, especially insofar as it involves privately-owned lands, indicates a growing realization of the benefits which are to be derived therefrom.

The County of Peterborough Preserve, comprising 86,040 acres, was the fourth largest established in 1933, and it is estimated that it will be a valuable addition to the existing system.

Peterborough County waters have been well looked after by the local members, as has been the custom in the past five years, as the following distribution will show:

Small-mouth black bass fry—Belmont Lake 5,000, Clear Lake 5,000; and in Northumberland, 10,000 at Trent River, 10,000 at Healey Falls, 10,000 at Crow Bay and 5,000 at Anderson's Landing. In Hastings County, 5,000 were deposited in Beaver Creek, 5,000 in Crow Lake and 5,000 in Moira Lake.

Small-mouth black bass yearlings and adults—500 in Stoney Lake, and 100 each in Beaver, Belmont, Buckhorn, Chemong, Clear, Eel's, Jack's, Lovesick, Pencil, Round, Tongamong and White Lakes, and Indian River, with none of this size in Northumberland or Hastings Counties, but 100 in Rice Lake.

Brown trout—In Peterborough County 25,000 in Catchacoma, 25,000 in Eagle and 15,000 in Oak Lake, with none in Hastings or Northumberland Counties.

Speckled trout—229,000 were distributed in Peterborough County as follows: Best's Creek 15,000, Carver's Creek 27,000, Eel's Creek 50,000, Minnow Creek 3,000, Norwood Creek 25,000, Ouse River 75,000, Plateau Creek 10,000, Scott's or Segwick's Creek 5,000, Swamp Lake 10,000.

Lake trout—15,000 in Belmont Lake and 10,000 in Tongamong Lake.

In addition to the fish, large numbers of ring-neck pheasants were placed in the Crown game preserve and in various other parts of the county, and a consignment of Hungarian partridge released on Holbrook's mountain east of Havelock.

In all, 7,211,041 speckled trout in various stages, were placed in Provincial waters, while the grand total of all species distributed amounted to the amazing number of 441,325,324.

The revenue from all sources amounted to $571,657.35, and the expenditures totalled $530,722.18, leaving a surplus for the year of $40,935.17.

Guardsmen, Pickets And Bread Lines Feature Strike

Panorama of the nation-wide cotton textile strike in the United States. Oratory of leaders such as William E. G. Baity, of New Bedford, Mass., brought out 400,000 to 600,000 workers, National Guardsmen and bread lines. Strike will continue until workers' demands are met, or "war chests" amassed from payment of dues (see LEFT) are exhausted. Meanwhile stocks of hundreds of textile plants are smokeless (see ABOVE), and scores of other industries are being affected to the extent of $1,000,000 a day.

CASH PROPOSED BY BARRISTERS FOR KIDNAPPING

F. D. Kerr, K.C., Opposed Recommendation of Life Imprisonment at Montreal.

WOULD DETER JURIES.

MONTREAL, Sept. 6 (C.P.). — A motion recommending judges be empowered to give lashes in cases of kidnapping where the sentence is not more than five years was adopted by the Canadian Bar Association at its annual meeting here to-day.

Suggestions that the funds of people abducted and their relatives be sequestrated by the Crown, made in a speech by Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Attorney-General of Ontario, were not approved by a majority of the members after a long debate.

E. J. Murphy, K.C., Toronto, declared kidnapping was the act of a brutal man and that individuals should just be packed away. The danger of preventing ransom was that if it was not paid the kidnappers would probably do away with the victim for to men like Dillinger and those semi-madmen a life meant nothing when they wanted to protect themselves.

The question of kidnapping came before the association when the report of its committee on administration of criminal justice was being considered. The committee recommended that the punishment for kidnappers should be life imprisonment.

There was almost unanimous agreement among the members that such a proposal should not be adopted, and by a considerable majority the members voted recommending judges be given the power to impose lashes when the sentence

Misplaced Pity

READING, Pa., Sept. 6 (CP) —Police pitied a tattered, old man they found sleeping on the park benches. They let him sleep, then raised $2 to buy him shoes.

When again found in the park, he was sent to City Hall. There he gave his name as Edward Heffner, 60, no address.

When police searched him they found: $53.50 in gold; $280 in paper money; $100 in Liberty bonds; two gold watches, and savings account bank books showing $10,000 in deposits.

HEPBURN CUTS AT DR. SHIELDS

Charges Toronto Temperance Campaigner With Being Sensationalist.

SEEKING MONEY.

TORONTO, Sept. 6—(CP)—There will be no general referendum in Ontario on the question of prohibiting the legalized sale of beer, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today, adding that any municipality could vote its self dry.

The premier's declaration came when reference was made to Dr. T. T. Shields, pastor of Jarvis Street Baptist Church, Toronto, who has launched a campaign against Ontario's new beer regulations.

"Mr. Shields is on the wrong track," the premier said, adding that the pastor, if he wished, could go into a municipality and launch a temperance campaign to induce the section to petition for a vote on the beer issue.

"In the two recent provincial by-elections, particularly in Guelph," said the premier, "beer and wine were the main issues, and in Guelph we got 6,000 majority," he stated he holds no brief for the brewers or the extreme drys.

Mr. Hepburn charged Dr. Shields with being a "sensationalist apparently trying to make a little money; the whole gist of his speech the other night was an appeal for money."

Fine Mother, Son $25 For Church Rumpus

TORONTO, Sept. 6. (CP).—Mrs. Josephine Dale and her son, Leslie, pleaded guilty in police court to-day to a charge of disturbing a church service and were fined $25 and costs, or 10 days' imprisonment.

The Dales were arrested last Sunday night after allegedly interrupting a service conducted by Dr. T. T. Shields in Jarvis Street Baptist Church. The pastor attacked new beer and wine regulations in Ontario.

MURDER CHARGE FACES RUSSIAN FROM MANVERS

Dymtro Bolejozuk, Murdered Man's Rival in Love, is Formally Indicted at Cobourg.

POLICE COLLECT EVIDENCE

COBURG, Sept. 6. (Special to The Examiner)—A charge of murder against Dymtro Bolejczuk, the Russian farm hand being held at Cobourg, was laid to-day by Provincial Constable W. Smith of Bowmanville. He was remanded by Magistrate W. Campbell until September 24. The accused is charged that on July 29 he killed Peter Rogouskie, Lithuanian carpenter and farm hand in Manvers township.

The body of the slain man was found in a trout stream on the fifth concession of Manvers, near the farm of John Fallis, more than three weeks after he had disappeared.

Bolejczuk was arrested by Constable Smith on August 22 on the banks of the creek immediately after the finding of the murdered man's body. At the request of police he had been active with other searchers along the creek in seeking for Rogouskie.

The accused and the murdered, evidence at the inquest in Bethany on Tuesday disclosed, were rivals for the hand of Olive Romanic, 16, daughter of Michael Romanic, Rogouskie's employer. Evidence was given that Rogouskie had stated a few hours before his death that Bolejczuk did not like his attentions to the girl and had threatened to beat him up.

Rope, similarly to that used in strangling Rogouskie before his murderer buried his still living body in the creek, were found at the farm of Bill Serehenwick where Bolejczuk was employed. Serehenwick said at the inquest that one of these pieces of rope had been missing for some weeks from the place.

Bolejczuk, The Examiner is informed, stoutly denies any part in the murder. He admits his love for Olive Romanic and his jealousy of Rogouskie, but denies that he was even near the creek on the night of the murder.

Signet rings are being worn over gloves by engaged girls of London.

LABATT KIDNAP GANG'S HIDEOUT FOUND IN NORTH

Wealthy Brewer Held in Shack 10 Miles From Bracebridge 3 Days.

ON SHORE MUSKOKA LAKE.

Cabin's Owner Describes Trio Who Rented It as Being From Flint, Michigan.

BRACEBRIDGE, Ont., Sept. 6 (CP)—Search for the kidnappers of John S. Labatt took on renewed activity to-day with revelation the wealthy London, Ont., brewer was held for three days in a shack on the shores of Lake Muskoka before his release on the outskirts of Toronto.

The little summer cottage, 10 miles northwest of Bracebridge, was rented to three men last Aug. 4 by Horace Prowse of Leonard Lake, Prowse said the men told him they came from Flint, Mich. Investigations under Chief Inspector John Miller of the Provincial force led officials to conclude definitely the three-room shack was the kidnappers' hideout.

Prowse said to-day the deal was closed on Aug. 5, the men paying $50 and taking the cottage for the rest of the season. Labatt was abducted Aug. 14 while travelling on a lonely stretch of road between Sarnia and London.

"The men seemed to be well dressed, typical business-like tourists," said Prowse. "They came in a car with Michigan license plates and said they came from Flint. They were around 40 years of age, and disappeared on the Thursday night Labatt was kidnapped.

"I had spoken to them and so had their neighbor, a Mr. Crews, whose cottage was adjacent to theirs. I did not see anything of them after they went into my cottage.

"The first deposit they paid was after they had told me they wanted the cottage for several weeks. They paid $25, a Canadian $10 bill, two American fives, and a Canadian

IL DUCE OPENS LEVANTINE FAIR

Get Disagreeable Surprise on Finding Germany, Yugoslavia Exhibits Absent.

WARM FRENCH WELCOME.

BARI, Italy, Sept. 6. (AP). — Premier Mussolini, escorted to this southern port by warships, to-day opened the celebrated Levantine Fair and started a vigorous Italian drive to captue Asiatic markets.

A hundred thousand persons cheered enthusiastically and in the harbor three destroyers and a scruiser boomed salutes as Il Duce inaugurated the elaborate exposition. He proceeded to the fair grounds with an escort of thousands of soldiers and black-shirted militia.

While making an inspection tour Mussolini received two disagreeable surprises. He found the gates of the German pavilion closed and a few moments later discovered that Yugoslavia also had failed to send exhibits. Officials explained that both countries, after arranging to be represented, had changed their minds at the last minute.

But Mussolini received a warm welcome at the French pavilion, where a special parliamentary delegation from Paris awaited him. Edouard Soulier, vice-president of the Foreign Affairs Commission of the French Chamber of Deputies, made an address in which he expressed a hope for more intimate and friendly relations between Italy and France.

Your Evening Smile

THAT'S SOMETHING

"What can you get out of your car?" asked the single man.

The married man frowned.

"Usually a dozen or so women's handkerchiefs, the baby's toys, my eldest daughter's lipstick, somebody else's tennis racket, and a couple of dozen letters I'd forgotten to mail for the wife."

41 Are Wounded And 63 Arrested In First Three Days

Six Of Victims Die At Honea Path In Battle Between Workers And "Flying Squadron" Seeking To Prevent Mills From Opening.

SHOOTINGS AND VIOLENCE SPREAD FAST, RIOTS OCCUR AS MANY INSIST ON WORKING.

(By the Associated Press)

Ten dead, 41 injured and 63 arrests — such was the record today shortly after the general strike in the United States textile industry had entered its third effective day. Union leaders were exerting pressure through pickets and "flying squadrons" to close mills not yet shut down.

Seven persons were known to be dead in South Carolina. At least six were killed at Honea Path in a battle between workers and a "flying squadron" seeking to prevent the Chiquola Mills from opening.

A striker was shot six times and killed at Greenville, S. C., in friction between strikers and police officers guarding the Dunean Mills.

A man, said to be a striker, died today at Augusta, Ga., of wounds received yesterday when a trapped policeman shot his way out of a crowd of pickets.

A deputy sheriff and a striker were killed late yesterday in a gun fight between officers and strikers at the Trion Cotton Mill at Trion, Ga.

Efforts of strike leaders to shut down mills now operating met resistance from employees intent on working.

Guards On Duty

At Dighton, Mass., a delegation of more than 300 workers from Fall River, Mass., seeking to picket the plant of the Mount Hope Finishing Co., were turned back by armed guards stationed behind piles of sand on either side of roads entering the town.

The mills of the Riverside and Dan River Cotton Company at Danville, Va., centre of Virginia's textile industry as yet unaffected by the strike, opened without incident after an all-night vigil by more than 100 armed police and civilian deputies.

A "flying squadron" of pickets battled police at Warren, R.I., today to free a strike leader from police custody. State Troopers were called to disperse a crowd, said to number 2,000, with clubs and tear gas.

The trouble in the Carolinas today added to the list of injured. Others were injured yesterday in the Carolinas and Georgia.

Arrests were made yesterday in Georgia, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Oregon.

The strike spread swiftly yesterday, attended by growing strife resulting in two deaths, injuries in two score persons and increased tension in all textile areas. Many more mills closed down completely and there were indications others would follow suit to-day.

50 Per Cent. Effective

Approximately 236,000 workers had joined the movement as the strike entered its fourth day, an Associated Press survey showed. This would indicate the walkout was approximately 50 per cent effective over the entire cotton, woollen and silk industry, which normally employs in the neighborhood of 650,000 workers. The independent figure was challenged by both union leaders and manufacturers. The strike leads asserted the number of workers now on strike had reached 450,000. Employers, although making no estimates of the number idle, contended the total was less by far.

Strike leaders continued their drive to close more plants and more workers to the walkout. New groups of "flying squadrons" were organized to line up operatives still working. New England leaders planned to intensify their picketing against Rhode Island and Massachusetts mills. Activity of picketing groups groups continued in the Southern continued in the Southern areas.

The Board

The Board of Inquiry named by President Roosevelt at Hyde Park yesterday, comprises Governor John G. Winant of New Hampshire, Raymond C. Ingersoll, borough president of Brooklyn, and Marion Smith, Atlanta attorney and son of the late Home Smith, former United States senator and governor.

The board is directed to inquire into the complaints of the textile workers and into the problems of the employers, and to "consider ways and means of meeting said problems and complaints." It is directed to report to the Secretary of Labor not later than October 1.

TWO EVICTIONS LEAVE FAMILIES WITHOUT HOMES

Household Effects on Hunter Street Attracted Crowd to Scene.

CAN'T PAY RENT.

With no lodging in which to take refuge, two local families were in the streets seeking homes to-day. They are the families of Wesley Lawford and William McIlwaine, evicted from their homes at 226 Hunter Street West and 249 Princess Street by the bailiff yesterday. Both were without shelter during the night.

The eviction of the Lawford family has been pending almost two months. A notice ordering removal was served on Lawford on July 13. Late in August, the home was placarded as unfit for human habitation by the Board of Health, but the family still refused to evacuate the premises. With Sergeant William Wigg of the Police Department in attendance, a bailiff supervised the removal of the household effects yesterday.

An orderly crowd of unemployed sympathizers stood about as the effects were piled in the street gutter opposite the house. Placards reading, "This is How Peterborough's Unemployed is Used" and "Peterborough—Liberty—Humanity" were fixed to the pile, but no show of violence was made. The doors and windows of the house were boarded over by health authorities and a warning sign indicating that the premises are to be fumigated placed on the front door.

Lawford, his wife and three children, Bobbie, aged 1 year and 9 months, Harry, 8 years of age, and Grace, 10, remained on the scene throughout the day and evening. Coffee and sandwiches were brought to them by sympathetic persons in the neighborhood. Late in the evening, the two older children were taken to the home of a brother of Mrs. Lawford, and, after midnight,

France and Italy Turn Against Nazi Germany

AIM TO PREVENT FORMER ENEMY FROM REARMING

Two Nations Also Arrive at Complete Agreement on Austrian Independence.

AT LEVANTINE FAIR.

Italy Rumored Agreeable to Renounce Her Re-armament Policy.

BARI, Italy, Sept. 6 (AP) —Italy and France have reached an accord for common action to prevent the rearmament of Germany it was stated here to-day by French delegates to the Levantine Fair.

It was also stated that the nations have come to a complete agreement on the question of Austrian independence, and have pledged themselves to take common action against the Nazis.

French sources said that another phase of the agreement is that Italy renounces new rearmament policy.

It was added that Italy will join France in her fight to keep German armaments at the level prescribed by the Treaty of Versailles. It was pointed out, however, that this was not to be interpreted as a renunciation of an Italian impression that the peace treaty could be revised.

LICENSE PERMIT SUSPENSIONS UP SINCE NEW LAW

List of 79 Posted by Department of Highways at Queen's Park.

IN 6 WEEKS OF BEER SALE.

TORONTO, Sept. 6. — Seventy-nine suspensions of motor operating and car licenses have been posted officially by the Department of Highways at Queen's Park since beverage room sale of beer began operation in Ontario.

This number, according to departmental officials, represents "a marked increase" over suspensions of pre-beer days, and may even be increased when all returns from outside magisterial points are in.

For the week ending July 28, 18 suspension were reported; Aug. 4, thirteen; Aug. 11, eight; Aug. 18, fourteen; Aug. 25, fifteen, and Sept. 1, eleven. During the week ending July 21—just before beer sale began—there were 11 suspensions. Between June 23 and July 14, only nine suspensions all told were reported.

For the first six months of 1934 this class of suspension is listed by the highways department as follows: January, 22; February, 11; March, 15; April, 36; May, 26, and June, 22. In 1933, the figures were: January, 22; February, 11; March, 20; April, 14; May, 15; June, 46; July, 32; August, 46; September, 62; October, 38; November, 26, and December, 18.

"War" Of Prosperity In New Ford Steel Mills?

Some see the return of prosperity, others see a "war" in the offing as Henry Ford announces that he will build his own steel mills. Four days after Tom Girdler, new steel titan announced formation of a new $323,000,000 steel combine by the merger of three large steel companies, Ford announced that he would spend between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000 to build his own steel mills so that he could be independent of that industry. Girdler, by merging his Republic Steel corporation with the Corrigan-McKinney interests and the Truscon Steel company gained control of an outlet for the steel that Republic produces. Ford's plan was equally strategic and almost a parallel move, though in the opposite direction. The automobile magnate controlled his outlets and now he will control his supply sources. It is almost inevitable, according to well-informed leaders in financial and banking circles, that other large steel companies will follow the lead and that other automobile companies will scurry to protect their steel sources with trade alliances if not with actual consolidations. The visit of Charles Schwab, president of the American Steel and Iron Institute, to Cleveland at the time of the new Republic merger also started rumors flying that Bethlehem might be seeking an alliance with Republic. Schwab is also chairman of the board of Bethlehem.

NAZIS WORKERS 50,000 STRONG TO STAGE MARCH

Fifty Special Trains Bring Army From All Parts of Reich.

COMPULSORY SERVICE.

(By Louis P. Lochner—A.P. Foreign Staff).

NURNBERG, Germany, Sept. 6.—(AP)—Another spectacle of Nazism a mobilization of 50,000 workers in Germany's compulsory labor camps, was in store for delegates to the National Socialist Party convention to-day.

With Adolf Hitler's party proclamation and his promise of an artistic millenium out of the way, delegates looked forward to a parade of the young men who inhabit the camps.

Fifty special trains brought the workers from all parts of the Reich. Each youth carried a spade, symbol of his activity for country and the ideals of Nazism.

The 50,000 were ordered to stand at attention while Der Fuehrer delivered a special message. Later they were to file past him in a march that was expected to last two hours.

Under the Nazi regime no young man need expect any kind of a government job, or even a college diploma, unless he has served in a labor camp.

The addition of the labor camp demonstration to the convention program relegated even further to the background the place of women in the party conclave.

The Jewish Question.

Evidence that anti-semitism remains a cardinal point of Nazi philosophy was seen to-day not only in allusions of Hitler and other speakers to the Jewish question, but also in the official convention program, copies of which were sold by the hundreds of thousands.

A foreword in the program, written by Julius Streicher, Nazi leader of the Franconia and editor of the anti-Semitic Sturmer, states:

"Without a solution of the Jewish question there is no salvation for the German people."

Hitler addressed himself to the quetion yesterday at a gathering of Nazi culture section of the convention.

"Jewish intellectualism, penetrating Europe, resulted in a completely inconsistent attitude toward cultural problems," he asserted. "The spiritual confusion began in the middle ages when classic art was plundered and mechanically copied."

Hepburn Game

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 6 (CP) Joseph Brown, London, auctioneer and checker player of repute, has invented what he calls 'The Hepburn game' "because of the way it cleans men off the board." He said he could "give two counters and clean off six, and with that description it just had to be Hepburns game."

Mr. Croll said the Deputy will serve as intermediary between bankrupt municipalities and the government, and will advise the municipalities in their efforts to regain a solid financial footing.

NOEL COWARD NOTED ACTOR SHIPWRECKED

Yacht Founders in Storm With All Belongings Off Isle Near Corsica.

CABLE ASKS CASH.

LONDON, Sept. 6 (AP) — Noel Coward, the modern actor-playwright, is in a good old-fashioned situation, his friends heard to-day —shipwrecked on a Mediterranean isle, near Corsica.

Coward was on the shore when a sudden storm, Saturday, drove the little vessel against rocks. As the cabins flooded, members of the crew sprang into the swirling water and fought their way to shore.

All of Coward's clothing, his money and his papers were on the yacht. He walked along the coast for 20 miles, finally reaching this community. He persuaded a hotel proprietor to cable to his friends in London.

Coward's London associates sent him money and arranged to have him enter France without a passport. The playwright plans to leave here to-day for Nice, from where he will go to Paris.

Coward was cruising aboard the yacht Mairi, which he had chartered from Claude Graham-White, sportsman and aviator. Graham-White says he has not heard from the crew.

Chimpanzees React Similar To Children

NEW YORK, Sept. 6 (C.P.). — The American Psychological Association to-day studied a report which said "chimpansees reaction times do not vary significantly nor consistently from those of human children."

The report was made by Milton Sinclair, of the Yale University staff, following lengthy tests conducted with four chimpanzees bred at the university, and two children provided by members of the faculty.

The experiment consisted of measuring the time required for a young chimpansee and for a child to respond to a spectacle, a contact or a sound by pressing down a telegraph key.

MAKING HAY WHILE SUN SHINES MEANS INFERIOR FOOD FOR STOCK

Leading Scientists Claim Artificial Drying is Best Method of Conservation.

LITTLE STARCH LOST.

ABERDEEN, Scotland, Sept. 6 (AP)—"Making hay while the sun shines" is poor conservation, leading to inferior food for animals and indirectly to loss of richness in human diet.

Why the old maxim does not work was explained to the British Association for the Advancement of Science to-day by H. J. Page and Dr. S. J. Watson. Sunshine when it is used to dry hay destroys a "surprisingly large" volume of its food properties.

Forty to fifty per cent of the starch equivalent in the fresh grass," they said, "is lost and even under ideal conditions the loss may be 33 per cent."

Artificial drying, they said, is the ideal method of fodder conservation. This agrees with studies made recently by dairy chemists who substituted artificial "weather" for sunshine.

Using the Neutron

Use of the swift, electrically neutral neutron for bombarding matter has made no element safe from disintegration. The neutron, because it can approach the nucleus of a target without being impeded by an electric charge, was likened by Prof. T. Martin Lowry, of Cambridge University, to aircraft attacking a battleship.

"It can therefore score direct hits," Prof. Lowry said, "which are found to have a devastating effect even on the stoutest nuclei. As a result of the introduction of this new projectile, no element can now be regarded as safe from disintegration."

In reviewing the development of chemistry in Great Britain during the past year, Prof. Lowry said, "I must place in the forefront the political events which have turned so many of our most welcome visitors into residents." He referred to the scientists who have been driven from their native countries.

"It is impossible as yet to appreciate fully the contribution thus made to the advancement of science in this country," he said.

Hopes He Loses

CINCINNATI, Sept. 6. (CP). There's one law suit Charles F. Williams hopes he loses.

It is that of a New York art gallery, appealed to the Supreme Court there, to compel him to pay $18,000 for a picture which the gallery contends is a genuine Van Dyck, but about which Williams has his doubts. The authenticity of the picture is something for the court to decide.

"It's a case of I hope I lose," Williams said to-day. "for if the picture is proven a true Van Dyck, I will gladly pay the money asked and give it a place of honor in my collection."

BANDIT SHOT, GUNS COMPEL HOSPITAL AID

Boy Leader of Chicago Gang Falls in Raid—Identified by Eight Victims.

CRIME RECORD LONG

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—Riddled by shotgun slugs during his ninth robbery within a few hours, 16-year-old Howard Allen, a hardened criminal despite his youth, died yesterday after two companions had forced his acceptance in the North Avenue Hospital at the point of guns.

The boy bandit leader was shot by Alex. Speros, chef in James Vitus' restaurant at 1947 Fullerton avenue. The chef dropped young Allen with a shot from the kitchen as the youth kicked and abused Vitus, angry because the proprietor was slow in opening the safe.

Dragged Away by Pals.

Though mortally wounded, Allen fired back at the chef, then fell. His companions dragged him out of the place. They forced two attaches to carry him into the hospital, then fled.

Dr. J. E. Verhaag decided an operation to save him would be futile. The boy was taken to the Bridewell Hospital, where he died.

Eight robbery victims of Sunday night named him, after viewing the body, as having directed two other youths in taking $175 in cash and jewelry from them.

Released From St. Charles.

Allen was released a year ago from the St. Charles Reformatory after serving nine months on fifty-two robbery charges.

Frank McHugh was a stage manager at seventeen—a record for the show business.

NAME IS SECRET TILL LAUNCHING

Queen Mary to Officiate When Great Liner Takes Water at Clyeside.

GLASGOW, Scotland, Sept. 6 (CP)—Even Queen Mary may not know the name of the "534" until she launches and christens the great Cunard liner on Sept. 26. Strict secrecy is being maintained as to the name of the potential record-breaker of the seas.

Such a course is unprecedented in the history of shipbuilding on the Clyde, but "534" is herself unprecedented, The News Chronicle points out. The biggest and fastest passenger ship in the world—she will also be the first merchant ship to be launched by a Queen of England.

Six enormous "triggers," now almost complete, will hold the ship just before the launching. Then, when the Queen presses a button, the triggers will be released, and "534" will slide into the water.

There is a special reason for selecting 3.15 p.m. as the time for the ceremony. It has been calculated, almost to a fraction of a minute, that the tide will then be most favorable.

The King will also be present and it will be a gala day on Clydeside.

SUN LIFE STAFF DINNER MEETING

Delightful Event in Two Days' Educational Conference.

MANY AGENCY LEADERS

A dinner meeting which included a bridge and dance at the Kawartha Golf and Country Club last evening was one of the highlights of the two-day sessions of an educational conference held by the Central Ontario Agency of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, which concluded today.

Over fifty representatives of the agency and their ladies as well as head office officials, attended the unique social function, the first held by the company in this district in four years. N. J. Wootten, manager of Peterborough district agency presided. Other officials included F. J. Cunningham, assistant actuary; Victor B. Harris, assistant superintendent of agencies; and Roland Woods, field service bureau, all of Montreal.

At the business sessions, according to Mr. Wootten, the agents heard optimistic and encouraging reports of increased business for the company in the Central Ontario district, and participated in discussions on various phases of life insurance underwriting that were designed to be helpful and inspiring.

At the dinner meeting Mr. Wootten referred to a contest among representatives of the agency for cash bonuses, and spoke also of the inter-agency contest for the J. C. Stanton Silver Trophy, which is to be awarded to one of the twenty-seven branches in the Dominion making the best all-around showing for the present year. He urged the representatives of the Peterborough agency to strive hard to bring the honor to their district.

Among outstanding representatives in this district Mr. Wootten mentioned the names of J. F. Hinchey of Belleville and C. J. Ray of Peterborough. Both are members of the "Macaulay Club," which is considered a mark of success in the business of life insurance underwriting.

George Broadley and his orchestra provided dinner music and also played for dancing afterwards.

Representatives of the company present at the dinner were as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Preston, Bowmanville; Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Gardner, Port Hope; Mr. and Mrs. A.S. Ross, Oshawa; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Roe, Beaverton; Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Sleep, Lindsay; Mr. and Mrs. G. MUST OPEN TOMB ONCE EACH YEAR

Annual Rite in English Town in Accord with Woman's Bequest 141 Years Ago.

SUTTON, England, Sept. 6.—(C.P.)—Following an annual practice of 140 years a family tomb has again been re-opened in this Surrey town. Exactly 141 years ago Mrs. Mary Gibson, whose parents were buried in a vault, made certain bequests to the rector and church wardens of Sutton Parish Church on condition that the Gibson family vault should be opened and inspected each year in August.

This year the assistant priest, Dr. T. W. Crafor, entered the vault, inspected the four coffins, and offered up a short prayer. Then the vault, which was made in 1777, was sealed up for another year. In Mrs. Gibson's will there is an instruction that when the last member of the family is buried in the tomb the keys shall be thrown into the River Jordan.

At the time of Mrs. Gibson's death body-snatchers were active, and it is generally thought that the reason for the yearly inspection is to make sure that the vault has not been tampered with. A legend which has long been associated with the tomb states that it is opened each year in order that a toad which has made its home there might be fed, but there is no evidence to be found in support of this.

Having forgotten her purse, Mrs. R. Williams of Ogmore, Wales, hurried home to get it and arrived just in time to save her two-year-old son from drowning in the kitchen sink.

OLD FIRE BELL GIFT TO CHURCH

Presented by Council to St. Peter's-on-the-Rock, Stoney Lake.

LONG IN DISUSE

A weighty, old cast iron bell whose thrsty notes summoned Peterborough's volunteer fire fighters to the battle in the town's younger days during the last century is to go into service once again after more than thirty years' idleness. The City Council has voted to present the relic to the congregation of St. Peter's-on-the-Rock, a little Anglican church on Stoney Lake.

Efforts to unearth an authoritative history of the bell have been unavailing. It is believed to have been the city's first fire bell, suspended in the original market building close to the corner of George and Charlotte streets. For some reason, the town fathers dismounted the heavy device about the turn of the century and since that time it has been out of use. As the bell itself is in excellent condition, it must have been the need for a heavier bell which caused its discard.

For more than twenty years, the bell rested half-buried on the premises at the rear of the B. F. Ackerman Company on George street. During Old Home Week in 1929 it was retrieved and dressed up somewhat, paraded about the city on a float. For want of a more appropriate resting place since that occasion, it has lain in the back yard at 531 Chamberlain street, the property of George Sloan, up to the present.

The old instrument, weighing about 200 pounds, bears no inscription or date. It is of plain cast iron, bearing not even the name of its maker. The bell itself and the clapper are both in perfect condition but equipment for its suspension and operation will be required before it is put into commission again.

Cottagers who make up the congregation at St. Peter's-on-the-Rock have been seeking a bell for their picturesque little church building for some time. Their desire is to have a bell not only for the regular church uses but also to serve as an alarm in time of fire at Stoney Lake. Situated on what is known as "The Devil's Elbow" close by "Hell's Gate," the church building enjoys a central location suited to such a requirement.

A letter asking for the bell was received by the Council at its meeting this week from W. C. Ackerman, a summer resident at the lake. The aldermen agreed unanimously on making the gift.

Weddings

LACEY—BLANCHARD

An early September wedding took place at St. John's Catholic church, Kirkfield, Monday morning at 10 o'clock, when Marian Alexandrine, eldest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Blanchard, Lindsay was married to Allan Tasker Lacey, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Lacey of Pembroke. The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Adolphe Blanchard of Toronto, wore a becoming tweed travelling suit with fur trimmings and French felt hat. Attending her as bridesmaid was her sister, Miss Camille Blanchard, wearing a pretty costume of green and grey plaid, with green corduroy fitted coat and grey velour hat. Mr. Redmond Mulligan of Toronto acted as groomsman. The bride's cousin, Rev. Father Vincent Gillogly of Kirkfield conducted the marriage ceremony. The wedding music was played by Miss Ruth Shannon, and during the signing of the register, Mrs. Edgar Burns sang. Following the marriage a small informal reception was held for the immediate relatives and friends at Kirkfield Lodge. Later Mr. and Mrs. Lacey left on a motor trip through the Eastern States.

MURPHY—O'LEARY

St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, Lindsay, was the scene of an attractive early autumn wedding at seven-thirty o'clock on Monday morning when Miss Mary Nora O'Leary, Fern avenue, Toronto, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John O'Leary, 3 Glenelg street, Lindsay, was married to Mr. Gerard James Murphy, Atlas street, Toronto, son of Mr. Patrick Murphy and the late Mrs. Murphy, Pencion road, Lindsay, Rt. Rev. Mons. McColl officiated. Asters and gladioli in shades of white and gold were used to adorn the church and they were intermingled with palms. Miss Ruth Shannon, of Lindsay, played the wedding music and Miss Helen Shannon, of Lindsay, sang "O Salutaris Hostes" during the nuptial mass and "Ave Maria" at the signing of the register.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked charming in a lovely gown of powdered blue suede lace, made on long form-fitting lines with short net puffed sleeves, massive rows of frills encircling the frock from the knees. With this she wore a blue velvet turban, long white gloves and blue shoes and carried a shower bouquet of pink rose, baby's breath and lily of the valley. Her sister, Miss Veronica O'Leary, as bridesmaid, was pretty in white mousseline de soie over pink taffeta made on long fitted lines with tight fitting bodice and shoulder cape. She wore a pink, close-fitting turban, long white gloves and white shoes, and carried an arm bouquet of Ophelia roses. Mr. Adrian Murphy, of Lindsay, the groom's brother, was best man and the ushers were Dr. Austin J. O'Leary, of New York City, brother of the bride, and Mr. Basil Murphy, of Lindsay, brother of the groom.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the Olde Cottage Tea Rooms for members of the immediate family and relatives. Mrs. O'Leary, the mother of the bride, gowned in blue powdered crepe with black picture hat and corsage of Talisman roses, received with the bridal party. Later the bride and groom left on a motor trip to Montreal, Quebec, and Ste. Anne de Beaupre, the bride going away in a smart navy blue costume with white hat and accessories. On their return they will live on Vaughan road in Toronto.

POINTS PROGRESS IN DOCTOR TOOLS

Toronto Academy Gather Valuable Collection of Data and Equipment.

TORONTO, Sept. 6.—(CP).—As a Toronto Centennial feature, the Toronto Academy of Medicine this year collected and exhibited much data and equipment relating to the study and practice of medicine many years ago.

The exhibit, which is destined to be a valued historical contribution, includes the Osler collection of medical portraits and an assortment of early surgical instruments. Dr. Henry Grassett's military field set of surgical instruments used when he was a surgeon with the 48th Foot in 1797 and again in 1812 together with some mortars and pestles used by early Toronto medical practitioners are also in the display.

Saddle bags, used by country doctors, with their attached leather medicine cases; leech jars, colored rose and gold, one being of Wedgewood china; feeding bottles of Wedgewood and old delft china are also among the valued antiques in the collection. There is also a majolica jar from a chemist's shop, dated 1750.

The Osler collection includes an antique desk from the home of Sir William Osler's teacher, W. A. Johnston of Weston, Ont., to whom the eminent physician dedicated his work "Principles and Practice of Medicine."

A letter dated in 1824, written by the celebrated Dr. John Rolph to Colonel Talbot at the Talbot Settlement tells of the founding of the first medical school in the territory west of Montreal. A dental exhibit is included in the display.

THE NEW BEER LAW.

Judging from the volume of complaints in regard to the new beer legislation that is coming from many sections of Ontario, the protests cannot be dismissed as being due to "temperance cranks," to use Mr. Hepburn's phrase.

There are two major objections.

In the first place, it is charged that there has not been adequate investigation of applications for licenses, and that these have been granted in many cases in connection with premises that bear little resemblance to the common conception of what constitutes a standard hotel.

It is alleged that some successful applicants have made a pretence of running a hotel by renting a few rooms above a store, and that licenses have been granted to road-houses and tourist camps.

The second complaint is that there has been nothing as yet done to provide supervision of the working out of the beer legislation, and that this failure to appoint inspectors has resulted in flagrant abuses, selling to minors, permitting drunkenness and other conditions that have already brought the new law into disfavor among many persons who could not by any stretch of the imagination be accurately described as temperance "fanatics."

The element of control has apparently been neglected during the providing of outlets for sale, and the results are seen in an increase in the number of drunken drivers and in the long line up in police courts of persons charged with intoxication.

Toronto had 67 cases in one morning this week, the accused ranging in age from 18 to 74 years, while in our local police court Magistrate Langley has increased the fine for drunkenness to $15 in an effort to stamp out the evil.

THE REAL HEROES.

The Kitchener News-Record remarked a short time ago that if there have been any heroes created during these years of depression surely they are those who have fought to stay on their feet against heavy odds, while at the same time contributing through their taxes to those who have gone down into destitution.

There are many in this category in Peterborough, heads of families who, although out of work or employed only part time, have managed to keep off relief, pay their taxes and fight on in the face of a situation that would have dismayed men of less courage.

Most of these citizens must be close to the limit of their resources, and the plight should not be overlooked in any works program that may be inaugurated.

Granted that men on relief must be cared for, it seems to The Examiner that others who have managed up to the present time to remain independent and to maintain themselves and their families without assistance from the public funds are entitled to sympathetic consideration and to share in any employment scheme launched to relieve the situation.

Their heroic struggle has apparently passed unnoticed, and it is about time that some thought was given to the type of citizen who rather than go on relief has used up all his reserves; as the Kitchener paper expresses it, surely if any one is entitled to consideration it is the man who has hung on and done his part in spite of seemingly interminable workless days.

THE MOTORIST PAYS.

There seems no reason to doubt that the motorist pays—and pays and pays.

According to recent calculations, United States car-owners in the last fiscal year contributed 300 million dollars in federal taxes and roughly about 902 millions in state and local taxes, these figures including gasoline tax, licenses, etc.

In other words, the motorists south of the international line paid in automobile taxes last year the amazing total of $1,241,000,000.

And when it is sought to justify this tremendous levy by stating that owners of motor vehicles gain in return by Government subsidy of roads, it is well to remember that, according to those in position to speak authoritatively, road construction and road maintenance in the United States may be liberally estimated at $650 millions and $200 millions, respectively.

In other words, road expenditures are running some 300 million dollars behind the taxes by motor car owners.

In our own province the situation is much the same as in the United States.

According to figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ontario motorists have in the last six years paid over $100,000,000 into the provincial treasury in gasoline tax and registration fees, and while these taxes were supposed to pay for road construction, most of them went into the general provincial revenues and were used for other purposes, while the highway bills have yet to be paid.

EMPLOYMENT INCREASES

Employment figures showing the situation in Canada on August 1 of this year are perhaps the most encouraging that have yet been published, for they reveal the fact that the employment index for the whole country on that state stood at almost 100 as against 87 twelve months previously and better than the figure on that date in any year since 1930.

Ontario's index was, it must be admitted, lower on August 1 than it was on July 1, but this is accounted for by the fact that many of the men who had been put to work on the provincial highways prior to the election were afterwards dismissed as an economy measure by the Hepburn Government.

Had these workers been retained it is altogether probable that Ontario would have reported an increase, as it is apparent that slowly but in the main steadily industry has been taking up the slack of unemployment.

The figures for the different provinces, comparing the situation on August 1 of this year with that prevailing on August 1 of 1933, leave no doubt of this fact.

The Maritimes report an index of 101.3 as against 93; Quebec's figure is 94.9, whereas the index a year ago was 94.3; Ontario showed 106 as contrasted with 96.6; the Prairie Provinces, 93 as against 90.5; and British Columbia, 97.6, considerably better than the 87.3 of twelve months ago.

The index for the whole of Canada was 99.9 as against 87.1, surely a substantial and gratifying increase that gives ground for optimism.

PUBLIC DEBTS COMPARED.

We are accustomed to regard Canada as laboring under a particularly oppressive burden of public indebtedness, and yet J. Courtland Elliott, economist attached to the staff of A. E. Ames & Co., is responsible for the statement that per capita indebtedness in this country is considerably lower than in various other British dominions and the Motherland itself.

In a recent survey of the debt situation in Canada, Mr. Elliott makes the following statement:

"We have become so accustomed in recent years to statements regarding the burden of our aggregate public indebtedness that it will doubtless come as a surprise to learn that per capita indebtedness in Canada is substantially below that in other British Dominions. I have looked up the debt figures of four dominions, converted them at par of exchange into Canadian dollars and obtained the following results: In comparison with the per capita Dominion, provincial and municipal debt figure of $497 for Canada, the per capita national debt in Great Britain (excluding all local public debts) is $830. In Australia, exclusive of municipal debts, the per capita commonwealth and states debt is $885. In New Zealand, including local public debts, it is $1,116. South Africa, excluding local public debts, has an indebtedness of $1,196,000,000 with a population of 8,370,000, of which only 1,890,300 are white. Using the latter figure, per capita indebtedness is $633. If local indebtedness were added, the per capita debt of Canadians would appear even more favorably."

In spite of this comparison which is so favorable to Canada, it ought to be remembered that it is distinctly in the interest of the taxpayer that public debt be kept down to the lowest possible level and that capital commitments leading to additional debt should be contracted very sparingly. Public debt is not something that may be conveniently contracted and just as conveniently forgotten. It represents an obligation which must be met by the public sooner or later and very rarely except through the medium of taxation.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

NOT THE CORRECT WAY.

It may be that people should by now have grown accustomed to reading of strange things in public life, but that Hepburn-Buchanan incident is a trifle hard to take without making a face. The Premier charged in an address in his own riding that Mr. Buchanan, ex-mayor of Ingersoll, and known as a Liberal, had been receiving money from the Hydro "slush fund" to the extent of $3,000 a year plus expenses. Mr. Buchanan threatened to take legal action in the matter, and a conference with Premier Hepburn seems to have brought a certain degree of understanding and to have established the fact that Mr. Buchanan acted in good faith.

The circumstances seem to be that Mr. Buchanan thought there was not enough connection between the Hydro Commission and the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association, and that some person should be going about the country bringing reports from the various local bodies to the headquarters. Mr. Buchanan offered his services for such a position, and finally it was decided that the Hydro Commission would take him on at $3,000 and expenses.

There was no formal announcement made of the appointment, although Mr. Buchanan had prepared one. At the end of the first month he was told to send his expense sheet to Mr. Hannigan at Guelph, Mr. Hannigan being secretary of the Municipal Electrical Association. For his wages he was to go to Alfred Maguire, one of the Hydro commissioners, and there he received his money in cash. That in itself is peculiar, as employees of government bodies do not receive their payments in cash. Mr. Buchanan protested several times and was finally informed that $5,000 had been voted by the Municipal Underwriters and given to Hydro for publicity purposes. Municipal Underwriters was a company which had been formed for placing the Hydro insurance.

One can understand that Mr. Buchanan was placed in a peculiar position. The payments he received were not coming through in the regular way and no official announcement had ever been made that he had received an appointment either with the Hydro Commission or with the Municipal Association.

The incident points to a general condition, and that general condition is that there has been too much closed-door atmosphere in the handling of Hydro affairs on the part of the Hydro Commission and on the part of the Ontario Electric Municipal Association. One comes across a similar situation in evidence which has been coming out at the Abitibi probe in Toronto where negotiations for the buying and selling of electrical energy by the Government are shown to have been so confused that there were leagues removed from the original policy of generating power and selling it at cost. The whole business should be conducted as openly as a public meeting where people are at liberty to go in and sit down and listen to the proceedings.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

The Attorney-General has added Mayor Robson of Guelph to the list of what he seems to regard as public enemies.

The number of drunks in Toronto police courts reached a new high on Tuesday. That is the kind of record that strengthens the opposition to the new beer law.

Labor leaders in the United States claim that the textile strike is a success. When the shouting and the tumult die, however, it will likely be found just the usual kind of strike where nobody wins.

No reports are at hand as to just how those recently sold Government cars are holding up in the hands of the new owners. Anyway that is no longer any concern of the taxpayers.

The Editor, The Examiner.
Dear sir:

As I am no longer connected with the Department of Game and Fisheries may I take this opportunity to thank you and your reporting and editorial staffs for the splendid support given me during my tenure of office as Game and Fisheries Overseer for this county, and particularly during recent weeks after my dismissal was announced.

The conservation of fish and game is, or should be, of much greater importance than the matter of who will occupy the none too lucrative positions of enforcement officers and I hope your paper will continue to use its influence to that end as in the past.

Yours faithfully,
F. C. MARSHALL,
Ex-Game and Fisheries Officer.

GRATEFUL TO THE PUBLIC

The Editor, The Examiner.
Sir:

May I crave your indulgence to the extent of granting space for the following. If granted, I promise not to let this become a habit:

To the Citizens of Peterborough City and County:

As I am no longer connected with the Department of Game and Fisheries, I wish to thank the public generally as well as the Peterborough and Lakefield Fish and Game Protective Associations and the Rotary, Kiwanis and Kinsmen's Clubs for the splendid support and co-operation given me during my term of office as Game and Fisheries Officer. May I ask you to continue your support and co-operation to whatever organization or individual continues the work I have been doing.

Yours faithfully,
F. C. MARSHALL,
Ex-Game and Fisheries Officer.

MR. BENNETT'S S.O.S.

To the Editor of The Examiner.
Sir:

Mr. Bennett's call for a union government will be mistaken by strong party men as the S.O.S. of a leader who sees defeat ahead. But let us brush all that aside. The country is in dire need and if by any means the financial and other dark problems gradually closing in on us can be solved let us all, leaders and led alike, rally to the rescue of a very serious situation.

People who would play party-politics under this consideration and, with the present situation are not doing well. If Mr. Bennett makes this offer, as the Mail and Empire persistently says, then the very least other people can do is to look into it and see if anything for the benefit of the country can be extracted from it. That is the difference between partyism and patriotism.

SHERBROOKE, NOVA SCOTIA.

This town, situated on the St. Mary's river, in the centre of a fine sport fishing district, came into prominence at the time of the discovery of gold, about 1860. A few miles away is the gold-bearing district of Goldenville.

Situated 127 miles from Halifax, it was named in honor of General Sir John Cope Sherbrooke, lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia from 1811 to 1816.

ALL OF US

(By Marshall Maslin.)

WHEN TO LIE.

I've an idea that man who just went down the street is annoyed with me.

He asked me something that wasn't mine to tell, something that wasn't his business to know. . . . So I lied and he knew I was lying. Because he knew that I knew what he wanted to know. And because he knew I was lying, he therefore knew that I didn't trust him enough to answer his question truthfully. . . . So he's angry with me, but somehow, I don't care. . . . What else could I do?

He wouldn't ask me for money, because he has money in his pocket now. He wouldn't ask me for advice, because he feels perfectly capable of taking care of himself. Then why should he ask me to tell himself something that doesn't belong to him and that he has no business to know? . . . You answer that question. I can't.

All I know is that he wouldn't have kept my answer to himself. He was so eager to know that I know what I told him would never have been hermetically sealed in his breast. . . . His pride or his eagerness to impress someone else would have forced him to spread abroad the little tag of information he sought from me. . . . I know about that because I would do the same thing.

We do not ask for confidences with any intention of keeping them. . . . Or even if we do, we are rarely able to keep our good resolutions. Somehow, a secret is never static. It stirs in our brains like a cat in a box. It ferments like new grape juice in a bottle. It bursts out like a jack in the box. It is dynamite bumping over a cobblestone road, hot lava boiling in a crater. The door of the cage opens and the cat leaps out with a scratch and a yowl. The bottle is shaken and the ferment foams all over the place. The dynamite explodes, the lava runs, smoking and flaming, down the mountain side; gabby mouth opens and the secret runs, like Wee Willie Winkie, all through the town, upstairs and down to the cellars and up through the garrets and out through the windows and over the housetops. . . . The spendthrift throws the money he borrowed from you all around, the man who asks you to tell him a secret broadcasts it like a sower in the field. . . . You'll have forgiveness in heaven for the lies you tell those who ask questions they have no right to ask.

ON THIS DATE

A DAY IN CANADIAN HISTORY

By Fred Williams

BIRTHDAY OF TWO "FATHERS"

On this date, separated by three years two of the most notable of the Fathers of Confederation were born. George Etienne Cartier in 1841 and Alexander Tilloch Galt in 1817. The former was born at St. Antoine on the Richelieu, the latter in Scotland. No two of the 'Fathers' were more unlike in character and upbringing, yet both were animated by the same determination to make Canada a great country under the British crown.

Galt was one of the most enthusiastic advocates of a union of the provinces preaching the gospel for many years before it became a practical issue.

Cartier had taken up arms in '37 at St. Denis and St. Charles but came back after the amnesty to begin a career which made him the leader of the Province of Quebec for many years. He was a man both of vision and of action. To him Canada owes the Grand Trunk Railway. As early as 1858 when he was head of a ministry in the Province of Canada (a ministry which included Galt as Minister of Finance, on the sole condition that the government would support the cause of federation) Cartier incorporated in the speech from the throne a proposal for a conference of the various colonies to discuss terms of union, and then went to England with Galt and John Rose to urge the idea upon the British government.

That failed but Cartier did not despair; he was one of the most active protagonists for union at the Quebec conference and it was undoubtedly due to his judgment and patriotism, that the French Canadians were persuaded to give their support to a plan which on the surface seemed to menace their institutions and their very identity, but which has turned out to be the most potent weapon of enabling their race to spread out all over the Dominion.

Galt is regarded as the father of the National policy, for as nearly as 1858 he proposed a tariff which much resembled that put into force by John A. Macdonald in 1879, and he did much in his later years to develop Western Canada, especially the coal resources of southern Alberta. Both were men of vision. Cartier did not live to see his dreams realized, but Galt witnessed the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion from sea to sea which he and Cartier, with their colleagues, had foreseen at the final conference in London in 1867.

TACTICAL SCHEME WINS HIGH PRAISE

Dragoons Officers Spent Profitable Outing at Rotary Camp.

Twenty officers of the 3rd Prince of Wales' Canadian Dragoons recently completed a tactical scheme, that won high praise from Captain C. C. Mann, General Staff Officer of Military District No. 3.

The scheme under the general direction of Lieut.-Colonel Claire H. Stuart, Officer Commanding the unit, and planned by Major Max Sloan, constituted two advance guard movements and a defensive scheme, undertaken during the week-end outing at the Rotary Camp.

The officers were split up into syndicates for the purpose of the manoeuvres as follows: Syndicate 1 (A Squadron): Major E. G. Johnston, Major F. G. Stinson, and Lieuts. R. R. Stewart, R. E. Rothwell and C. S. Hughes. Syndicate 2 (B Squadron): Major H. G. Mason, Capt. G. H. Cutmore, Lieut. A. F. Johnston, and Second Lieuts. H. W. Cardwell and R. McClelland. Syndicate 3 (C. Squadron): Major A. R. Macnab, Capt. E. F. Sheehy, Capt. D. A. Loomis, M.C., and Second Lieuts. J. D. Fanning, J. Rothwell and A. E. Chalmers.

At a dinner held during the course of the week-end, the officers and their wives entertained a number of guests.

The following toast list was honored: "The King", proposed by the junior subaltern, Second Lieut. McClelland. "The Staff", proposed by Major Sloan, and responded to by Capt. Mann. "The Regiment", proposed by Second Lieut. Chalmers, responded to by Colonel Stuart. "The Guests", proposed by Second Lieut. Chalmers, responded to by Lieut.-Colonel C. G. Winterbottom, M.C., D.C.M., Officer Commanding Peterborough Rangers and Major L. J. Stuart, Durham Regiment.

Popular Astronomy

THE SUN

BY H. W. L. MAHOOD

THE SUN.

The more that is written the more there is to write of the Sun. Its wonders hold the inquisitive. One knowing leads on to another. Some impressive discoveries have been related in this series. Of the photosphere we have written. On the reverse layer rests the chromosphere. Chromosphere might have been designated as the Color Sphere. The upper portion is in violent agitation. The agitation never quiets down. A sea tossed into foam by the fiercest storm but faintly gives an idea of the turbulence.

The heat of the chromosphere is so intense, the flames shot high look like the blood-red tongues of a Sun monster. Like the tongue of a reptile darted out to sting and then swiftly withdrawn, the flames flash up and out. The scarlet flame tip is moderated by the white light shining through it from the photosphere. Through a spectroscope the sight is terrifying. When a student at Toronto University, this writer saw hundreds of oil-filled barrels aflame one night. The buildings where stored was afire. The oil leaped and roared. But the sight of gases ten thousands of miles in depth aflame is thrilling and full of awe. In the middle-west of the United States this writer witnessed a vast prairie fire. The speed, the leaps, the roar, the black smoke left in the track and the scared earth flashed a picture never to be forgotten.

Our Earth is a house of magic. But the Sun is a thousand houses of such magic in one. For the majesty of Niagara to get into one it is imperative to companion with the falls days and days. He who comes and goes gets but little. Stay awhile and the reward will be perpetuum. With a spectroscope to aid, he who companions with the Sun will find himself at home with mystery and the unsearchable. Man was made for such. No man has ever been at home elsewhere. Too much our eyes are fastened upon the things that are near.

CHICAGO GRAIN

A broad buying movement in which houses with Eastern connections took the lead carried prices for all grains sharply higher yesterday.

Intimations were current that several million bushels of wheat would soon be shipped out of Chicago to the East, and there were also predictions of another surprising reduction of the United States wheat visible supply total next Monday. With stiff premiums obtainable for immediate delivery of wheat, it was pointed out the unusual situation prevailing permitted the purchase of wheat futures as far ahead as May at less than existing cash prices.

Wheat closed strong at virtually the day's top level, 2-2¾ cents over Tuesday's finish corn ¾-1¼ up oats, 1¼-1¾ advanced, and provisions showing a rise of 5 to 17 cents.

MONTREAL PRODUCE.

Eggs were again the feature of the Montreal Produce and Dairy Market yesterday, extending their advance in price 2c on each of the two top grades. Cheese and butter prices were inclined to be easier.

Graded shipments in car lots or less of eggs were 26c to 27c a dozen for A large, up 2c; 24c to 25c for A medium, up 2c; 19½c to 20c for B, up ½c, and 18½c for C. Receipts totalled 3,012 cases.

On the butter market fresh No. 1 in car lots or less brought 18¾c to 19¼c a pound, against 19¼c a pound. Small lots to retailers were 20c to 21c a pound for solids and 21c to 22c a pound for prints. Arrivals were 102 boxes.

Ontario colored cheese was unchanged in price, yesterday's quotation being 10¼c to to 10¼c a pound, while Quebec cheese was priced at 9¾c to 9¾c a pound as compared with 9¾c to 9¾c yesterday. Arrivals totalled 4,806 boxes.

New Quebec potatoes continued to command a price of 45c to 50c per 80-pound bag for No. 1 grade.

At the weekly auction held at the Board of Trade here, 763 boxes of Quebec butter was offered for sale, prices being 18¾c a pound for No. 1 and 18¼c for No. 2. Offerings of Quebec cheese totalled 821 boxes, and quotations were 9½c a pound for No. 1 white and 9¾c a pound for No. 1 colored.

WINNIPEG GRAIN

United States interest in Canadian wheat yesterday shot futures prices up for net gains of ⅝c to 1¼c on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange.

October wheat closed at 82¾c, December at 83¾c and May at 88c to 88¼c. United States mills were noticeable purchasers of Canadian red spring wheat and Canadian amber durum wheat was in good demand at premiums of more than 17c over October option.

Buying from this source offset lack of European demand and took care of reduced hedging pressure with ease. Lifting of hedges by Chicago houses, involving purchases of Winnipeg December wheat against sales at Chicago added to strength.

Pit trade was quite active. Export business, including the durums, worked to United States, was said to be in the neighborhood of 500,000 bushels.

PRICES SHADED IN THE LIQUORS

Canada Cement and Westons Common Pushed Higher in Good Volume.

GENERAL TONE SOFT.

TORONTO, Sept. 6 (CP).—Traders turned to a few specialties on the industrial section of the Toronto Exchange today, and some of these including Canada Cement Common and Westons Common, were pushed higher on good volume. Heavy trading occurred in some of the distillery shares at firm prices until in the last half hour when prices were shaded to show small net recessions. The general tone was slightly soft.

Some of the brewery stocks were unloaded in volume and Brewing Corporation Common worked back to 7 and closed only ¼-point above the low for a net loss of a half point. The preferred dropped 1¾ to 29 and Canada Bud lost a fraction.

Interlisted leaders eased down in the late trading in sympathy with New York, Nickel, Ford "A", C. P. R. and Smelters recording recessions.

BIRRELL MINES EXTEND WORK

Deisel Equipment to be Freighted Over New Road.

IN NORANDA AREA.

Important development work will be proceeded with immediately by Birrell Gold Mines Limited on their holdings located in Duprat township, seven and a half miles west of Noranda and five miles north of Aldermac and Arntfield Mines.

The cutting of a wagon road into the property has commenced already and a complete Diesel-driven mining plant will be freighted into the property before the freeze-up. Operations on the ground will be under the supervision of A. G. Horning, experienced mining engineer, and a shaft will be sunk to a depth of 250 feet, to be followed with lateral work on the 125-foot and 250-foot horizons.

Important discoveries of free gold in heavily mineralized rhyolite have been made and to date work has consisted of trenching and test-pitting over a length of 400 feet. Test-pitting gives evidence of the continuation of the sheer zone over a total length of 1,600 feet.

Nine diamond drill holes have been bored, at 40 feet to cut the shear at a vertical depth of 50 feet. This drilling was done early this year and before the extensive stripping which has since been carried out. All the holes showed silicified zone, but some were to shallow to show values, others showed high values however.

Development work to date has been along lines recommended by J. W. Morrison, mining engineer, and officials of the company consider work accomplished indicates that mine-making possibilities are excellent.

The property is excellently situated in a most favorable geological structure, and power lines and railway lines are within easy access.

D. J. Hirst, president of the company, has long experience in mining, while Dr. Moir, vice-president, has been identified executively with mining for many years.

BLAZE IN PRINTING SHOP BURNS ONE, COSTS $7,000

OTTAWA, Sept. 6 (CP)—One man suffered facial burns and 14 people were forced from their homes here when fire started in a printing shop and spread to adjacent apartments.

The first was said to have started when Hector Lavergne, employed in the printing shop, lit a cigarette lighter to find an electic switch. Several of the machines had been cleaned with gasoline a short time previously, and a bottle of the fluid caught fire and exploded, burning Levesque about the face.

The flames spread to the printing room and filled the apartments upstairs with smoke, driving the occupants to the street. With the exception of Levesque no other injuries were reported. Damage to the printing shop and contents was estimated at $7,000.

ONTARIO NOT INTENDING TO SELL T.N.O. RAILWAY

TORONTO, Sept. 6.—(CP)—The Ontario Government has no intention of selling the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today. Instead, he added, the government itself will run the road but in a different manner than heretofore.

Back in his office after a five-day holiday at his home near St. Thomas, the Premier declared briefly, in an answer to a question, that while railway amalgamation was purely a federal matter, "the railway problem could be settled by a proper trade policy."

"So long as you have a policy of trade restriction you have a falling off in tonnage," he said.

BODY PICKED UP BY FISHERMEN MAY BE SMITH'S

Found To-day on West Coast of Newfoundland—Not Identified.

ST. JOHN'S, Newfoundland, Sept. 6.—The broken, decomposed body of a drowned man, believed to be that of John Smith, the ill-fated Peterborough canoeist who lost his life in an attempt to paddle across the Gulf of St. Lawrence, was picked up to-day by fishermen at Long Point, Port Au Port, on the west coast of Newfoundland.

A union rubber suit with blue overalls underneath covered the body cast up by the waves. Ever since fishermen at Point La Fontaine discovered the empty canoe, "Pride of Peterborough," on August 20, they have been on the ookout along the shore for some trace of the adventurous paddler who set out from Gaspe on July 21.

Definite identification is expected as soon as a verification of the clothing Smith wore on his departure from Gaspe can be made and the final tragic chapter to an attempt to paddle across the Atlantic Ocean will be on record.

To-day's development in the tragedy came just a few hours after the finding of a tin containing the dairy, chart, pilot books and other small articles of the daring navigator floating outside the Twin Islands off St. John's Bay. The find was made by James Humber of Brig Bay.

Earl Smith, John's brother, this afternoon expressed doubt that it was his brother's body which was found to-day. The union rubber suit and blue overalls found on the body were not among equipment John had when he left this city, Earl said. He stated it was unlikely John could have bought such clothing before his departure from Gaspe as he had no money for such purchases to spare.

When John set out from Peterborough, principal item of clothing he carried were a leather windbreaker, a pair of cream-colored flannels and a pair of running shoes. He believed these to be sufficient, and, with a desire to avoid carrying more weight than necessary, planned to make them do on the long paddle.

Earl was unable to suggest any means of definitely establishing the identity of the body. Efforts were being made this afternoon to ascertain the clothing Smith wore when last seen off Gaspe.

HEAVY FROSTS STRIKE CROPS

Eastern Ontario Still Suffers From Drought—Winter Feed in Use.

CORN YIELD DOWN.

TORONTO, Sept. 6 (C.P.)—Heavy frosts and continued drought in many sections of central, western and northern Ontario were marked features of the weekly crop reports issued to-day by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Good grain yields and fair fruit crops, except for apples, were reported from eastern and southern Ontario, some 70 bushels-an-acre yields of oats being reported from Lanark County in the eastern division.

Tobacco losses of about 6,000,000 pounds as the result of a hail storm on Aug. 13 and severe frosts on Aug. 26 and 29 leave an anticipated crop of 14,000,000 pounds of flue-cured leaf for Norfolk County. Good grape and peach harvests are being marketed in Lincoln County in the southern section of the province.

Eastern Ontario is still suffering from drought, states the weekly report, Buckwheat, pastures and late sown silage corn were not expected to bring full crops. Millet and sorghum were not as promising as last year in Frontenac County, stock was losing weight, winter feeding having been in process for some time.

Temiskaming reported loss of potato tops, corn and other tender vegetables by severe frosts. Livestock was in "very good shape." Threshing is well under way throughout the region, the report states.

Province Will Bear Entire Highway Cost

TORONTO, Sept. 6.—(CP)—Entire cost of provincial highway construction will be borne by the Ontario government after the next session of the legislature, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today.

This action, he said would relieve the municipalities of the highway taxation levy and would free the counties from the present system whereby they are called upon to pay 20 percent of capital expenditure and 20 percent of maintenance cost on highways.

The new arrangement can be accomplished only by legislation, the premier declared, and thus must wait until the provincial legislature assembles.

LASH PROPOSED

was not more than five years, leaving unamended the criminal code which gave them the power to impose sentences up to 25 years.

F. D. Kerr's Objection.

F. D. Kerr, K.C., Peterborough, Ont., led the discussion against the committee's recommendation, which he described as evolved from panic and consternation. "There was no crime more offensive than kidnapping, but most of the abductors were young men, and the fixing of the penalty of life imprisonment would deter juries from doing their duty, he said.

The great feature of Canadian law, hitherto, had been that punishment had not been extreme, Mr. Kerr contended, and every citizen of any status in the community favored the law and realized that there was no maudlin sympathy for criminals and they should receive fair punishment. He was strongly opposed to making such a severe penalty as life imprisonment for kidnapping and would rather see Judges given power to impose whipping if a sentence was not more than 10 years.

Judge J. A. Jackson, Lethbridge, Alta., would make the limit for lashes a sentence of not more than five years, declaring that one of the greatest difficulties they had in getting juries to convict was the length of the sentence that might be imposed. If they were moderate in their actions they would have a much better administration of justice.

"The problem is not to be met by penalties," Mr. Roebuck declared. "They are all right and we should have lashes, but I don't believe they affect the real evil. There are only two ways of combatting kidnapping. One is to make the police force more effective and the other is to make it impossible or nearly so for kidnappers to be rewarded financially.

The Labatt Case.

"I was impressed at once with the lack of co-ordination between police forces. There was co-operation fortunately due to friendship between General Draper and General Williams, but the co-operation was not in existence until several hours after the crime was committed, and then there was no knowledge of each other's resources, no co-ordination at all between the detecting and prevention departments and it was just one wild scramble. The newspapermen were running in all directions and they were all talking to the newspapers.

I am fairly well satisfied that in the future the various forces will co-operate in establishing some central office, not putting one in command over the other, but rather establishing some central office where the resources of all forces may be tabulated and made available instantly, and probably put under one superintendent to direct all the forces that are required for the purpose in hand in case of crisis."

Heavy Yield Of Oats In Durham Townships

BOWMANVILLE, Sept. 6. (CP). Heavy grain crops are reported by farmers in West Durham as harvesting is completed. In Clarke township a large tract produced 90 bushels of oats to the acre, many reports of 80 bushel yields being returned. An average yield would be from 45 to 50 bushels to the acre.

Howard Pierce, of West Durham reported over 60 bushels of barley to the acre, topping the average yield of 40 bushels by a wide margin. A hot summer and opportune rain were said to account for the large crops.

CANADA'S PRIME MINISTER LANDS

"There is no reason to refuse" Russia's admission.

He did not amplify his remarks.

Premier Bennett said he had enjoyed a good voyage from Canada. He is proceeding to Paris, where he will remain until Saturday, during which time he will confer with Lucien Lamoureux, Minister of Commerce, on Franco-Canadian trade relations, and also with Louis Barthou, Foreign Minister.

The Canadian Prime Minister then goes to Geneva for the league sessions, remaining there for about three weeks before proceeding to England, when he will take a short holiday.

Mystifies Reporters

PARIS, Sept. 6.—Prime Minister R. B. Bennett of Canada left interviewers mystified about the attitude Canada will adopt towards the entry of Russia into the League of Nations, expected to be effected at the Assembly opening next week.

When he landed at Cherbourg earlier in the day after crossing the Atlantic, Premier Bennett cryptically said he could "See no reason to refuse" the entry of the Soviet. Arriving here this evening, a newspaper correspondent asked Mr. Bennett for an explanation.

"So you will vote in favor of the Soviet entry," he was asked.

"I did not say that," Mr. Bennett replied, and declined to speak further, leaving the impression that Canada will take no stand for or against.

The Canadian Prime Minister was met at the station by Col. Barre, head of the Commercial Department of the Canadian Legation in Paris, and a group of newspapermen. Mr. Bennett smilingly raised his hat in acknowledgment of greetings, and after facing a battery of photographers he drove off to the Legation.

Three Seats Vacant

GENEVA, Switzerland, Sept. 6.—(CP) — The annual contest for seats on the League of Nations Council was in full swing today on the eve of a meeting of the council and three days before the annual meeting of the League Assembly.

Three non-permanent seats are to be filled succeeding the places occupied by China, Spain and Panama.

A gentleman's agreement provides for continental distribution of the vacancies which makes the race for the vacant seats still more interesting and complicated.

Turkey, having moved her capital from European Istanbul to Asiatic Ankara, is seeking China's seat with the latter reported a candidate for re-election. Persia, too, was a candidate but was reported to be ready to withdraw in favor of Turkey while Greece also was backing the latter.

With Spain also seeking re-election the only seat not yet contested appeared to be Panama's which will be reserved for an American nation.

The council is composed of five permanent and nine non-permanent members.

May Oppose Russia

Meanwhile the Soviet Union's attitude towards a permanent seat was still a matter for conjecture. Her admission to membership is taken as a foregone conclusion, however, in spite of reports that Argentine might oppose her for a council seat. This would be possible because while League membership required only a two-thirds vote of the League Assembly, a seat on the Council must have the unanimous vote of the Council.

Argentine appeared to hold the balance of power in that connection and her single vote might prevent the Soviet Union from getting a council seat, it was suggested.

NATIONAL SOCIALIST REVOLUTION IS ENDED, STATES ADOLF HITLER

Has Fulfilled All Its Hopes Nazi Chief Tells Cheering Delegates.

NATION TO ADVANCE.

(By Louis P. Lochner, Associated Press Foreign Staff)

NURNBERG, Germany, Sept. 7 (AP)—Adolf Hitler, dictator of Germany, delared to-day:

"The National Socialist revolution is ended. It has fulfilled all its hopes."

This declaration he made at the annual convention of the Nazi party—the party which he founded.

The regimented delegates cheered and waved flags in honor of their leader as he proclaimed that nowhere else in the world could be found a political demonstration so completely expressing the dominant will and power of a nation.

Der Fuehrer said revolution which took on a permanent character resulted in anarchy and chaos and merely served the purposes of greedy politicians, and that an evolution had come to bring about better conditions.

"For this purpose," he said, "the Nazi leadership possesses all the power. Who dare deny that the National Socialist movement is the absolute power in the land?"

Now, with the revolution ended, he declared there was no better fitted body than the present Nazi party leadership for building up the state of the nation.

Knows What Is Wanted

The leadership, he declared, "knows what it wants and gets what it wants."

"It is entitled to that claim," he said, "because it carries a vindication which is but rarely recorded by history."

The German leader said the German way of life was fixed for the next 1,000 years, during which time there would be no further revolutions. He described the German regimes of the past 60 years as run by international freebooters and pothouse politicians. He declared later generations would exalt the accomplishments of the Nazi movement as the "German miracle."

Then he turned to the recent plebiscite, and stated:

"If foreigners imagine the 4,000,000 'No' voters constituted a dangerous opposition, they are privileged to smile. Our next attack will demolish the opposition."

Hitler reiterated that Germany, while insisting on her own right, wanted peace and friendship with others, saying he was convinced that it was not the peoples who wanted war, but only small cliques of mischief-makers and profiteers.

Referring to the recent "purge," Hitler said he was sure the people would not blame him for stamping out what had to be stamped out.

Religion

Next he took up the subject of religion, saying: "We have endeavored to reconcile the religious confessions with the new state. As far as the Protestants are concerned, we are determined to weld them all into one great evangelical Reich church.

"If Martin Luther were among us, he would pray not for different state churches, but for a Reich church."

Concerning the Roman Catholic church, he added: "Despite lapses on both sides, we shall arrive at a sincere and honorable understanding."

Having lengthily reviewed the Government's past measures in social welfare, Hitler concluded with a statement that the program was to consolidate the party organizations such as the Schutz Staffel, or picked guard, and the Storm Troops, into one solid bloc purified of all elements that were not heart and soul with them to win over all those who still held aloof.

Goebbels Fading

The multitudes here for the vast Nazi party convention are wondering to-day whether they are witnessing the fading of another star of Hitlerism—Dr. Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda.

The political fate of the energetic minister whose high-geared propaganda machine has repeatedly stirred the nation to frenzied enthusiasms, is the subject of excited speculation.

Until to-day Goebbels was thought to be sitting in the very centre of the Nazi inner circle. Yesterday Otto Diedrich, National press chief of the party, in an address to German and foreign newspaper men, made statements in sharp contrast to the views of Goebbels, who has often spoken contemptuously of the press. Diedrich said the Nazi party proposed to maintain the closest possible cooperation with the press.

"The pres sto-day is a barometer of world politics, without which it would be impossible to carry on political action," said Diedrich.

The Press

"Newspapers influence the decisions of all cabinets of the world far more than most persons are aware," Diedrich continued. "The importance of the press, in any case, is a fact which one must recognise and respect, whether one will or not."

Contributing to the belief that the Master of Propaganda is slipping in esteem of party leaders was the refusal of Hjalmar Schacht, Minister of Economics, to furnish more Reichsbank funds for Goebbels' propaganda campaign in foreign nations.

A rumor that Schacht demanded that Goebbels resign from the cabinet could not be confirmed. One party leader went so far as to suggest, "it may well be true."

Business session of the convention started at the huge Lutipolds Hall. Chancellor Hitler, who was acclaimed wildly as he arrived by motor yesterday, is the sole and unchallenged guiding spirit of the conclave.

Immediately after, the bride and groom were called to the front of the room, and a gaily decorated wagon was drawn in by two small children, Betty Atkinson and Stanley Morrow, and the following address was read by Miss Kathleen Morrow:

Dear Charlie and Alice:
The preacher declared it,
The papers have said it;
That a lad and a lassie
Have lately been wed.
The young couple united,
We see them with pride,
Are Charlie Darling the groom,
Alice Rutherford the bride.
This evening your true friends
Have all gathered here
The young and the old folks
Now wish you good cheer,
We trust that your future
Will always be bright,
Your pathways be joyous
Your troubles be light.
If troubles should come
Just whistle and sing
It will make the clouds vanish
And much brightness bring.
Alice, be to your husband
A kind loving wife,
And then he will love you
The rest of your life.
Charlie, be a good sport
Don't get cranky and pout,
Then your wife will be happy
When you are about.
Now on this occasion
We have brought you tonight
A few little gifts
Which we hope you will like.
Just accept these few gifts
As a slight token, we pray
Of the love and esteem
We shall bear you alway.

After the gifts were opened and the groom had spoken a few words of appreciation, the crowd joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows". After lunch the remainder of the evening was spent in games and music.

SALLY GRIEVES OVER LOSS OF RUSS, HER IDEAL

Miss Blane, Movie Star, Describes Charms of "Her First Boy Friend."

LOMBARD NEAR COLLAPSE

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 6. — From the wealth of his talent, his gental manner and his love of living, Russ Columbo, in his tragic death, has bequeathed a host of unforgettable memories to Sally Blane and Carole Lombard, prominent film actresses, who had felt the warmth of the crooner's understanding friendship.

To Miss Blane, who was in mourning in the seclusion of her west Los Angeles home, Russ was "an ideal."

Her First Boy Friend.

Said the 24-year-old girl who was with the star in his last moments Sunday night at the Good Samaritan Hospital:

"Russ was really my first boy friend, but I'm sure he never knew it.

"I think he was the first boy friend of a million girls who saw in him an ideal. I used to go to the Cocoanut Grove just to sit and stare at the boy whose soft voice made one dream. And then I met him. That was about six years ago.

"He was everything an ideal should be.

"Our introduction grew into a warm and understanding friendship that I have prized more than any other possession."

Planned Marriage.

To Miss Lombard, the star of radio and screen personified romance.

Friends of Russ and Miss Lombard said the couple planned to be married as soon as the singer was firmly launched on his screen career. With Miss Lombard last Friday night Russ had viewed "Wake Up and Dream," his first starring venture for Universal Picture Studio.

On Sunday night—the night of the tragedy—they were to have dined together with the actress' mother and brother in their Beverly Hills home.

Shortly after Russ died of the bullet wound in his head, Miss Lombard, accompanied by a nurse, left her Beverly Hills home for a secluded cabin in the mountains. She was said to be suffering from hysteria, following the shock of Russ' death.

His Loves Were Many.

On one occasion he sent Greta Garbo a $200 bouquet of flowers. The singer was attentive to Hannah Williams, Broadway's "cheerful little earful (now Mrs. Jack Dempsey) while she was in Reno to divorce Roger Wolff Kahn—so much so that Hannah was forced to deny that they planned to marry.

Columbo also wooed the beautiful Dorothy Dell, who met death in an automobile crash a few months ago, and Sally Blane.

Russ Columbo was born in San Francisco January 14, 1908. He was christened Ruggiero and was the youngest of twelve children. Educated in San Francisco, he left home in 1925 and toured the country as a concert violinist. Later he studied voice under Alexander Boyant with the intention of becoming an opera singer.

But the opera stage was not for Mr. Columbo. He joined Professor Moore's orchestra when it opened at the Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood several years ago. Later he joined Gus Arnheim's orchestra at the Cocoanut Grove and after that he organized his own orchestra and opened the Pyramid Cafe in Hollywood.

In 1930 at the Paramount Theatre in New York Mr. Columbo made his stage debut as a singer. He had been taken east by Con Conrad, song writer, to "put over" some of Conrad's songs. Mr. Columbo was a success. He ranked with Rudy Vallee and Bing Crosby as a crooner and was in great demand.

Recently he came to Hollywood and was signed on a long term contract by Universal Pictures. It was there he made his first and last starring picture—"Wake Up and Dream."

With Conrad, Columbo wrote several song hits, among them "You Call It Madness and I Call It Love." With Leo Robins he wrote "Time on My Hands" and "Just Another Romance."

Expenditures of China's central government for the current fiscal year ending July 1, 1935, are expected to exceed $350,000,000.

Accompanied by his father, four-year-old Werner Weng of Augsburg recently climbed the Zugspitze, Germany's highest mountain.

DISTRESSED TOWNS IN WALES AND ENGLAND MAY SOON BE ABANDONED

Statesman Considers Transferring Miners to Farming Communities

With oil replacing coal as the fuel used in Britain's ships which once provided markets for much of the coal mined in England and Wales, many of the largest mines are standing idle with no hope of resumption of work. Photo shows TOP, a siding filled with loaded cars at a colliery. With no where to sell the fuel many are standing loaded like this. BELOW a once busy pit-head now deserted. INSET, Hon. Walter Runciman, president of the British Board of Trade, who is considering possibility of transferring former miners to new parts of the country where they can obtain employment.

By THOMAS C. WATSON,
Central Press Canadian Correspondent.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Towns and villages in Britain's distressed areas may be abandoned should the British Cabinet decide to accept the recommendations of four commissioners who have just finished their investigations in these districts.

The four commissioners were appointed by the Government to investigate the ederelict areas in the north of England and the south of Wales. They make many drastic recommendations, which, if carried out, would change completely the face of England and Wales.

Investigations into the conditions in South Wales were carried out by Sir William Wyndham Portal, millionaire manufacturer of the paper on which the Bank of England notes are printed.

For the past five years much of South Wales has been derelict. The British navy using oil fuel instead of the famous South Wales coal started the distress in the district. Then the slump in shipping and the iron and coal industries further added to the unemployment in the area.

It is believed that the Portal recommendations include the complete abandonment of some of the old mines whose yield of late has made the working of the pits, except as means of providing employment, an uneconomic proposition.

Modernize Mines.

The mines which are producing a profitable yield are to be modernized and the coal oil plants and chemical works will be established at the pithead to transform the solid coal into liquid fuel. The new product will be conveyed to its ultimate destination by pipeline, thus saving much in freights, and also providing much in employment, but will also add to the dismay and chagrin of the railways.

Then there is talk of transferring Woolwich Arsenal to South Wales. This would be an obvious thing to do. Already London is too cluttered with factories, and in addition there would be a tactical advantage.

Woolwich Arsenal lies about ten miles east of London, and during the war was constantly threatened by air raid. If it were removed to South Wales, it would be in a less assailable position, and so it looks as though London will soon lose its arsenal.

The scheme does not end there, for over the disused hillside fir trees are to be planted which will provide future generations with timber for mining purposes. Hitherto all Britain's mining timber has been imported.

To Cumberland most of the miners will be transferred. They have discovered a valuable iron ore in this hitherto purely agricultural county. It produces an ore with a high content of metal of a character which also in the past has had to be imported.

Iron and steel furnaces will be transported from South Wales to Cumberland, so that they can be side by side with the ore quarries and mines.

Then in the neighboring hills of Cumberland surplus miners will be taught sheep rearing.

Shipping Slump.

The northeast coast of England where the distress has been acutest has presented the greatest problem to the researchers. The shipping slump of the past six years has transformed this once most prosperous corner of Britain into a barren wilderness of want and despair; it is estimated that nearly 90 per cent. of the male population are unemployed.

Captain Euan Wallace, M.P., was responsible for investigation in this district, and his recommendations should create hope and comfort to hundreds of thousands of jobless. Under Walter Runciman's (president of the Board of Trade) new scheme of rebuilding and reorganizing Britain's mercantile marine, fresh ships will be laid down on the shipyard stocks.

Of late a demand has arisen for British steel. Germany has had many of recent orders, but new exchange rates and import duties have made British steel a cheaper proposition, so much so that many contracts which Germany acquired some years ago have been sub-contracted to British manufacturers. This in particular applies to many of the Irish Free State contracts. British steel was boycotted in the Free State and the orders given to Germany, but the exchange went wild and Germany could only fulfill the contracts at a great loss, and found it more profitable to sub-let their contracts to Britain.

There is strong parliamentary opposition to the Prime Minister's delay. Some of the members for the areas are starting a campaign to have the work set in hand at once, and some of the budget surplus may be used for the purpose.

RIOTS CONTINUE SPREADING FAST

a study of the controversy, said arbitration involves agreement in advance that the board's decision will be final, and that the union is unwilling at the present time to enter into such an agreement. He said the strikers would "stay out until we get concessions from the mill owners."

The gigantic walkout increased steadily as thousands in the south, New England and Middle Atlantic states joined the picket lines.

Blood Spilled In South

Blood was spilled in Georgia and the Carolinas and sporadic disorders added to anxiety.

Two men were killed, one a mill guard, and more than a score injured in a gun battle between pickets and mill guards at Trion, Ga.

Throughout the south, clashes between officers and strikers were frequent, with fists and clubs swung freely, and women prominent in the conflicts.

In both of the Carolinas militia was on duty. Governor Ehringhaus of North Carolina ordered Adjutant General J. Van B. Metts to "use such troops as are necessary to preserve order". Troops had been at trouble centers in South Carolina since Monday.

Manufacturers hurled charges of "intimidation" as the spectacular "flying squadrons" of union members dashed from plant to plant, forcing shutdowns that added new thousands to the army of strikers.

In New England, where the turnout Tuesday was considerably less than had been expected by the union, the strike rolled on, closing the great textile center of Fall River and New Bedford tightly, with 40,000 idle, and extending steadily into the mills of the Blackstone Valley of Rhode Island.

Wider Drive Planned

The labor leaders planned a drive today on woollen mills, promising action at the huge companies in Lawrence and Lowell, Mass.

The shootings in the South enraged Gorman and his associates on the strike committee. Pale, and controlling his emotions with difficulty he gave reporters a hurriedly prepared statement which asserted:

"If officialdom wants to arouse all of the bitterness that can be aroused in the million men and women who make up the textile army, a continuance of today's shootings will do just that."

Committee Turns to Evidence U. S. Firms Did Big Business at Montevideo Parley.

STARTLING DISCLOSURES.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP).—The United States Senate Munitions Committee carried the assurance of President Roosevelt to-day that there will be no interference with its war profit study.

Backed by this guarantee, the committee turned to evidence that American concerns did a big business behind the scenes of the Pan-American conference last winter at Montevideo.

The committee has received word that certain government department and munitions manufacturers' representatives wanted to confer with it about keeping some evidence from open hearings. The group met in executive session, but the representatives did not appear.

Chairman Gerald Nye (R., N.D.), told reporters he would present evidence that American concerns co-operated with foreign munitions makers in disseminating armament propaganda in Europe.

Officials of the Electric Boat Company of New York testified in the third day of the hearing as to whether they were in the group of Americans who it has been testified took advantage of mutual suspicions of Latin-American countries' jealousies to work behind the curtains at the Montevideo peace meeting.

These officials had denied they sent representatives to any peace or disarmament conference.

After winding up with this company, which builds submarines, Senator Pope (D., Idaho) planned to switch the inquiry into the Briggs Ordinance and Engineering Company and the reported use of the American naval cruiser Raleigh as a "show case" in 1929 in an effort to sell Turkey a special type of anti-aircraft gun.

L. Y. Spear, vice president of the Electric Boat Company, told the committee that its hearings would drive all foreign munitions business from American to foreign concerns.

TWO EVICTIONS LEAVE FAMILIES

Mr. and Mrs. Lawford with the baby took refuge on blankets on the verandah of the house from which they had been evicted. The pile of household effects remained unmoved on the streets at noon today, and Mr. Lawford stated that no lodgings were in view.

Not On Relief.

"We are ready to help him on five minutes' notice if he will turn in the license to the car he owns," Relief Officer A. G. Metheral said this morning. "As long as he operates a car we cannot give him relief. He has had a notice to that effect in black and white for more than a month, but he says he is fighting for a principle."

Lawford was cut off relief on June 20 over the matter of the car. He claims that he is entitled to use the car while drawing relief on the grounds that he is lame and needs the vehicle in securing odd jobs. He asserts also that a number of other persons drawing relief in the city are operating cars. Relief Officer metheral states that Lawford has had no jobs requiring the use of a car.

It is understood that Lawford has at no time paid rent to the owner of the Hunter Street house. A tenant of the house, Charles Pritchard, took him and his family in during June last year. The Pritchards moved out, but Lawford remained despite the fact that he had made no legal arrangement with the owner. Some time ago the owner offered Lawford $25 cash and the services of movers if he would move out, but was refused.

Cannot Pay Rent.

Lawford admits that he has made no effort to secure other lodgings for his family. Without the benefit of relief rents, he has nothing to offer a landlord, he points out. He states he has earned only about four dollars during the past three months.

Mrs. Lawford reports that she was given a job at the Canada Packers Company yesterday morning, but found it necessary to return home and look after things when the bailiff began moving them out yesterday.

Slept In Horse Barns.

Following eviction of William McIlwaine, his wife and family from 249 Princess Street, it was learned from a member of the family that Mrs. McIlwaine spent the night with friends on Elm Street, while Mr. McIlwaine and four sons sought shelter in the horse barns at Exhibition Grounds.

Faced with a court order for their eviction and unable to find a landlord who would accept relief rent, the family was evicted by Sheriff F. J. A. Hall and Bailiff Samuel Pearson late yesterday afternoon. The household effects were removed under the Sheriff's instructions by Robert Reid Cartage, and were transferred to Hancock's auction rooms, to be held in storage pending settlement of the family in another house.

The court order was secured by the owner of the property, Mrs. J. A. Chouinard, resident of the United States, through the National Trust Company, on August 15 last. Execution of the order was delayed for various reasons.

Unemployed Picket.

On Friday afternoon last, anticipating the Sheriff's visit, a number of unemployed picketed the house, although Mr. McIlwaine denies that he requested such action.

With the week-end so near at hand, Sheriff Hall declined to execute the order on humanitarian principles. When he went to execute the order yesterday, he was accompanied by his bailiff and by a police sergeant. There was no disorder.

Mr. McIlwaine claims to have canvassed every possibility of renting a house in a diligent search for more than six weeks. There are many vacant houses renting at very low figures, but their owners refuse flatly to accept relief rent. Mr. McIlwaine has been out of work for some time, and claims he has no source of income beyond city relief.

Still On Relief.

Relief Officer Art Metheral stated that the family is still in receipt of relief and that relief rent will be paid when the family has secured another house.

"Another boy of the family refused to accept farm work," he stated.

One of the boys is working on the highway, Mr. Metheral remarked, "and we suggested that the boy should help his parents to pay an advance deposit for the rental of another house. Another boy of the family refused to accept farm work," he stated.

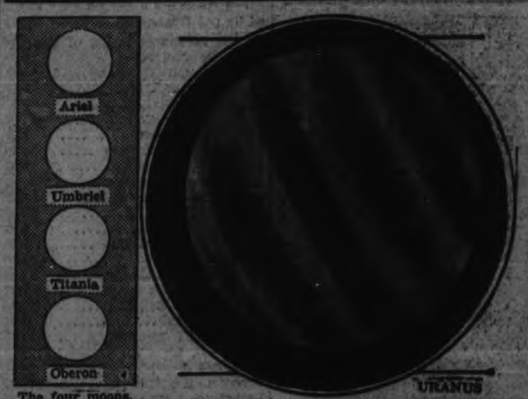
AN ACCIDENTAL PLANET

Uranus is Cold, Dark World Spinning Around Sun Far Out in Space



The four moons.

Uranus as compared with the earth.

By RICHARD BAYLIS,
Central Press Canadian.

Uranus might be called the accidental planet.

For, although it is a giant as compared with the earth, it was discovered accidentally in 1781 by Sir William Herschel. He happened to be looking through his telescope on an evening of that year with nothing else in mind than to find something interesting, and as a matter of fact he first thought that the object he had observed was a comet.

After several months of observation, however, it was established that what Herschel had discovered was a hitherto unknown world spinning on its own orbit around the sun far outside the orbit of the planet Saturn.

A Giant.

Uranus has a diameter of 31,000 miles, being approximately four times as large as the earth, and is 1,782,800,000 miles distant from the sun. As a consequence it receives very little light and heat from that body. Life, as we know it, would be impossible, for its temperature is believed to be somewhere in the neighborhood of 170 degrees centigrade. It receives less than 1-360 the amount of light received on earth from the sun and science can think of it as only a vast spinning world, far out in the outer cold and darkness of space.

Uranus, owing to its high reflecting power, is just visible to the naked eye under the best of atmospheric conditions. In the telescope, a powerful one, it appears as a greenish, slightly flattened disc. Some astronomers have observed faint bands or belts, although these have not always been drawn in the same direction. Its atmosphere is believed to be somewhat dense and its period of rotation somewhere near 10 hours.

The Four Moons.

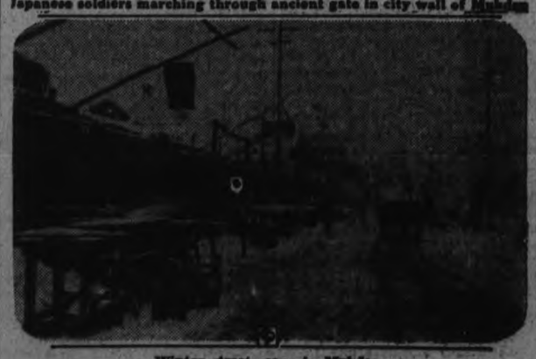
Uranus, of course, describes an immense orbit around the sun, taking 84 years to complete one revolution.

Four moons of Uranus have been discovered and still more are suspected. These moons are among the faintest objects known to us in the solar system and are, in order of distance from the planet, Ariel, Umbriel, Titania and Oberon. They appear as mere points of light in the largest of telescopes.

KNOW YOUR WORLD

Mukden, Manchoukuo

Japanese soldiers marching through ancient gate in city wall of Mukden



Winter street scene in Mukden.

(By Central Press Canadian)

Descriptive—Mukden, former capital of the Chinese province of Manchuria, is now second largest city in Manchukuo, a vast new state created two years ago by a proclamation of independence under Japanese auspices. The population is 421,727.

History—In Chinese history references are found to savage tribes in the vicinity of Mukden as early as the 11th century B.C. The city was long the seat of power of the Manchu (pure) dynasty, ancestor of which was the "miraculously conceived" Aisin Gioro Bukuli. The city suffered greatly during the Boxer uprising of 1900, and about it was fought in 1909 the culminating battle of Russo-Japanese war. On Feb. 18, 1932, as a result of Japanese military action, a Chinese northeastern executive council proclaimed at Mukden the independent nation of Manchukuo, an area in the northeast portion of China of approximately 500,000 square miles. Japanese now dominate the country through control of key positions in the government.

Commerce and Industry—There are great open-strip coal deposits near Mukden, where there are an estimated 1,200,000,000 tons of coal, covered by approximately 5,000,000,000 tons of oil shale. Four years ago a plant for reduction of oil shale was placed in operation. The city trades heavily in agricultural products and fur. As the converging point of trade routes, it is an important seat of commerce and industry.

Points of Interest—Mukden is surrounded by a brick wall, and is divided into nine parts, of which the central contains old imperial palace. In the vicinity are the tombs of the ancestors of the late Manchu dynasty of China.

LABATT KIDNAP GANG'S HIDEOUT

five. I did not suspect anything until a neighbor mentioned to me that he was suspicious. That was after the Thursday. Then I communicated with the authorities.

"They first came to my camp at Leonard Lake and told me they wished to hire a cottage, and that they wished to look over it first. They looked over the log cabin at Leonard Lake and then told me they were going to look over another cabin. They finally settled on the one fronting on Lake Muskoka." Frowse said suddenness of the men's departure, their failure to inform him and the coincidence of the Labatt case aroused suspicions of his neighbors and himself. Frowse told his suspicions to Provincial Constable Leonard Hardwick, stationed at Bracebridge, and that official informed his headquarters.

Further investigation was made by Chief Inspector John Millar and Inspector Boyd of the Provincial Police and Oliver Borland, fingerprint expert of the Toronto force.

Examination of the cottage is said to have revealed practically no fingerprints except a few found on a lamp chimney. On a point jutting into the lake were found ashes of a bonfire which had been made from underbrush cleared out of the woods. Neighboring cottagers believe the date of the big bonfire was while Labatt is believed to have been held at the camp.

Two other cottages are within sight of the supposed hideout. Within a quarter of a mile are three more houses.

The frame shack is about 30 by 14 feet. Partitions which do not reach to the ceiling divide two small bedrooms from the little sitting room. There are curtains to these chambers. Off the sitting room is a small kitchen with a wood-burning cook stove. The shack is plainly furnished.

Roebuck Quits Meeting

MONTREAL, Sept. 6 (CP)—Informed that police had discovered the place near Bracebridge, Ont., where John S. Labatt, London, Ont., brewer, had been held when he was kidnapped August 14, Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Attorney-General of Ontario, to-day said he would leave the Canadian Bar Association convention here immediately to return to Toronto. He added he had had no official communication personally, and knew nothing of the development.

Newspapermen intruded on a session of the Bar Association to show Mr. Roebuck Canadian Press despatches quoting high police authorities in Ontario that it had been established that Labatt was held at a cottage at Wildwood, 10 miles northwest of Bracebridge, 120 miles from Toronto.

The Attorney-General said he had no information, but that he would return to Toronto right away. He got up and left the meeting.

Reward To Be Offered

LONDON, Ont., Sept. 6 (CP)—"Watch tomorrow!"

Laconic advice to be prepared for developments in the Labatt kidnapping came to-day from a police official identified with the case, in the first police statement couched in anything but the most indefinite terms.

"Next developments in this case are likely to break near the border," said the informant, who confirmed reports a reward would likely be offered for information leading to apprehension of the gang which kidnapped John Labatt between Sarnia and London, August 14, and released him in suburban Toronto three days later.

"The reward announcement will probably be made in Toronto tomorrow," he said.

ROMANCE ENDS IN OREGON JAIL

Toronto Man Held for False Pretenses While Society Bride Waits in Hotel.

JUNIOR LEAGUE AFFAIR.

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 6 (AP)—A romance said to have begun at the International Convention of the Junior League in Toronto recently was ended to-day with a former president of the Portland Junior League secluded in a hotel and her husband in jail.

Maynard O. Froemke, Toronto, who has represented himself here as an assistant manager of the Bank of Toronto, was the husband, held in lieu of $2,000 bail on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

"It's all a mistake," he said. "I am a victim of circumstances beyond my control."

Word received here from Toronto said the Bank of Toronto denied Froemke had any connection with the institution.

His wife, the former Elizabeth Hailey, Portland society girl whom he married in Vancouver, Wash., Monday, could not be reached for a statement on the charge made by local merchants and hotel men that Froemke passed some $300 worth of no-fund cheques here in the past two weeks.

Froemke told reporters he had met Miss Hailey at the Toronto convention, but friends who accompanied her there said they had not seen or heard of him until he arrived in Portland a few days ago.

Well dressed and presenting recommendations to civic and society leaders, Froemke is said to have been entertained at some of the city's most pretentious home since he arrived here August 29. He said he was a graduate of Princeton University in the class of 1921.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING IDEA IS RECOGNIZED IN ENGLAND

British Publisher's Statement Comes as Surprise to Roosevelt.

RESULT OF STRIKE

HYDE PARK, N.Y., Sept. 6.—(AP).—President Roosevelt in a unique questioning of Lord Iliffee, British publisher, at yesterday's regular newspaper conference was informed that England recognizes the principle of collective bargaining as set forth in the much discussed Article 7A of the United States National Recovery Act.

In the midst of a discussion of the textile strike with the newspapermen, the President, with a smile, turned to the distinguished visiting journalist and recalled a recent editorial in the London Times calling attention that Great Britain long had recognized the principles of collective bargaining by labor and expressing surprise at the concern it has created in America.

"That is quite so," responded the slightly surprised Lord Iliffee. "Labor has responsible union systems in England. Ever since the general strike in 1926, the labor unions have recognized their responsibilities. Before that they played their own hands. They feel now they have got to consider the general good.

"I think the same thing will apply in the United States. As soon as unions first feel power they do not always know how to use it. I am sure it will work out the same here as it has in England."

The President listened intently and agreed the interview could be published if it was all right with Lord Iliffee. The publisher graciously agreed.

EXPECT REACTION ON BEER PARLORS

Kingston Presbytery Sees Intemperance Increasing.

KINGSTON, Sept. 6—At a meeting of the Kingston Presbytery of the United Church held in the United Church at Newboro on Tuesday, the following report of the committee on Evangelism and Social Service presented by Rev. Dr. J. M. Shaw, of Kingston, convenor of the committee, was endorsed:

"Regarding the condition of the temperance cause under the sale of beer and wine, we are convinced that intemperance is increasing, and it is our conviction that the results are already such that as they continue and increase there is bound to arise a revulsion of public opinion, not only against the new beverage rooms but against the whole traffic in intoxicating liquor. We believe the traffic and its promoters have over-reached themselves in this latest move to promote their own trade, regardless of the injury to the people of the province.

"In the mean time it seems best to let the traffic have its fling for a short time, and that while we wait to be further assured of its bad work, we urge all ministers to continue to give strong educational addresses on the subject.

Canadian Girls Aspire To Commercial Flying Careers

Never say that flying in Canada is a dead issue as far as the fair sex is concerned. At a flying field near Toronto there are ten determined young ladies learning to fly. They are not out after records nor glory. They are intent on making flying their business. Each of the ten aspires to a transport license and hopes to be among those who will fly Canada's air mail when it opens up again, if ever. In the layout, above, six of ten charming young ladies are shown. Flight Lieutenant G. R. Spadbrow is the lucky instructor. He is shown, CENTRE, with Hazel Osh. UPPER LEFT is Frances Beebe, only 20 years of age; UPPER RIGHT, Blanche Lungdren. BOTTOM ROW, from LEFT to RIGHT, Marjorie Youngs, Dorothy and Marie Roche.

REMODEL GRAND BEVERAGE ROOM

Eaton Hotel Department is Transforming in Old English Tavern Style.

ENTERPRISING MANAGER.

Temporary transfer of the beverage room license of the Grand Hotel to the main dining room, was this morning granted by the Chief Superintendent of Permits, pending alterations now in progress.

The atmosphere of old world charm is to be the distinctive feature of the new beverage room. Started to-day at an approximate cost of $4,000, remodelling of the room is in the hands of the T. Eaton Company's Hotel Department, Toronto. When finished the beverage room will conform architecturally to the traditional design of an old English tavern complete with raftered ceiling, timbered walls, leaded glass casement, oaken doors, and tiled flooring.

A large period fireplace, electric light fixtures and furniture are to provide the real notes of originality. While most of the seats and the tables are to be made of knotty spruce, "eighths" kegs upholstered in red leather will provide seats at two large tables situated near the fireplace and under the leaded windows facing George street.

Ends of "eighths" kegs set into the walls will provide the picturesque fixtures for the electric lights, the light bulbs being suspended from the keg spigots.

A complete new refrigeration system for the keeping of beer and ale stocks, whether in cask or bottle, at even temperatures, are also being installed by Frigidaire and Kevinator.

Otto L. Dalgleish, formerly of London, acquired ownership of the "Grand" a little over two years ago, and has since put over $7,000 into improvements. Recent changes have included the remodelling of the dining room and rotunda, installation of Marshall springs and mattresses for each of the 36 beds, and the complete exterior redecoration of the building inclusive of new signs and awnings.

Local labor, Mr. Dalgleish stated, is being employed to do stone work, carpentering, painting and general laboring.

DELEGATES OF FOUR NATIONS CELEBRATE AT FORT NIAGRA

Dramatic Commemoration of Two Centuries of Warfare and Century of Peace.

BUILDINGS RENEWED

By CAMPBELL CARROLL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

YOUNGSTOWN, N.Y., Sept. 6.—(CP).—Dramatic commemoration of two centuries of warfare and more than one century of peace on the 4,000 miles of Canadian-United States frontier was staged yesterday on the reconstructed site of old Fort Niagara, near here. The celebrations were held in the presence of governmental, military and ecclesiastical dignitaries from Great Britain, France and the United States.

Goodwill delegates of France and Great Britain to the Jacques Cartier quarter-centenary celebrations touched American soil when the vessel that took them across Lake Ontario from Toronto docked here.

The old fort, reconstructed at a cost of $500,000 was first established by Cavalier de Lasalle in 1678 and it soon became, because of its strategic situation at the confluence of the Niagara River and Lake Ontario, the military, commercial, political and religious key to exploration and settlement of the entire West.

Lasalle's Deeds Recalled

Speeches recalling the deeds of Lasalle who had been attracted to Canada by one of his borthers, a missionary, were delivered by leading personalities from France, Great Britain and Canada. Pierre-Etienne Flandin, French Minister of Public Works and leaders of the French National Mission to the Cartier celebrations in Canada, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Rogers Keyes, Hon. L. A. David, Quebec provincial secretary; Bishop William Turner of Buffalo; Lieut.-Governor William Bray of York; Rev. Canon H. J. Cody, president of the University of Toronto, and Joseph E. Montague, vice-president of the old Fort Niagara Association.

A banquet was tendered the voyagers at Niagara Falls, N.Y., after which they were guests at a pageant of the "Four Nations."

Out Of Exile

"SERVICE SHOES with NUGGET

It adds not only extra smartness, but extra wear as well. "Nugget" keeps leather soft, pliable, serviceable months longer than if they are neglected and unshined.

NUGGET SHOE POLISH

There's a "NUGGET" shade for every shoe made
